A tasteful appearance in dress often comes as much from good laundering as from the quality of the clothing. Good laundering requires good soap and Ivory Soap is the best.

The fading of delicate shades is frequently the ruination of an expensive garment. Any color that will stand the free application of water can be washed with Ivory Soap.

Daily Lessons for Lent.

Striving for the Mastery

By the Rev. WYLLYS REDE, D.D.,

Crown, 8vo, $1.00.

First Week in Lent. The Mastery over Self.
Second Week. The Mastery over Temptation.
Third Week. The Mastery over the World.
Fourth Week. The Mastery over Adversity.
Fifth Week. The Mastery over Sin.
Sixth Week. The Mastery over Suffering.
Holy Week. The Mastery over Death.

This book is thoroughly worked out along these lines. Following this systematic train of thought, it contains a ten-minute address or reading for each of the forty days of Lent. The clergy will find these addresses well suited for reading at the daily services in Church, and people who cannot attend such services will find them equally adapted for morning or evening reading and meditation at home.

Notes of the World's Progress

THE BOARD OF INQUIRY APPOINTED to investigate the conduct of the war has completed its work, and the results are embodied in a document estimated to contain 65,000 words. Every branch of the service has been impartially looked into, and charges have been investigated. The report is not a whitewash, but no specific responsibility is brought to the door of any department or official. In the majority of cases, conditions which called forth censure are attributed to red-tape and cumbersome army regulations rather than incompetence or neglect. If soldiers lacked for food, the report infers it was because of congestion in the commissary department; if transports were improperly equipped, it was due to overtaxed energies of the quartermasters' department. In fact, all causes for just or unjust complaint may be attributed to the fact that departmental machinery with a capacity for caring for 20,000 men could not be expanded with the same rapidity as marked the increase of the army to 200,000. Recommendations are made which it is believed would prevent a repetition of friction and congestion should an emergency arise. Suggestions are offered that the President have the power of appointing his Commanding General as well as Secretary of War, also that physically capable retired officers be called into service in preference to filling important posts with patriotic, though perhaps, less competent, civilians. In summing up the results of the war, the commission gives the official figures of 23 officers and 250 men killed, and 113 officers and 1,464 men wounded in the field, while the deaths from all causes from May 1st, to Sept. 30th, a period of five months, were 107 officers and 2,803 men. The total strength of the army was 274,717, so that the death rate is only a fraction over 1 per cent.

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD HAS ARRIVED in this country from China, whither he has been as the representative of British commercial bodies, to report on the best means of protecting and extending British interests in the Chinese Empire. He is outspoken in advocating an alliance between Great Britain, the United States, Germany, and Japan to maintain the integrity of the Chinese Empire and keep it open to the commerce of the world. Discussing the project, he says: "It means simply that instead of 'spheres of influence,' which means the breaking up of the Chinese Empire, that England, America, Germany, and Japan shall by agreement maintain free and equal commercial relations for all in the Orient. It includes the reorganization of the Chinese Army, officered both as to commissioned and non-commissioned officers by Europeans; that the Chinese Empire may be properly policed and life and property made safe. As it is now, mobs and rebellions are liable at any time to destroy both lives and property, as actually happened not long ago, when about 6,000,000 taels worth of property belonging to the French mission in Western China, was destroyed."

WHILE IT IS NOT LIKELY ANY PROPOSITION which would make the United States a prominent factor in the Chinese question would be received with marked favor, yet the time has fully arrived when a solution must be found. Affairs in China at the present time have reached a stage which gives little assurance for the safety of foreign interests. Fostered by an intense anti foreign spirit, the rebellion grows, rather than diminishes, and the authorities are confessedly powerless to quench it. It is even a question as to whether or not the Empress Dowager does not favor measures to repress efforts to lift the people from their ignorance and idolatry. Schools are closed and newspapers suppressed, with a spirit which denotes desire to antagonize modernization. It will eventually fall to civilized powers to accomplish by force that which cannot be brought about by educational effort. Whether this can ultimately be brought about without dismemberment of the Empire, is problematical. At present, the question of territorial acquisition seems to be the chief consideration on the part of European nations.

ADVICES RECEIVED BY A MINE OWNER in Siberia convey information of the discovery of what it is believed are the remains of the balloon in which Andree and his companions embarked on a voyage to the North Pole. Near the mass of cloth and cordage, were found the bodies of three men. Steps are being taken to verify the truth. In July, 1897, this voyage was begun, the expense being borne by the King of Sweden and three friends. Since the balloon left Spitzbergen, nothing authentic has been learned, save one message brought by carrier pigeon, giving the latitude and longitude of the party. Search for the explorers proved fruitless. The unfortunate fate of the expedition was freely predicted at the time of its inception. The theory of Andree and his companions was that prevailing winds would carry the balloon in the desired direction. A crude steering apparatus was relied upon for assistance. Provisions sufficient to last many months were carried, and every known appliance for safety or comfort was provided. In spite of the uncertain fate of the exploring party, relatives are inclined to discredit the Siberian story, on the ground that if discoveries had been made, full particulars would have been reported by the Siberian police.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT HAS ANNOUNCED its decision not to recognize the claim of the Austro-Hungarian government for indemnity on account of the death of Hungarian strikers near Hazelton, Pa., in 1897, at the hands of a sheriff's posse. The claim has been pending many months, and the decision is of importance as establishing a principle. The United States has in several instances paid indemnity for the death of foreign subjects, but the claim in question presented a different phase. It could not be shown that the deceased subjects were not participants in a riotous demonstration, were not violating the laws of this country, and defying authority. The government holds that if foreign subjects obey the law they will be protected, but if they defy the law, then, in common with all others who participate in such acts of lawlessness, they must accept the consequences they invite. It is held that the Latimer strikers were disturbers of the peace and violators of the law, rapidly drifting into a state of petty war. They had knowledge of the official position and authority of the sheriff, and by refusing to disperse, challenged the force of the State, and placed themselves without the protecting pale of the law.

IN DEBATING ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY to the Queen's speech at the opening of Parliament, Sir Ellis Ashmead Bartlett moved an amendment asking the government to take early and effective measures to assist China to maintain her territorial independence, and to enforce the policy set forth in the resolution of the House of Commons of March 1, 1898. He argued that it was the only possible policy for Great Britain. The speaker further asserted that the policy of spheres of influence meant the partition of China, and it was doubtful, in his opinion, if Great Britain would have the support of the United States in a policy of partition, whereas he believed Great Britain was assured of the support of the United States if she went in for the effective policy of maintaining China's integrity. Subsequently the amendment was withdrawn. The attitude of Great Britain toward China was clearly shown in a statement March 1, 1898, by Mr. Curzon, then Parliamentary Secretary of the Foreign Office: "British interests in China are paramount but not exclusive. The British nation would not be justified in regarding legitimate competitors with jealousy, but ought rather to use all efforts to keep in an age of competition what was won in an age of monopoly. We can foresee that China will be confronted by greater dangers in the future than she has been in the past. Great Britain's policy was to prevent the disruption and to oppose the alienation of Chinese territory; and it is not likely that Great Britain will regard with satisfaction the attempts of others in that direction."

A BOARD OF INQUIRY WILL INVESTIGATE charges that rations furnished the army were unfit for food. Allegations of General Miles will be thoroughly looked into, and both sides will be given an impartial hearing. Owing to the publicity given the matter, both during and subsequent to the war, great interest attaches to this investigation. Sensational press dispatches, many of which have been taken back or contradicted next day, have created strong feeling, and the real truth will be welcomed. Vast commercial interests are arrayed solidly against the Commanding General, but the latter claims to be in possession of evidence to substantiate his statements. Should the investigation show that the charges of General Miles are unfounded, a court-martial is likely to follow. Action in the case of General Eagan is thought by many to be mild punishment. Although suspended from active duty until the time for permanent retirement, balm is applied by the payment in full of salary during the period of suspension.

THE LITERARY WEST SUFFERED AN irreparable loss Sunday in the total destruction by fire of the publishing house of A. C. McClurg & Co. The "McClurg" corner, while not one of the oldest landmarks, was one of the large structures erected soon after the great fire of 1871, and now fast disappearing. Although business will be continued, and a new building probably erected on the old site, the old building with its associations is a memory. Bibliophiles all over the country will feel a sense of personal loss in the destruction of the "Saints and Sinners corner," which was given up to rare literary treasures, and a favorite rendezvous of literary men. Rare old folios, exquisite bindings, and scores of autograph copies of various works, de luxe editions, and hundreds of first editions bearing date of almost every year of the present century, were destroyed. In this collection nearly every notable name in English literature was represented. The history of the firm of A. C. McClurg & Co is the history of the book business in Chicago and the West. Twice previously the business was destroyed by fire, but survived, stronger than before.

The Church Abroad

Bishopric for Egypt

It is proposed to raise the sum of £20,000 for the purpose of providing the stipend and expenses of a bishop who shall undertake the oversight of the whole work of the Church of England in Egypt and the Soudan. At present this region is included in the jurisdiction assigned to the Anglican Bishop in Jerusalem; and the bishopric contemplated must, until circumstances allow of a division in that jurisdiction, be in the relation of assistance to him. The country from Fashoda southward is now open to the missionary; and, while work there is developing, will, with that already going on in Egypt, require the oversight of its own bishop.

Death of the Bishop of St. Helena

The sudden death of the Rt. Rev. Thomas Earle Welby removes a colonial prelate consecrated as long ago as 1862, and therefore one of the senior bishops in the English Church. His diocese was one of the very smallest the Church knows, and had many associations of interest. Bishop Welby, like the Archbishop of York, began life in the army; he afterwards worked in Canada, England, and South Africa before being chosen to succeed Bishop P. C. Claughton in the see of St. Helena.

The Bishop of Osaka

The Rev. Hugh James Foss, M.A., late of Kobe, Japan, has, consequent upon the translation of Bishop Awdry to the see of South Tokyo, been appointed to the bishopric of Osaka, Japan. Mr. Foss was educated at Cambridge, and had a distinguished university career. He was ordained in 1872, and in that year became curate at St. Barnabas', Liverpool, 1872-74. Then he held a curacy at St. Michael's, Chester, 1874-'76, and in the last-named year took up missionary work at St. Michael's, Kobe, in the diocese of Osaka. The Bishop-elect was consecrated at Westminster Abbey on Feb. 2d.

A New African Bishop

The diocese of Eastern Equatorial Africa, which has been under the charge of Bishop Tucker, has now been formally divided. One of the two new dioceses will comprise Uganda proper, with its provinces, to be known as the diocese of Uganda; the other includes the whole of the British East African Protectorate south of the equator, and certain portions of German East Africa in which there are C. M. S. stations, and will be known as the diocese of Mombasa. Bishop Tucker will be Bishop of Uganda, and the Rev. William George Peel has been chosen as Bishop of Mombasa. Mr. Peel was born in India, and was ordained by the Bishop of London in 1879. He was curate of Trowbridge, 1879-'80; Rugby Fox master of C. M. S., Noble College, 1880-'87; acting secretary C. M. S. for the diocese of Madras, 1888-'89; and he has been secretary of the C. M. S. for the city and diocese of Bombay since 1892. The division of the diocese has been made in consequence of the vastness of the area and great increase of work.

Conference of Church Clubs

The growth of Church Clubs, both in numbers and importance, keeps pace with that of the Church in the United States. The seventh annual conference of their representatives was held in Chicago on the 9th inst. Of the 22 clubs now in active life, one-half were ably represented. The day was ushered in by a celebration of the Eucharist, at 9 A.M., in Grace church, the Bishop of Kentucky being celebrant. At 10:15 A.M., the delegates assembled in the Church Club rooms, and proceeded to the convention hall on the 17th floor. The opening prayers were said by the Rev. A. L. Williams. On the calling of the roll, and subsequent report of the committee on credentials, it was found that several States and cities of the Union were represented, from Maine in the extreme East to Minnesota in the West, and from Illinois in the North to Louisiana in the South.

After the appointment of a committee on nominations, the conference heard an address by Mr. John H. Cole, president of the New York Church Club, and president of this year's conference. This was followed by an address from Mr. F. J. McMasters, of St. Louis, entitled, "The attitude of the Church towards other Christian bodies, from the standpoint of the layman." As these addresses will shortly appear in pamphlet form, for general distribution, we shall not attempt to give even an epitome, making exception in favor of the next paper, which dealt largely in facts intimately connected with recent events and present conditions.

Mr. T. H. Peyton, of West Virginia, enlisted in the engineer corps in order to further Brotherhood interests, no less than to serve his country as a true soldier. His valuable paper on "The work of the Church in the armies of the United States," opened with the comparison that an army was modelled after the Church Militant; the dictum of the Commander-in-chief is final; there are grades of commissioned officers in both, the Head determines the rights and functions of the various ranks; their commission is accompanied by authority, irrespective of ability and fitness; there is a like esprit de corps and personality; for in both armies the combatant is called upon to "cast aside every weight" after admission to the ranks, whether by being mustered-in, or by Baptism. This accounts for the strong hold which the Church has upon soldiers and sailors. Conversely large numbers of our military and naval heroes are Churchmen—Washington, Lee, and Gridley in the past; Dewey and Hobson in the navy to day; Wheeler, Roosevelt, and Lee, in the army. "Soldiers," said the writer, "being thoroughly imbued with the idea of discipline and authority, can have very little respect for any one claiming to represent the King of kings who can show neither warrant nor commission; who, perhaps, has not even been admitted to the King's army by a constituted authority thereof." The trained soldier is not to be led by a "bushwacker or guerilla," though aware of his zeal, and the Roman Church, corrupted and enfeebled, cannot "possibly appeal to an army of Anglo-Saxons with the power with which the Anglican Catholic Church can."

The writer had visited Camp Wikoff, at Montauk Point, finding there only two Church chaplains; one was called away, leaving one in hospital. There was a Brotherhood tent, and Father Field, Canon Bryan, and others, did what they could. He visited the camp in October and in December, but found no regular chaplain, only volunteer Roman Catholic priests. There was thus scarcely any religious influence to counteract the terrible temptations of the canteen, and even worse. Spiritual desolation prevailed, and "famine of the hearing of the Word of God." On enlisting in the 2nd Regiment of Volunteer Engineers, he found many Church boys among the 1,200 nominal Christians. The chaplain was a Mormon Elder! Again, in another regiment he found 150 Churchmen. Their chaplain was a Methodist, who tries to do his duty; still these 150 young men were cut off for eight months from the ministrations of their own Church, and in their own country, and all because they had volunteered to serve that country. In many regiments, no religious service was held for months. The majority of the recruits were of the age of 23. Small wonder that, so oppressed and cut off, they yielded in despair to the temptations besetting them, for there is nothing to uplift. "It is terrible. It is a disgrace to a Christian nation." Soldiers are not necessarily irreligious. On the contrary, the best fighters are religious men. In the first three weeks of December we had organized fifteen chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in as many regiments. The Brotherhood is an ideal institution for the soldier. But the priest must be sent to press home this work of the layman. An effort is being made by the Brotherhood to support three priests in the army, at as many points, Chicago, Kansas City, and St. Louis. St. George's church, New York, offers one layman for duty at Manila. The opportunity is great, and just as Christianity was propagated by the faithful in the old Roman armies that went out to conquer the world, so it should be with ours; for men so taught on true Christian lines, will evangelize the dark places on return to their own land, and also those in the lands of their foreign service. A great door is opened for the Church. "Go, make disciples," is the direct command addressed to us Churchmen. Amid the booming of guns we know there are millions of dying souls. We can, and we ought, to deny ourselves, if we would escape the condemnation. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to these My brethren, ye did it not to Me." In concluding, the writer made an eloquent appeal to all present, to agitate this subject in their several dioceses, receiving, as he sat down, well-merited praise for his admirable presentation of the cause so pointedly advocated.

Mr. J. C. Stirling reminded the audience that Mr. Jas. C. Faure, of New York, was the treasurer, to whom all contributions for Brotherhood work in Manila should be sent.

Mr. J. L. Houghteling, in speaking on the subject, referred to the growing discontent of men with themselves which marked the present age. He called Mr. Peyton's tour a "practical, direct business," and insisted that the Board of Missions should send a priest to every camp. All the Chicago chapters of the Brotherhood are working for the fund, and have already sent on $400.

At this point a recess was taken for luncheon in the adjoining Masonic banquet hall; Mr. McReynolds, president of the Chicago Church Club, inviting all the clergy and laymen present to be guests of the club. About 75 accepted the invitation, the Bishops of Chicago and Kentucky being near the head of the table.

At the afternoon session Mr. Eugene C. Denton, president of the Rochester Club, read his paper on "The American parish." Referring at the outset to the true national character of the Church as brought out at the late General Convention, with its increased growth of missionary interest, he claimed that while we know the meaning of the word diocese and of diocesan missions, the idea of a parish is vague, there are no parochial bounds, the Church is therefore too congregational, and stagnation often comes upon a so-called successful parish. But seeing how many do not attend services the Church should not slacken till it reaches all. Grace church, New York, is an illustration of the fact that the use of churches is getting to be better understood, in its multiplication of services, and in its parish house becoming the home of many activities, and in its sympathy with the young. The "down town" church is needed, and can be retained if endowed. Old Trinity, Grace, and other such churches, influence the passing crowd. The mid-day services are helpful. It is a sad spectacle that weak contiguous parishes cannot obliterate their unseemly rivalry by amalgamating. If lack of means be assigned as a cause of failure, it is because men are not sufficiently impressed with the truth that membership in Christ's kingdom means giving and doing, not receiving. The Church is strong in cities, and weak elsewhere, because the best blood is flowing from the country. This Church will be the American Church the more she comes in contact with the people; and every farmer should be visited by the traveling missionary. The city should see to this, for our parochialism is becoming a by-word. We of the Church Club can do much towards bettering this condition of things.

The last paper on the subject of "Christian education; the Church's responsibility and opportunity," was by Mr. Lawton Wiggins, vice-chancellor of the University of the South. No mere abstract will give an adequate idea of this admirable presentation of a subject for which the great Church college at Sewanee, Tenn., stands as a conspicuous object lesson.

The committee on nominations having reported, the conference elected Mr. E. T. Warner, of Wilmington, Del., as president of the next conference to be held at New Orleans. Major Taylor E. Brown, of Chicago, was re-elected to the secretaryship. After a resolution on the death of the Primate of the American Church, Bishop Williams, of Connecticut; and one adjudging it inexpedient to change the existing scheme of organization, the conference adjourned.

At 6 P. M., in the Grand Pacific Hotel, the Chicago Church Club gave a reception, followed by a banquet to the distinguished visitors. Over 100, including many of the clergy, sat down to dinner, an orchestra in the corridor discoursing music. Justice having been done to the viands, the chairman, Mr. Geo. McReynolds, president of the local club, announced that Mr. Arthur Ryerson would take charge of the meeting, and introduce the several speakers. Bishop Dudley, of Kentucky, had been announced on the programme as the speaker of the evening. He referred forcibly, and yet humorously, to the roominess of this Church of ours with its freedom of opinion and practice, which was nevertheless devoid of license because regulated by law. As a Churchman he could stand on the general Catholic principles enunciated in the Creed, and so was not hedged in, confused, and hampered by the peculiarities of doctrine and practice that fettered severally the various religious bodies that split up Christendom. He closed a speech that was carefully listened to with an eloquent eulogium of the then unbaptized Presiding Bishop whose more than four-score years of life had terminated on Tuesday at Middletown, Conn., and with a touching appeal for the continued support by his hearers of his brother of Chicago.

Having been introduced by Mr. Ryerson as a member of the Chicago Church Club, it was as such that Bishop McLaren responded, alluding to the happy commingling of clergy and laity which the incorporation of this club on Dec. 20th, 1890, had effected; a fraternity based upon love. So too, the Bishop was now better known, for through the medium of the club, the chief pastor and his laity were brought nearer to each other. The club idea was almost divine, for it established a social equality. "We are an evidence of what a Church Club can do for a diocese. No other religious body is more homogeneous, and therefore none is making more progress. Others recognize this, and we can see spread out to the mental vision a magnificent panorama of coming prosperity."

Mr. John H. Cole was introduced as the originator and founder of these conferences, of the preceding six of which he had been the efficient secretary, and of this last one, president. He spoke especially on the subject of individual effort towards furthering any Church work effectively. His successor in the presidency, Mr. E. T. Warner, excused himself from lengthy remark on the ground of inexperience.

The Rev. Dr. Morrison was the next speaker, and he confined himself to the single thought that the Church is a household and a fellowship; and it is so because God has therein called us. This Church is able to adapt herself to the varying conditions of mankind in various ages, and under differing circumstances. Looking at her history in the different centuries, we cannot help observing that with all her diversities of ministrations, she is still one in her faith.

The last speaker, Mr. Denton, warned his hearers against the danger of imagining that the supposed peculiarities of their respective parishes could be a decent excuse for not applying true principles in furtherance of individual effort.

And so ended for the delegates of these eleven clubs a busy day; a day too that will take its place as among the most successful of those annual occasions, which bring together in conference, for mutual profit and pleasure, the Church Clubs of the United States.

General Theological Seminary

Bishop Hall has been making a visit of several days. Dean Hoffman has just given a reception for the senior class. Prof. Richey who has been ill, has gone for rest to Atlantic City, N. J.

Dr. Briggs' Anniversary

The Rev. Chas. A. Briggs, recently ordained a deacon of the Church, and still a professor of the Union Theological Seminary, has just completed 25 years' service in the latter institution, during most of which time he was a Presbyterian minister. Addresses of congratulation were presented by the trustees, and a gold watch. A silver service was given to Mrs. Briggs.

Dr. Mortimer at the Church Club

At a meeting of the Church Club, on the evening of Feb. 13th, an address was delivered by the Rev. Alfred G. Mortimer, D.D., on "Symbolism in the Church." A considerable number of ecclesiastical vestments, loaned by parishes and clergy for the occasion, made an effective illustrative exhibit which appeared to be much appreciated by those present.

Friends at Court Committee

An interesting meeting was held, Feb. 4th, at the residence of Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, of the church of the Heavenly Rest, by the recently organized "Friends at Court Committee," whose object is to interest the public and secure funds for the support of the work of Mrs. John A. Foster in the prisons of the city. This is the third in a series of parlor meetings which have been addressed by judges and others in official life, in the interest of the "Tombs' Angel." Addresses were made by Mr. Alexander M. Hadden, and Mrs. Foster.

Sunday School Teachers

At the church of the Ascension, the Rev. Percy S. Grant, rector, a series of monthly meetings for teachers has begun. At the first one, held Feb. 7th, Miss E. Keller read a paper on the subject of "Illustrated methods in the Sunday schools." The next session will be held March 7th, when Miss L. G. Parker will present a paper on "Some difficulties of the teachers," and later on, the Rev. John P. Peters, D.D., Ph. D., will discuss "Temper and obstinacy, and how to deal with them."

The 27th anniversary of the Niobrara League was held, Feb. 5th, at Grace church. Bishop Hare made an address on "The work of evangelizing Indians."

Bishop Potter made a visitation of St. John's church, Tuckahoe, Feb. 5th, and administered the rite of Confirmation, addressing the candidates.

A service in the interest of improved methods in Sunday school work has just been held at Grace church, Middletown, the Rev. David Evans, rector, at which addresses were delivered by the Rev. Pascal Harrower and Mr. C. W. Stoughton, of the diocesan committee, on this subject.

Provisional Bequests

In the will of Emilie B. Mitchell, of Philadelphia, probated 7th inst., estate valued at $9,270, certain trusts are created, and on the decease of the three annuitants named therein, the principal is to be divided between the Society for the Increase of the Ministry and the American Church Building Fund Commission.

Choir Festival

The choir of the church of the Saviour, West Philadelphia, gave its 29th festival service on the night of Sexagesima Sunday, under the direction of the Rev. J. G. Bierck, organist and choirmaster. Stainer's Evening service in D was rendered; but the principal features of the festival were Gounod's "By Babylon's wave," Dr. Armes' "Give ear, O ye heavens," and two selections from the "Elijah" of Mendelssohn.

Ardmore's New Rector

The Rev. William Bayard Hale, D.D., LL.D., has accepted a call to St. Mary's church, Ardmore, Pa., and assumed charge on Quinquagesima Sunday, 12th inst. Dr. Hale is well-known in America through his writings, and in England by sermons and lectures at the Oxford Summer Meeting. His practical work since ordination has been at Middleboro, Mass., where through his efforts the beautiful gothic church of Our Saviour was built.

Rectors' Anniversaries

The 22d anniversary of the Rev. Henry L. Phillips as rector of the church of the Crucifixion, the second oldest Episcopal colored church in Philadelphia, was appropriately observed on Sexagesima Sunday. In the morning the rector gave in his address a brief report of the work during his incumbency; and in the evening a special musical service was rendered. On the same day, the Rev. Henry B. Martin, M.D., preached his fifth anniversary sermon as rector of St. James' church, Hestonville, Phila.

Choral Society's Concert

The 5th annual concert of the Choral Society of the church of the Holy Spirit, Philadelphia, was given under the direction of Herbert M. Boyer, on the 7th inst., in Witherspoon Hall. The chorus numbering nearly 100 voices rendered among other selections, Gaul's sacred Cantata, "The Holy City," very effectively. The closing number was a medley written by Mr. Boyer, embracing all the national airs. The proceeds were in aid of the organ fund for the new church.

Legacies to Churches, Etc.

In the estate of Mrs. Rebecca H. Sims, adjudicated 8th inst., the following bequests were announced: The Female Protestant Episcopal Benevolent Society, $200; Willing Day Nursery, $200; Corporation of (old) St. Peter's church, Philadelphia, in trust for endowment fund, $1,000; to the same, in trust, for care of burial vault, and for the Missionary Aid Society of said parish, $1,000. Counsel in the estate of the late Crawford Arnold, for many years rector's warder of St. Stephen's church, Philadelphia, were directed to pay to the "trustees" of said church, $1,000.

Chaplain General Elected

The second triennial congress of the Naval Order of the United States was held in the Hotel Lafayette, Philadelphia, on the 9th inst. and was a commemoration of the centennial anniversary of the victory of the U. S. Frigate "Constellation," commanded by Commodore Truxton, over the French Frigate, "L'Insurgente," which was the first American naval victory after the Peace of 1783. Among the officers elected is the Rev. George Williamson Smith, D.D., LL.D., president of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., a member of the New York commandery, as General Chaplain of the order.

Death of Archdeacon Brady's Father

Jasper Ewing Brady, junior vice-commander of George C. Meade Post No. 1, G. A. R., died on the 9th inst., at the Episcopal Hospital, from Bright's disease, in the 62d year of his age. The Burial Office was said on Friday afternoon, at St. Luke's-Epiphany church, by the rector, the Rev. Dr. T. A. Tidball, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. A. J. P. McClure and R. W. Forsyth. In Woodland's cemetery, the Grand Army paid the final honors according to the ritual of the Order. Mr. Brady leaves a widow, two daughters, and two sons, one of whom is a captain in the U. S. army and chief signal officer for Cuba, and the other is the archdeacon of the diocese.

Archdeacon Brady addressed a congregation of over 1,000 persons at the Trocadero theatre, on Sunday night, 5th inst., on "Man's recognition of God."

The Rev. L. W. Batten, Ph.D., has not retired from the Philadelphia Divinity School, nor has the slightest intention of doing so; but has taken charge of the services at St. Andrew's church, Wilmington, Del., as locum tenens.

The Philadelphia council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held a pre-Lenten service at the Church House, on Thursday night, 9th inst. The meeting was addressed by Bishop Whitaker, on "Preparations for Lent."

The Primate's Last Official Act

On Friday last Bishop McLaren received from the Primate his commission, dated Feb. 6th, as chief consecrator of Dr. Morrison on the 22d. The signature is very indistinct, and as Dr. Williams died next day, his signing of that document probably marked the termination of his official life. Bishop McLaren left on Saturday for New York, and will give a Meditation for the students of the General Theological Seminary on Ash Wednesday.

The Northeastern Deanery

The winter meeting was held Feb. 7th at St. James'. After Celebration in the church at 11 A. M., the assembled clergy, to the number of more than 50, adjourned to the Brotherhood room of the parish house, where the dean read for over an hour from his "Memories of the Diocese of Chicago." An innovation was then introduced, for arrangements had been made for the members of the clerica to take lunch with their husbands. Accordingly about 100 persons were privileged to enjoy the hospitality of the ladies of the oldest parish. Luncheon over, Bishop McLaren presented the Bishop-elect of Iowa with an episcopal ring, the parting gift of the clergy, which would have been given at the breakfast on Jan. 23rd but for Dr. Morrison's enforced absence. The Bishop was singularly happy in his presentation address; it was the address of a loving father to a devoted son, and it terminated in an earnest appeal to his other sons present to emulate the good example set by the two priests, one gone, the other going, to a higher place in the Master's kingdom. In his reply the recipient was emphatic in his regret that the call to a higher seat involved the severance of ties that bound him to his parish, to the brethren of the clergy, to this diocese, and to its Bishop. At a gentle hint, the ladies retired, and the remaining business of the convocation went on. It was agreed to hold the May meeting in St. Aungarus' parish, and thus to observe the semi-centennial of our Swedish fellow Churchmen.

Noontday Lenten Service

The mid-day Lenten services in Handel Hall, from 12:10 to 12:30, will be in charge of the following-named clergy:

- Ash Wednesday, Rev. Dr. Rushton.
- Feb. 16-18, Rev. J. H. Edwards.
- " 20-22, Rev. T. A. Snively.
- " 23-25, Rev. E. A. Larrabee.
- " 27, March 1, Rev. W. C. Richardson.
- March 2-4, Rev. W. C. DeWitt.
- " 6-11, Rev. Percy C. Webber.
- " 13-15, Rev. Dr. W. W. Wilson.
- " 16-18, Rev. C. P. Anderson.
- " 20-22, Rev. W. B. Hamilton.
- " 23-25, Dr. J. S. Stone.
- " 27-29, Rev. E. M. Stires.
- " 30, April 1, Rev. Dr. Rushton.

At the church of our Saviour the vested choir is rehearsing regularly for their new work, and it is expected that they will be installed at Mid-Lent, by which time the re-arranging of the choir stalls will be ready for the new condition of things.

The Rev. George B. Pratt left Chicago for San Juan, Porto Rico, on Friday. As Mr. Pratt has spent some years in Yucatan, he is no stranger to the climate of the tropics, or to the language of the colonies planted by Spain.

Bishop and Mrs. Edsall were tendered a cordial reception at Fargo on Saturday evening last. Upwards of 500 attended in honor of their new Bishop.

We regret to hear that the Rev. D. S. Smith, of St. Luke's, South Evanston, is in poor health.

The re-carpeting of St. James', and other interior renovations, are now completed.

The foundation of the new St. Paul's church, N. E. corner of Madison ave. and 50th st., Kenwood, is finished, covered over for the winter, and paid for.

The new rector of St. Peter's, the Rev. Frank DuMoulin, takes up his work here next week. Meanwhile, the Rev. H. C. Granger carries on the services.

Funeral of Bishop Williams

Another Presiding Bishop, and the third successor of Seabury, has joined the company of the saints. On the evening of Feb. 7th, the aged and beloved Bishop of Connecticut quietly yet unexpectedly passed away. The end came without suffering, and the soul of the grand old patriarch of the Western Church made calm and joyous exit from amidst the friends who loved him well. The funeral services were held in the church of the Holy Trinity, Middletown, on the 10th, at two o'clock in the afternoon. During the morning hours the body lay in state in St. Luke's chapel, connected with the Berkeley Divinity School, and was viewed by hundreds of people. The wishes of the dead prelate, made known in written instructions read after his death, were carried out in every particular, and the funeral services were as simple and unostentatious as possible. The body was borne from the chapel to the church by eight students of the Berkeley Divinity School, of which Bishop Williams was dean, and deposited on a bier at the foot of the altar. The simple casket which the Bishop had requested, was covered with black cloth, and was devoid of floral decorations. The inscription on the plate was:

JOHN WILLIAMS

Fourth Bishop of Connecticut.

Born August 30, 1817.

Died February 7, 1899.

There were present at the church many clergymen from Connecticut and near-by dioceses. The following bishops were present: Bishop Doane, of Albany; Walker, of Western New York; Brewster, of Connecticut; Neeley, of Maine; Scarborough, of New Jersey; Hall of Vermont, and McVickar, of Rhode Island. In accordance with the expressed wishes of the dead Bishop, there was no funeral sermon or address given. The simple burial service of the Church was read by Bishop Doane. The bishops and other clergy, nearly 200 in number, entered the church to the plaintive and solemn notes of the organ. The full vested choir sang the burial psalms, and "Rock of Ages." At the conclusion of the service the body was borne from the church by eight other students of the Berkeley Divinity School. The honorary pallbearers were: The Rev. Drs. S. O. Seymour, W. G. Andrews, Sylvester Clark, Samuel Hart, F. T. Russell; the Rev. Messrs. F. W. Braithwaite, Louis French, Peter L. Shepard.

After the long procession had returned to the chapel in the rear of the church, Bishop Brewster called the clergy together, and in a few, earnest words, asked the clergy of the diocese to remember all the Bishop's bereaved spiritual children in their prayers, and particularly he asked their prayers for himself. He requested the clergy to drape some portion of their respective churches in mourning, in memory of their deceased Bishop. Bishop Doane then, at his request, took the chair, and appointed the Rev. Mr. Harriman, the secretary of the diocese, secretary of the meeting. Bishop Doane, with deep feeling, referred to his own service under Bishop Williams, when he was rector of St. John's, Hartford. He then stated that Bishop Williams had left a request that only one clergyman should officiate at his funeral. The Standing Committee of the diocese through its President, Dr. Seymour, had asked him to perform this last sad office for his friend and brother. Said the Bishop in conclusion, "I venture to think, that among all those who loved him, none loved him more than myself." The chairman appointed a committee consisting of Dr. Vibbert, Dr. Binney, Dr. Lines, Dr. Grint, and Bishop Neeley, to draft suitable resolutions on the Bishop's death. The chairman then placed the pastoral staff in Bishop Brewster's hands, and declared the meeting adjourned. Bishop Brewster accompanied the body of the senior Bishop to the grave in Indian Hills, where after prayer it was laid to rest beside the remains of his mother. Delegations of the Board of Missions, Woman's Auxiliary, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Daughters of the King, and numerous other organizations, beside the denominational clergy of the city, were present at the funeral.

The death of the Bishop made a profound impression among all classes. He has been such a familiar figure and his name such a household word in the State, that he will be missed and mourned not only in our own Communion, but by Christian people of every name. The diocese is fortunate in having a bishop to fill his place who already has made his way into the hearts of clergy and laity, and who will securely hold that position.

New Haven County Convocation

The winter meeting was held in St. Paul's church, New Haven, on Feb. 7th. Dean Woodcock was the celebrant at the Eucharistic office, assisted by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Lines. The sermon was preached by the Rev. H. W. Winkley. The business session opened in the parish guild room after the service. Prof. Porter, of the chair of Biblical Criticism in Yale University, read a suggestive paper upon the subject of "The present position of the Higher Criticism." Dr. Porter aimed simply to state fairly the present state of things without combating any views. The clergy, by a rising vote, thanked him for his illuminating essay. Resolutions relating to a proposed change in the Constitution as to the time of the annual election of officers, and of sympathy with one of their number who has suffered from long and critical illness, were passed. Very earnest and general discussions followed the reading of the exegesis of Rom. x: 5-7, by the Rev. F. R. Sanford, and the essay on "Christian Science and kindred cults," by the Rev. A. J. Gammack. Major Stansfield, of the local post of the Church-Army, made an address explanatory of the work of that effective organization. The convocation accepted the invitation of the Rev. George Brinley Morgan, of Christ church, New Haven, to meet in his parish in April. At the evening session, Gounod's sacred music was sung by St. Paul's choir. Dr. Lines gave a short address on the composer's life and work. The convocation was very largely attended.

Death of an Aged Clergyman

The Rev. John James Hunt whose death occurred at his home, Marietta, on Feb. 6, 1899, was born in Athens, Ga., on Jan. 1, 1810, and was one of the oldest priests in the American Church. He was the oldest graduate of the University of Georgia, where he took his degree of master in arts in 1836. Three years later, in 1839, he was admitted to the diaconate, and in 1836, was ordained priest by Bishop Bowen, of South Carolina. His early ministry was exercised in Oglethorpe Co., Lexington, and for a time in At-

Ianta. He gradually withdrew from missionary and parochial duty, and devoted himself to the education of youth, in which vocation he continued until about ten years before his death. Mr. Hunt was the first native Georgian to enter the ministry of the Church. He was a man of devout and godly life and scholarly attainments, and goes to his rest after years of great usefulness.

Services at Military Camp

The chaplain of the Second Ohio Vol. Inf., the Rev. C. B. Crawford, writes most encouragingly of the interest in, and attendance at, the camp services while the regiment has been at Macon. On the last two Sundays there were about 1,000 present, soldiers and citizens. At the farewell service, much interest was shown.

Lenten Offering for Missions

The Rev. Herman L. Duhring created much enthusiasm in Portland for the children's Lenten offering for missions. He addressed the Sunday schools of Trinity and St. David's parish Sunday morning, Jan. 29th, preached in St. David's church at 11, and at St. Mark's church at 7:30. In the afternoon he addressed a mass-meeting of all the Church Sunday schools of Portland, in Trinity church, where the attendance numbered 1,000. It was a magnificent success, and will count much for the cause of missions at the Easter offering. At St. Stephen's chapel, the Rev. T. N. Wilson in charge, Mr. Duhring Monday evening addressed a large attendance of the Sunday School Institute.

Diocese of Massachusetts

The Massachusetts Church Union

It held a public service in the church of the Advent, Boston, Feb. 9th. The Rev. Edward Osborne, S.S.J.E., preached a strong sermon. He urged the necessity of deeper devotion to the Faith, and a firmer belief in the mission of the Church. He condemned the fallacy that it matters not what one believes if his deeds are good. At the collation which followed the service, the Rev. Dr. Chambré made a short address, and introduced Dr. Lindsay who showed that all parties in the Church were agreed that the great work to be done was the preaching of a gospel of regeneration to a lost world. Dr. Donald, the next speaker, thought that the success of the Church will ever come from the profound reverence of its priest and people for the commands of God, and a full devotion of self to this holy mission. The present curses of the Church are now the adoration of committees, the exaltation of bustle, and the desire to get ahead in a worldly way. Instead of these, our churches should be filled with a desire to acquire a deeper love of God and a fuller submission to His holy will.

Trinity College Alumni

On February 9th there was a reunion of the alumni of Trinity College at the University Club. The Rev. L. K. Storrs, D.D., presided. President Smith made a speech in which he referred to the present and future work of the college. Mr. John Sabine Smith, of New York, Dr. William R. Martin, Professor C. P. Parker, of Harvard, and others, also made addresses.

A Parish Semi-Centennial

Christ church, Waltham, observed its semi-centennial celebration Feb. 9th. Holy Communion was celebrated at 8 A. M. by the rector, the Rev. Hubert W. Wells. The Rev. Leighton Parks, D.D., preached a sermon in memoriam of the first rector of the parish, the Rev. Dr. Thomas F. Fales, in the evening. Christ church was organized in 1848, under the charge of the Rev. A. C. Patterson. Services were then held in Rumford Hall, and later on a church building was erected on Central st., under the charge of the Rev. T. F. Fales, who began his duties in Nov., 1849, and resigned in 1889. He was succeeded by the Rev. H. N. Cunningham, who remained as rector four years, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, the Rev. H. W. Wells. During his ministry the present church edifice was erected, and was consecrated June 17th, 1898.

The Church Temperance society has collected $1,507.90 for their work.

The Rev. E. Winchester Donald, D.D., has accepted appointment as preacher of the baccalaureate sermon at Cornell University for this year.

The Cathedral Work

The congregation of Trinity church, Easton, Bishop Adams, rector, and the Rev. E. R. Rich, dean, are making strong efforts to pay off an old debt of $600 resting upon the cathedral corporation. Recently the congregation paid nearly $400 of the amount. It is expected that the full $600 will be realized early in February. The next undertaking will be the erection of a parish house which is greatly needed. Holy Cross chapel, of the Point, near Easton, has been reopened, and services are now held there regularly every Sunday afternoon, under the direction of the dean, assisted by Messrs. W. H. Higgins and B. E. Whitmans, members of the cathedral chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Rector for Fifteen Years

The Rev. Oliver H. Murphy who has been rector of Coventry parish, Somerset Co., since 1883, left recently for Albany, Ore., where he has accepted a call to St. Paul's church. Dr. Murphy, immediately after his ordination to the priesthood, became rector of Coventry parish, which at that time was one of the smallest in the diocese, but under his rectorship has steadily grown, until it is now the fourth parish, in point of communicants, in the diocese. Dr. Murphy has been dean of the Southern convocation for the past 10 years, and also a member of the Standing Committee of the diocese, and has twice represented the diocese in General Convention.

Recently a pair of heavy brass vases was put upon the altar of St. Paul's church, Centreville, the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector, as a gift of the congregation in memory of the rector's 25th anniversary. The money with which they were purchased was the offering made upon the anniversary, Nov. 27, 1898.

The Swedish Church in Galesburg

On last Sunday, Bishop Seymour officiated at the opening of St. John's Swedish church which has just been completed in a very substantial way, except the school rooms and chancel which are all under the same roof, and are separated from the body of the church. A temporary chancel has been arranged very tastefully, the altar decorations being presented by the Sunday school. The people deserve great credit for the good work they have done with the means at their disposal. Though there is a debt on the church, it is a valuable property, one of the largest in the diocese, and it is hoped that with the encouragement now given, large numbers of the Swedes will rally around the church of the fatherland, and find a home in St. John's. The weather was extremely cold on the day of the opening, but a large congregation assembled and took devout interest in the service. The rector and choir of Grace church assisted. The rector of St. Mary's School and the chaplain of St. Alban's Academy, Knoxville, were present, and the Rev. Mr. Almquist, assistant, with Mr. Nybladh, pastor, made up a goodly company of "other clergy." Bishop Seymour conducted the office of dedication in English, and made an impressive address. He spoke of the Church in its present condition as being like the ship, the temporary place from which Christ taught the people. The permanent abiding place was the Temple; such the Church should be when entirely completed and free from debt. In the evening, the Bishop preached to a large congregation.

The Communion service of the morning was reverently sung by the pastor, following the Swedish office. It was impressive, with its old tones of another land and its strange but not unmusical language. The congregation took up the responses, even the children singing without a book. During the entire week services will be held, and several clergy of the diocese will preach.

Bishop Seymour has already administered Confirmation in several parishes, at the request of the Bishop of the diocese. The latter still hopes to attend his annual convention in May, and perhaps return at an earlier date, though his gain in strength is reported to be very little. The Rev. John Wilkinson has visited several points in the diocese in the interest of the endowment fund.

DICKINSON.—On Monday, Jan. 25th, divine service was held in St. John's church at the same hour at which the Rev. Dr. Edsall was being consecrated as Bishop of North Dakota. The rector, the Rev. J. P. Lytton, officiated. The service was the celebration of the Holy Communion, and prayers from the Office for the Consecration of a Bishop. The attendance was good, and the service very earnest and impressive.

Bishop Littlejohn's Anniversary

The commemoration of the 80th anniversary of the Rt. Rev. A. N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., as Bishop of this diocese, was held in the cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, on Sexagesima Sunday, at 3 P. M. The Standing Committee of the diocese attended in a body. The two cathedral schools, St. Paul's and St. Mary's, occupied seats near the choir. Special music was rendered under the direction of the precentor, the Rev. Canon Bird, and the organist, Dr. Woodcock. The Rev. Dr. Swentzel, president of the Standing Committee, presented an address to the Bishop, on behalf of the clergy, in which he recounted the progress of the Church in the diocese during the last 80 years, assured the Bishop of the affection of his clergy, and prayed he might be spared to his diocese for many years to come. This was followed by an address by the Hon. John A. King, on behalf of the laity, who conveyed to the Bishop the esteem, and admiration, and respect in which he was held. The Bishop's reply to both addresses was touchingly and tenderly given, and the services closed with his benediction.

Opening of a New Church

The new church of the Good Shepherd, Brooklyn, a description of which has appeared in THE LIVING CHURCH, was formally opened on Sexagesima Sunday. The chancel was tastefully decorated, and an excellent programme of music rendered under the direction of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Thomas W. McDonough. A quartet of stringed instruments added much to the effect. The interior of the church is cheerful, the walls and ceiling being in pure white. The pews are of walnut, and so arranged as to give a view of the chancel from all parts of the building. The church is not fully complete, many little details remaining yet to be finished, including the raising of the tower to its full height, which will make the front one of the most imposing in Brooklyn. The sermon was preached by the rector. Bishop Littlejohn made an address. In the evening the preacher was the rector emeritus, the Rev. Dr. Henry B. Cornwell.

Reception to a Rector

The annual reception tendered by the Young Mens' Club of St. Ann's-on-the-Heights to the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop, rector, took place on the evening of the 9th. This club, which was organized a little more than one year ago, with 10 members, now numbers about 50, and has taken its place with the permanent organizations of St. Ann's.

A Good Prospect

The parish at Fergus Falls, under the present rector, the Rev. A. O. Worthing, continues to show life and activity; the membership increases, a third class for Confirmation is being prepared for the Bishop's next visitation, Sunday school attendance is gaining. The various societies are all actively engaged in some definite branches of Church work. Daily services are maintained, and weekly Celebrations. The outlook never appeared more auspicious than at present.

Two Missionary Meetings

A interesting meeting in behalf of the missionary work of the Church, was recently held in St. James' parish house, when the Bishop addressed three of the parish guilds: St. Paul's, for men; St. Mary's, for women, and St. Agnes', for young girls. He warmly congratulated the parish on the recovery from recent severe illness of their faithful rector, the Rev. James W. Clark, and highly commended his work. He then gave a graphic account of the last session of the Lambeth Conference, and spoke of the wonderful effect on that body of the eloquent and rousing appeal from the Archbishop of Canterbury in behalf of missions. Bishop Satterlee earnestly asked all present to say daily at noon the Prayer for Missions.

The Sunday School Institute held a general missionary meeting at St. Andrew's church, on the evening of Jan. 30th, one of the most stormy of the season. About 100 persons, however, braved the elements, and were rewarded by hearing the interesting personal experience of two workers in the field, the Rev. Mr. Patton, from Japan, and the recently consecrated Bishop for Brazil. The former spoke chiefly of social conditions in Japan, especially of the position of women and the laws regarding marriage and divorce, showing the need of a higher influence than mere civilization. Bishop Kinsolving gave an account of the low state of morals and religion in Brazil, many of the Roman churches built under the empire being now deserted.

The Churchman's League

The Lenten lecture course is as follows: Trinity Parish Hall, Feb. 21st, Mr. Silas McBee, "Cathedral architecture," illustrated. St. Mark's pro-cathedral, Feb. 28th, the Rev. Cornelius B. Smith, "Cathedral work of the past in Europe, with lessons from its history." Church of the Epiphany, March 7th, the Rt. Rev. H. Y. Satterlee, D.D., LL. D., Bishop of Washington, "The future of cathedral work in America." Church of the Ascension, March 14th, the Rt. Rev. Lucien Lee Kinsolving, Bishop of Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, "The work of the Church in Spanish America; the religious, political, and social conditions." St. Andrew's church, March 21st, the Rev. Thos. P. Hughes, "Christian Missions in the Orient; the problems existing in the Philippines and Asia."

Pre-Lenten Mission

At St. Luke's church, the Rev. O. M. Waller, rector, Feb. 8th, when the Bishop of Washington delivered the opening sermon. The Mission was to continue till Ash Wednesday, with three daily services, and instructions by the rector, the Rev. Mr. Tunnell, warden of King Hall, and other clergy of the city.

The Woman's Auxillary

The monthly meeting on Feb. 7th, at St. John's parish hall, was made specially interesting by the presence of the Bishop of North Carolina who spoke of the missionary work in his diocese, both among the white and colored population. He described the conditions of the latter as more helpful and promising now than ever before, as many of their own leaders are trying to influence them to let politics alone and devote themselves to the elevation of their people by industry and education.

On Missionary Sunday, at the church of the Epiphany, the offertory, with some donations afterwards received, amounted to $1,139, which was divided amongst diocesan, domestic, and foreign missions.

Funeral of the Rev. Chas. E. Murray, D. D.

The funeral of the late rector of St. Andrew's church, Wilmington, took place on Monday, Jan. 30th. The Rt. Rev. Leighton Coleman, D. D., Bishop of the diocese, attended with all of the city clergy and several from places outside of Wilmington. In the procession there were also the Rev. Drs. Martin and Batten (Philadelphia) and Grammer (Baltimore), and the Rev. Geo. A. Latimer, of Philadelphia, formerly rector of Calvary church, Wilmington. The clergy unanimously approved a minute testifying to their appreciation of the loss sustained through the decease of Dr. Murray, and of his noble qualities of heart and mind. The archdeacon of Wilmington, the Ven. Geo. C. Hall, the Rev. H. Ashton Henry, and the Rev. Dr. L. W. Batten took part in the service in the church, that at the grave being taken by the Bishop. The large church of St. Andrew was filled with those who came to bid farewell to one whom not only the Church, but the whole community, mourns. Dr. Murray was the president of the Standing Committee, one of the examining chaplains, and registrar of the diocese.

The Rev. Dr. Batten, of the Philadelphia Divinity School, is conducting the services at St. Andrew's, as he has been doing since the retirement from active work of the late Rev. Dr. Murray.

The old Swedes' church, built in 1698, is undergoing extensive repairs, in order to the preservation of this historic landmark. Mr. Thos. F. Bayard took great interest in this church, and is buried in the cemetery in which the church stands.

Bishop Rowe's Plans

The Rt. Rev. P. T. Rowe, Bishop of Alaska, visited his old parish, St. James, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., on his return from Lower Canada. An informal reception was tendered him at the residence of Mr. Thomas Bailey, Bay Mills. During the evening over 400 old friends and parishioners paid their respects to the Bishop. Refreshments were served and a very enjoyable evening was spent. The Bishop delivered, under the auspices of the Daughters of the King, at the Opera House, a lecture entitled, "Experiences in Alaska." At his request the lecture was free, consequently every available seat was taken. The lecture was greatly appreciated by the large audience present. After visiting St. Louis and Chicago, the Bishop journeyed towards the Pacific, from whence he will sail. In March Bishop Rowe will sail for Alaska; in May he will start on an official trip of some seven months' duration. He will sail to Point Hope and Cape Lisburne, and from the latter place may coast to the extreme northern portion of Alaska. Mrs. Rowe and children are in California, and will probably remain until November.

A New Church

The parishioners of Christ church, La Crosse, held their last service in the old wooden edifice last Easter, and since then have been holding regular services in the Y. M. C. A. building downtown. They expect to be in their new church sometime during May. It will be one of the handsomest in this section of the country. We give a brief description of it: The style of architecture is Romanesque, in native limestone, the trimmings of Portage Entry sandstone. The structure is cruciform in shape. Beneath the entire building are rooms for Sunday school, guild, and various similar purposes. The church has chancel, nave, two transepts, and cloister aisles. The chancel is 34 x 40 ft., apsidal in form, and divided about midway by the sanctuary rail, the choir stalls being placed at the eastern end of the chancel. The nave is 82 ft. in length by 36 ft. in width, and 36 ft. from floor to the highest part of the ceiling. The clerestory is lighted by semi-circular shaped windows placed above the roofs of the cloister aisles. These aisles, 12 feet wide, will run the full length of the nave to the point where the transept intersects. The transepts are 22 ft. wide by 33 ft. deep. The organ chamber is at the north side of the church, with spacious, arched openings communicating with the choir and transept. The intersection of transepts and nave are treated in massive piers with columns of polished Athenian marble, from which springs the large vaulted dome, covering the axis or central portion of the building. The pilaster piers on both sides of the nave are connected above by a series of decorated arches. The main facade of the church is massive and imposing, the principal feature of which will be the great tower, 23 ft. square, and rising to a height of about 120 ft. Above the vestibule the building is crowned with the great gable, pierced with a rose window with elaborate Venetian tracery. The large south transept window will be a memorial by Mrs. Angus Cameron to the late Senator Cameron, and is now in course of construction by the Tiffany Glass and Decorating Co., of New York city. The two chancel windows are memorials to Mr. A. A. Stevens, and Mr. T. D. Servis. Throughout the building there are to be some 450 16-candle power incandescent lamps. The architect to whom the credit is due for the entire work of conceiving, arranging details, and pushing to completion this beautiful structure, is Mr. M. S. Detweiler. A fine mixed chorus choir of ladies and gentlemen, 18 voices, will be vested, and the chorus enlarged to 30 voices, when the new church is ready for use.

St. John's Church, Mauston

A guild hall has been built on the grounds adjoining the church, at a cost of about $400. While the structure is not wholly completed, it is sufficiently finished to permit of constant use. Of the $400 expended, a debt of $200 remains, and the faithful congregation is striving hard to cover this. The missionary in charge is the Rev. Herbert C. Boissier.

Clearing off Church Debts

This is a good work ever steadily going on in this diocese. St. Clement's, Whitefish Bay, sent in $25 towards a debt of $135, incurred in some recent improvements. St. Peter's, North Greenfield, paid $150, and hopes soon to raise the remaining $50, which will entirely close out an old-time debt of $400 on their new church building. All Souls', Cumberland, has at last extinguished the remaining $85 on its venerable mortgage debt. A few years ago this mortgage was $650, and it is now wholly gone. St. Luke's, Bay View, paid in $50 on a $300 debt incurred in some recent improvements, and hopes to close out the remainder of the debt at Easter.

Diocese of Ohio

The Northwestern Convocation

Held its winter session in Trinity church, Tiffin, Jan. 31st. The Rev. L. P. McDonald preached the opening sermon, on "The relation of the Sunday school to the home." There was a Celebration at 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning. After Morning Prayer, a paper on "Teaching in the Sunday school, how and what?" was read by Mrs. Ione Pratt, of Calvary church, Sandusky. A general discussion followed on the paper, and also on the following subjects: 1. "The teacher's responsibility"; 2. "The Chautauqua plan for Bible study; can we have something like it?"; 3. "The ideal Sunday school"; 4. "What we expect from our Sunday school Institute." In the afternoon, election of officers for both the convocation and institute was held; the Rev. E. V. Shayler was elected dean, vice the Rev. R. O. Cooper, removed to Owosso, Mich. Mr. Dudley Watson Moore, of Toledo, read a paper on "The duties of a superintendent." The Rev. J. Louis P. Clarke read one on "The service of song, a layman's suggestion for its improvement." The Rt. Rev. A. R. Graves, Bishop of Laramie, delivered an inspiring address on missions. The new archdeacon, the Rev. A. A. Abbott, preached the closing sermon. A resolution was passed favoring a redistricting of the diocese so as to give three convocations more evenly divided, having respectively, Cleveland, Sandusky, and Toledo, as their largest cities.

Woman's Auxiliary

The quarterly meeting was held at the cathedral house, Cleveland, on Thursday, Feb. 2d. Bishop Graves, of Laramie, who has been making visitations in this diocese in the absence of Bishop Leonard, gave an interesting account of the work in his own diocese, and the Rev. George E. Benedict of Cartersville, Ga., spoke of mission work among the poor whites of that part of the country. Tea was served and a social time enjoyed after the service.

A Foreign Missionary

The Rev. H. G. Limric left his parish at Fremont in December, and has gone, at the earnest solicitation of Bishop McKim, to take up mission work in Japan. He has had five years' experience as a missionary in Mexico, and is fitted for great usefulness. Mrs. Limric and their two children will remain in this country for two years, when they expect to follow him to the foreign field.

The Northeast Convocation

It met at the church of Our Saviour, Akron, the Rev. Geo. P. Atwater, Jan. 30th and 31st, and held a very successful session. On Monday evening, an address was delivered by the Rev. J. W. Hyslop, on "The missionary responsibility of the Church in the new fields." On Tuesday, 7 A. M., the Holy Communion was celebrated. At 9 A. M., Morning Prayer was said, followed by an address by the dean, the Rev. A. L. Frazer, on "Work in the Church." At the business session nine clergy were present, and some important matters were brought up and discussed. Mission prayers were said at noon. At 2:30 a conference was led by the Rev. Robt. Kell, on "Church debts; how to raise them." The Rev. J. H. W. Blake was the next speaker, on "Sunday evening services." The discussion was taken part in by each member present. Evensong was said in St. Paul's church, and an interesting illustrated address made by the Ven. A. A. Abbott who has recently been appointed archdeacon of the diocese. He advocated a different division of the diocese into convocations, and the giving of convocations more power, that the missionary work may be more effectually accomplished. The next meeting will be at St. Paul's church, Conneaut, Ohio, in April.

The subject for the united services of the Cleveland parishes, to be held on the Wednesday evenings of Lent, in Grace church, is "The Petitions of the Lord's Prayer." Six of the diocesan clergy will preach on subdivisions of the topic, one each evening.

The class in ecclesiastical embroidery numbers this year two life members and 60 active members. They represent 14 parishes. Eight members are from the Congregational, Baptist, and Disciple denominations. Miss Neff, president of the class, receives frequent letters from distant dioceses, asking for information in regard to the working methods of the class, and instruction in the formation of similar societies.

Diocese of So. Virginia

Much interest has been manifested in a series of meetings that have just been held at Trinity church, Rocky Mount, by Mr. J. R. Matthews, of Oxford, England. He has been preaching nightly, and having Bible readings in the morning.

The new church that has recently been erected at Park View, a growing suburb of Portsmouth, by Trinity church of that town, was broken into lately by thieves, and robbed of everything they could carry away.

The Rev. R. C. Jett, of Staunton, who has been very ill, has commenced to improve a little.

Progress in St. Paul's, Muskegon

St. Paul's parish, the Rev. George Forsey, rector, is growing encouragingly. The congregations, both morning and evening, are much larger than in previous years, and are attentive and devout. The vestry recently put in a hot-air furnace to supplement the steam heat, which makes the church very comfortable on the coldest day. Mr. C. W. Linsman, formerly leader of the choir in the Congregational church, has brought a goodly number of singers from that body into the choir of St. Paul's, so that now it forms a strong chorus of 40 voices, all vested. Mr. William Heap, a parishioner, ordered last week the decoration of the chancel, as a gift to the congregation. It had a somewhat sombre appearance, a great transformation has been wrought. The paneling of the ceiling is colored in deepening shades of blue, spangled with gold stars, the panels at the base having a heavy frieze of dark blue. The walls are tinted a light gray, and ornamented in color and gold, with a combination of the trefoil and triangle, a symbol of the unity of the Blessed Godhead. Light-colored bordering surrounds the chancel window, containing a figure of St. Paul, and also forms a pleasing wainscoting effect about the usual height from the floor. The three panels of the reredos were done in gold, adding to the richness of the general effect. The view from the nave and transepts is restful to the eye and helpful to devotion. The rector has announced a course of sermons for Sunday evenings during Lent, beginning Feb. 12th. The subjects are Spiritualism, Theosophy, Socialism, Christian Science, Agnosticism, and Atheism. The Bishop makes his annual visitation the 2d Sunday in Lent. A class for Confirmation, composed almost entirely of married people, is under instruction.

Diocese of Michigan

The Southern Convocation

The last meeting was held in St. Paul's church, Jackson, Feb. 2d. After the celebration of the Holy Eucharist, at 10:30, several of the clergy gave very satisfactory accounts of their missions. At 1 o'clock, the rector of the parish, the Rev. R. B. Balcom, and wife entertained the members of convocation at luncheon. At the afternoon session, an excellently written paper, on "The presentation of missions to the people," was read by the Rev. John K. Burleson. Such pleasure was manifested in the merits of the paper that its publication in the Church papers was requested. The day's business was concluded with Evensong at 7:30, at which the Rev. Geo. Vernor and the Rev. H.

Tatlock gave addresses on missions. During the business session, much interest was shown in the discussion of a report from the convocation of Detroit, on "A better plan than that now in use for raising money for diocesan missions." It is proposed to substitute the apportionment system for the pledge. The matter was left over for further consideration until the April meeting.

Deaf-Mute Services

The members of Ephphatha Mission, Detroit, met socially in St. John's parish house, on Saturday evening, Feb. 4th, with the Rev. Mr. Mann present. Two services were held on the following day in the chapel. A third, a "combined service," was held in the evening in St. Luke's church, Ypsilanti, with an attendance of 15 deaf-mutes, from Ann Arbor and other nearby places, besides those residing in Ypsilanti.

On Jan. 31st, the Bishop visited St. Alban's church, Albion, the Rev. C. S. Abbott, Jr., missionary, and confirmed a class of 18 members. Although the night was very stormy, the church was filled to the doors, about 300 being present. This will make 28 persons presented for Confirmation the convention year. During the five years this work has been in existence, 108 persons have been presented for Confirmation, the smallest number being the first class of five, the largest (28) that of the present year.

Parochial Mission at Creston

A series of special services in the nature of a parochial Mission were inaugurated on Septuagesima Sunday by the Rev. Allen Judd, general missionary, assisted by Mr. Frank A. Joseph, lay-reader in charge at St. Paul's church. On Tuesday the Rev. Dr. Paget, of Muscatine, joined in the work and gave instructions on the Prayer Book, and preached the sermon every evening till the close. The attendance, considering the severe weather and the strength of the congregation, has been encouraging, and good results are looked for. The announcement was made during the Mission of the date fixed for the consecration of Dr. Morrison, and the hope expressed that he might soon be able to visit and encourage the little band of Church worshippers and workers in this pretty and Church-like building.

Presentation From a Choir

On the evening of Feb. 1st, Christ church choir, Waterloo, gave a delightful surprise to the rector, the Rev. E. E. Madeira who is also their choirmaster. He and Mrs. Madeira were invited to tea at the home of the choir-mother, Mrs. J. W. Krappel, and at 9 o'clock the choir, to the number of 30, came in, bearing with them as a token of love, a beautiful carved oak chair, which they presented to the rector and his wife. The choir has enrolled in it 12 women, besides the male voices. Under the direction of the rector, they are giving a series of musical services on Sunday evenings, at which the better works of the English school of Church composers are rendered. This choir is unique, from the fact that the choristers are under no rules whatever, the enthusiasm of the members keeping the ratio of attendance at rehearsal and service up to a high standard, although the entire service is voluntary.

MT. PLEASANT.—The work in the old parish of St. Michael's has taken on fresh vitality, under the vigorous efforts of the priest-in-charge, the Rev. H. Parry Thomas. On Monday, 30th ult., Dean Paget visited and preached at the evening service. The prospects are encouraging for regular and self-sustaining services soon after the eagerly awaited advent of the new bishop.

FAIRFIELD.—This old parish, where the church has for some time been practically closed, has recently been visited by the Rev. H. P. Thomas, and services have been resumed at intervals with promising results.

Roman Catholic "Americanism"

SOME years ago a bright political writer described a certain class of our fellow-citizens, by saying that their loyalty was abundantly manifested by the vigor with which they shouted for "The old flag and an appropriation." Recent advices from the seat of government incline us to the opinion that this description will not inappropriately fit others who are vaunting their Americanism in rather emphatic terms. A despatch from Washington to the Baltimore Sun, dated Jan. 18th, says: "The Senate Committee has inserted a provision in the Indian Appropriation Bill allowing the (R) Catholic schools the amount they received last year; namely, twenty per cent. of their former allowance, and the House will probably agree to it. This is said to be the last time such allowance will be made." It is also said that not long ago Cardinal Gibbons presented a petition to Congress to reopen the question of the Indian schools. It is not intimated that that was the last time that such a petition would be offered.

Now when it is remembered that the various Protestant bodies and our own Church in this land have on principle declined to receive any further grants from Congress in aid of their Indian schools, and have been for some time carrying on this educational and religious work at their own expense, the persistence of the Roman Catholics in demanding the continuance of the government appropriation seems to need explanation. It is quite true that while they formerly received the lion's share of the lump sum of more than $500,000 that was at one time regularly appropriated for the Indian schools, they last year received but twenty per cent. of that share. But it is not a question of more or less dollars, but of principle.

It goes without saying that our Roman friends would get the lion's share of the money. The point is, why should they consent to ask for any money? And why should the Congress of the United States be petitioned to appropriate money for sectarian or ecclesiastical purposes? It is true that the leading Protestant bodies, as well as the Roman Catholics, have in time past received grants from the government in aid of the Indian schools conducted under their supervision, on the broad ground that they were engaged in the work of civilizing the Indians. But when it became evident that the Roman body was exploiting the public purse rather for the end of religious propaganda than for that of civilization, and, moreover, that the proportion of the appropriation assigned to it was far in excess of the comparative amount of work done by it among the Indians, the other religious bodies reconsidered their position, and rather than rest under the imputation that they were using government funds for ecclesiastical purposes, they resolved to decline any such appropriations whatever. For of course they endeavored to make the Indians Christians, though it was and is their purpose to teach them a great many things that are not distinctively Christian, however much the spirit of Christianity may be in them.

The action taken by our own Board of Missions was positive and thorough. We have large and flourishing Indian schools in South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Wyoming, Nevada and Utah, Arizona, Oklahoma, Southern Florida, and even in far-off Alaska. That in South Dakota is by far our largest Indian mission. It reaches thirteen tribes, and is well organized, and productive of excellent results. Good Bishop Hare is the true apostle to the Indians in this country. Probably the refusal of the government appropriation was a greater loss to the work of the Church than to that of any other religious body except the Roman Catholic. But the sacrifice was made, almost without debate, because it was recognized that to receive public money for Church work, even when other work not properly of that class was united with it, was contrary to the spirit of American institutions. While such appropriations may not be contrary to the letter of the Constitution of the United States, they are certainly opposed to its spirit, and if continued indefinitely, and allowed to become enormous, they might lead to an attempt to transgress the letter itself.

It is certainly surprising that the leaders of the Americanizing party in the Roman Church do not seem to understand this principle upon which other bodies have acted, nor to appreciate its force. That they do not accept it is, we think, indicated by the efforts they are making to get the present Congress to appropriate as much money for their schools as they dare to ask for. We have some hope that our Roman friends will even yet see the utter un-Americanism of their position, and if our readers would write to the senators and congressmen from their respective States and districts, calling their attention to the anomalous position of the Roman Church on this subject, the leaders of this latter body might be assisted to see themselves as others see them, and perhaps they would refrain from taking the people's money "just this time," like Rip Van Winkle.

The Consultative Body

THE American correspondent of the Church Times took occasion a short time ago to explain very lucidly the attitude of the General Convention last October towards the plan which originated at the Lambeth Conference of 1897, for the establishment of a permanent committee of Anglican Bishops, to be called the "Consultative Body." This body was to deal with questions arising in the different colonial Churches and in our own, which might be referred to it. The correspondent draws attention to the fact that the Lambeth Conference is purely a voluntary body, and that its acts have only a moral weight. It is not, and cannot be, known officially to a body like the General Convention.

But the proposal to establish the "Consultative Body" is the first step in a programme for the organization of the Anglican Communion including the American Church. Attractive as such a scheme may appear in some of its aspects, it is too serious a matter to be entered upon without the most careful consideration. Moreover, there are reasons which immediately occur to those who understand the situation, which seem to render it entirely out of the question for this Church to become a party to such an arrangement. The case of the Church in the English colonies is distinct from that of the American Church. With us, the crucial point is one which the correspondent puts very frankly and clearly:

I venture to add (trusting that I shall hurt nobody's feelings) that the way in which the union of Church and State works in England, and the Erastianism which is prevalent only too often in certain high quarters, together with the non-representative character and practical impotence of Convocation, impress American Churchmen with the idea that an alliance with the Church of England cannot even be proposed, much less entered into by us, till that ancient Mother Church is free to speak her own mind by her representative bodies to the representative body of another independent national Church. This is not a plea for disestablishment on our part, but for the restoration to the Church of the ancient rights and liberties which were guaranteed her by Magna Charta.

The Church Times, in its editorial summary of Dec. 30th, from which we recently quoted, entirely agrees with the American correspondent.

It is well known that the English bishops are virtually appointed by the Crown, but instead of regarding this as in some degree a disparagement of the liberty of the Church, and as putting them at a disadvantage in comparison with the heads of the freer Churches of their own Communion, they show a marked tendency to regard it as giving them some peculiar title to precedence. We are open to correction, but we have a strong impression that this shows it self in assigning to certain of the English bishops a precedence over the primates and archbishops of other Churches, even in connection with the Lambeth Conference itself, in which, as a perfectly free and voluntary assembly, none but ecclesiastical rules have any place. The influence of the State has certainly shown itself in the past in the limitation of subjects permitted to come up for discussion at the Lambeth meetings. This constraining element must always be present, under existing circumstances.

Behind the English hierarchy stands, on the one hand, the Queen and Privy Councils; on the other, Parliament. The relations of the Church of England in these two directions are eminently unsatisfactory. The condition of affairs does not fairly represent the ancient state of things as between Church and State, but is the result of a gradual drift unguided by intelligent readjustments. Every one knows that the constitution of a committee of the Privy Council as a court of final appeal in ecclesiastical causes was a mere clumsy oversight. The position of Parliament in regard to the Church was one thing when Parliament must be composed of Churchmen; it is anomalous and ridiculous since it has become a miscellaneous body, admitting, side by side with Churchmen, the worst enemies of the Church. Yet there was never any adjustment of relations to meet new conditions. Such is the state of things which lies behind the English bishops, and must consciously or unconsciously influence their actions. It is this which, while it continues, makes it impossible that there should be "any common basis of representation on the Consultative Body as between American and English Churchmen." We could not accept decisions which were in

Deare Feast of Lent

BY THE REV. W. J. MILLER

Suggested by George Herbert's lines on Lent

"Welcome, deare Feast of Lent!" So sang the poet Whose mem'ry's dear; and who in lines so quaint Portrays the Church's life;
The saintly Herbert whose calm, holy spirit
Breathes o'er the Means of Grace a wondrous merit,
Lost in our earthly strife.

How dear, how precious are the Church's ways,
Illumined thus by the clear, brightening rays
Of His adoring love!
For service, Sacrament, and for each season,
By Him, in faith, is pleaded that true reason
Which comes from God above.

Oh, for the poet's faith in this, our day,
When faithless love and scorn would e'en gainsay
Our Mother's life of grace!
Then would that which we, heedless, now resist,
Be not the dreaded Fast, but the "deare Feast"
Of holiness and peace.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

"Americanitis" is the new and apt title for nervous prostration.

So great is the interest now in all matters pertaining to family history, that the New England Genealogical Society is rapidly gaining in membership, and its library is thronged daily. Forty women were admitted to membership last year.

The municipal authorities of Rome wish to run a new street just where the grave of Keats is situated; the remains of the poet may have to be removed.

A prize of $10,000 has been offered by a distilling company for a method of purifying their waste products, as they have been prohibited from emptying them into streams. Fish and cattle must be protected from the poison of the waste product of distilleries; but human beings are not protected from the worse poison of which the waste is the mild residue.

How shall we interest men and women—in missions, in this good work, or that? This is the question continually confronting the leaders and workers in any cause. Here is one method. "The way to educate man," Prof. Anderson has said, "is to set him to work; the best way to get him to work, is to interest him; the best way to interest him is to vitalize his task by relating it to some form of reality."

"The Spectator" in Washington has been visiting the Senate and describing what he saw there. Noting the indifference of the members to the debates, he says of one who during a speech was absorbed in the pages of The Congressional Record: "Perhaps he is reading his own speech of the day before, a much more interesting one, of course, than any that will be in to-morrow's Record. Or is this merely another evidence of the superior potency of the printed page in these last days, and do Senators speak only that their words may be read?"

Dr. Babcock, in The Independent, recalls his reading of Robinson Crusoe, and makes application of it to some current events of our day. He says: "Most unexpected relations came about between Robinson Crusoe and the surprising and surprised islander, not without elements of force and race superiority. Friday was pretty thoroughly subjugated, but it was the best thing that ever happened to him. New ideas and ideals, a new heaven and a new earth, swung into view for him. The adjustment was not the easiest thing in the world, and patience was heavily drawn upon by both, but it was worth all it cost in the end."

"Robinson Crusoe does not want to own Friday to-day. His idea is to establish a protectorate over him until he can own and govern himself in strong and intelligent self-possession. It will take time to unslave him, and cost trouble and treasure, but where stewardship and character are involved, the Anglo-Saxon Christian will not refuse to make the necessary investment."

Prof. H. W. Parker, of Yale College, in an address at the Episcopalian Club of Boston, said: "The making of Church music is likely to conduce rather to the earning of daily bread than to immortality. The hymn is not the most artistic part of the service, but to many it is the most satisfactory, because all the people sing. The Anglican chant is a musical trilobite, scarcely to be distinguished from a vegetable. Because hymns are necessarily simple, it does not follow that they are necessarily bad. The Hymnal we now have is unsatisfactory and undignified. Its proof-reading is shocking. Why have the good old minor tunes vanished from the present collections? The minor keys have been neglected in our Hymnal, or, at most, used apologetically. The ancient tunes are dry, but they keep well. The modern tunes are not dry, but they fail to keep. I will take my own selection, No. 53 of the Hymnal, 'The day of grace is done.' I wrote it myself. It is not without its redeeming features; it is tolerable enough except for its end, with an unprepared dissonance. I have heard it characterized as 'measly.' The processions in the Hymnal are vociferous enough, but weak in the knees. It is an insult to have more than one tune to a hymn; if it is the right tune, that is enough. Many of our best tunes came to us from Germany. The New England village choir quartet, and Moody and Sankey's hymns, these are the engines of war that have done more harm to religion than all the Anglican Church, which the Puritans detested. Our Hymnal to-day is a painful exhibition of vulgarity tempered by incompetency."

Isn't it "too funny for anything"? A subscriber has stopped his paper because it had in it "a picture of a bishop with a mustache"! Well, well, what next? What if we should have a picture of a bishop who parts his hair in the middle? We are alarmed and bewildered. Where shall we draw the line on bishops? And may it not become an issue for the Standing Committees? With the certificate of election they should have a photograph—or a certificate from the barber. There is no more fearful wild-fowl than a bishop with a mustache! "Papists smile," says our high-toned critic, "and I don't wonder."

John Williams, Primus

THE most prominent of the Bishops in the American Church, the Rt. Rev. J. Williams, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Connecticut, and Presiding Bishop, has entered into rest. He was born in Old or North Deerfield, Mass., on the 30th of August, 1817. His father was Ephraim Williams, a well-known lawyer of Massachusetts, who compiled the first volume of the Massachusetts Reports. His mother, Emily Trowbridge Williams, was a woman of excellent attainments, and always very near the heart of her only child. Bishop Williams was not a born Churchman—his father and mother were both Unitarians, as were so many prominent Massachusetts people in their day. In early youth he attended the academy in his own native town, but afterwards was sent to Northfield Academy. In 1831, he entered Harvard College, where he remained for two years. While at Harvard his mind began to turn toward the Church, and as a result of careful study, and through the influence and advice of a close friend, the Rev. Benjamin Davis, he was confirmed. Shortly after this change of faith, he entered Washington, now Trinity College, his father and mother cordially consenting.

While at college he saw a great deal of Bishop Brownell who, though no longer president of the college, still resided in Hartford, and took a lively interest in the college and its students. At about the same time, he became intimately acquainted with the Rev. Dr. S. F. Jarvis, one of the college professors. In 1835, he took his degree of B. A., and became a candidate for Holy Orders, entering the General Theological Seminary at New York the following autumn. But his stay in New York was of short duration, for he was called home by the sickness and death of his father, and did not again return. He went to Middletown, Conn., where, under the guidance of Dr. Jarvis who had become rector of Christ (now Trinity) church in that place, he continued his theological studies. On the 2nd of September, 1838, in the parish church in Middletown, he was ordained deacon. From that time until 1840, he was a tutor in Trinity College, Hartford. At the close of his tutorship he and his mother went abroad, spending nearly a year in England and Scotland, and a short time on the continent. On his return, in 1841, he was ordained by Bishop Brownell, and became the assistant of Dr. Jarvis, remaining with him one year. From Middletown he went to St. George's church, Schenectady, over which he was rector until 1848, when he was elected president of Trinity College. On Oct. 29, 1851, he was consecrated Assistant Bishop of Connecticut, in St. John's church, Hartford, having been unanimously elected by the diocesan convention.

In 1853, he resigned the presidency of Trinity College. To him Trinity owes a great deal, for he did much to establish it on a firm basis, and increase its endowments. For several years he was vice-chancellor, and when he became Bishop of the diocese, was by virtue of his office made chancellor. Trinity College had always been very dear to him, and it is safe to say no one in the hearts of each succeeding college generation had a warmer place than the Bishop of the diocese who was indeed a father to all the young men, whom they loved and revered; and not only they, but all the young men who were brought up under him felt the same love and affection for him, even when they had children of their own old enough to go away to college.

Bishop Williams became the diocesan on the death of Bishop Brownell, which occurred Jan. 13, 1865. He held many honorary titles: S. T. D., Union, 1847; D.D., Trinity, 1849; D.D., Columbia, 1851; D.D., Yale, 1883; LL.D., Hobart. Bishop Williams had been Chairman of the House of Bishops since 1883, and for five years before he became Presiding Bishop he was made "assessor" to Bishop Lee, the Presiding Bishop. In 1887 he became Presiding Bishop.

He was not a voluminous writer. He published a volume of poems, in his younger days, and more recently, his "Notes on the Acts of the Apostles," besides many sermons on special occasions.

In 1884, Bishop Williams went abroad to represent the American Church at the centenary of the consecration of Bishop Seabury, and also as the direct successor of that Bishop in the see which he held. On that occasion, he preached the anniversary sermon, which has since been published. While fond of travel, and always a most companionable man, he never found much time to spend outside of his own diocese, unless the general welfare of the Church called him to do so. He was thoroughly devoted to his diocese. A hard worker and a close student, he held that his place was at home, and that God and his Church were first to be served.

His labors have been abundantly rewarded. He saw his diocese grow to be one of the strongest in the land. Though small in extent—only one-tenth the size of the State of New York—it contains nearly 30,000 communicants. Washington College has developed into Trinity, with its fine buildings and large, though not sufficient, endowments. Its few professors in the olden days have given place to the strong faculty of to-day. Berkeley Divinity School, which was founded mainly through his efforts in 1854, has become a strong theological seminary, with good buildings and an ample endowment. The Bishop's Fund has also grown so that its income is amply sufficient to support the episcopate without any tax upon the diocese. St. Margaret's, a flourishing girl's school, self-supporting, has been founded at Waterbury, and all over the diocese commodious churches have been erected. His clergy are well housed and well paid, and along every line, great progress has been made.

As we look back over his life, which has been a long one in the service of God, we feel constrained to say, here was a father in God who was a father indeed, and his children, clerical and lay, gladly gave him reverence, and loved him as children love their own fathers after the flesh.

Book Reviews and Notices

Sonnets and a Dream. By Wm. Reed Huntington, D.D. New York: The Marion Press.

We have not been accustomed to think of Dr. Huntington as a poet. He comes before us as the well-armed champion in the arena of debate, ready with keen lance to pierce the unlucky opponent who, without due forethought, picks up the glove of challenge. We find, however, in this little volume, poetic thoughts, couched in the most graceful words. Sonnets are hard to write well, but these bear the closest scrutiny. In the sonnet, "After Santiago," we notice the following beautiful lines. They are a good sample of the excellence of the whole:

"Thou sawest God's angel at the anvil stand
And forge the steel. He smote it blow on blow;
Wrathful he seemed, yet ever from above
He stooped the while, and swiftly dipt the brand
In tears, yea tears, that he might make thee know
How vain were vengeance, unannealed by love."

The Mediaeval Empire. By Herbert Fisher. New York and London: The Macmillan Company.

Voltaire, whose wit even yet sparkles, long as he has been dead, once said that the "Holy Roman Empire was neither holy, Roman, nor empire," and in his day, the antiquated, worm-eaten thing calling itself by that name, justified his epigram. There was a time, however, when there was a real empire, when it had a close, if fatal, connection with Rome, and when people generally thought it holy enough to have as its great duty the Christianizing of the world. That is the time treated of in this book, from Otto I, 936 A. D., who revived the dying empire of Charlemagne, to Frederic II, A. D. 1214. It may be asked why, after Mr. Bryce's splendid work on the Holy Roman Empire, it was necessary to write another book, but it will be found that not much of the ground Mr. Bryce occupied has been trespassed upon. Moreover, this period of history is so fascinating that it is ever attracting able pens. Numberless are the German histories of these centuries, but they are very often dusty and dry, and some of the best are not translated. This book is written in a clear, vivid style, and will be found very readable. Two great questions were decided between 900 and 1300, and those were that there was to be no united Italy, and no united German people. It was reserved for the nineteenth century nearly to accomplish those great works. During that period also, the experiment was tried of gathering the German and the Italian peoples under one rule, and it failed. There are most interesting chapters on the influence of the German Empire in law and administration, on the German nobility and German Church, on the imperial legislation in Italy and Sicily, on the relations of the emperors with the city of Rome, and the reciprocal influence of German and Italian culture. The Hohenstaufen line, extending over three hundred years, gives material for brilliant pictures. Its men were all active and zealous sovereigns, some of them very wise ones, and one of them, Frederic II, a genius. They were all governed by a single idea, or rather, by the tradition that they were Roman emperors, successors of Caesar Augustus. This delusion mastered them, and ruined them, for the spirit and economics of German society were incompatible with aristocracy. They seem to have been utterly blind to the fact that the real Latin emperor was the Pope, and the practical Roman Empire, the Roman Church.

Jerusalem the Holy. By Edwin Sherman Wallace. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Illustrated. Price, $1.50.

Mr. Wallace, as American Consul in Jerusalem for five years, had excellent opportunities for studying the history and present condition of the Holy City, and he made the most of these opportunities. His book gives a capital history of the city under its successive owners, from the Canaanites to the Mohammedans, adding many facts recently discovered. His descriptions of the present condition and inhabitants is the product of a keen observer and a careful writer. The illustrations are a valuable addition. The style of the writer is attractive, and one finishes the book with the regret that there is no more. Next to a visit to the Holy City, such a book as this gives to the interested reader and student a more than passing glimpse of the city which was once the glory of the earth. Mr. Wallace's opinions of the future of the city are valuable; one can only hope that they may be realized, and that the dream of crusaders and others may yet prove more than visionary. To Bible classes and Sunday school teachers, the book is almost a necessity.

Hymns and Hymn Makers. By the Rev. Duncan Campbell. New York: The Mandeville Co., Agents for Messrs. Block, London.

One wonders that in the face of Dr. Julian's tremendous Dictionary of Hymnology anybody should attempt another book on that subject; but the difficulty with Dr. Julian's book is that only rich Christians can afford to buy it. A cheaper book is therefore really useful. There is a long list of writers on hymnology, and Dr. Campbell has laid them all, as well as Dr. Julian, under contribution. He gives us, in small compass, a great deal of useful and interesting information about the hymn writers with whom we are most familiar and like the best. The writers mentioned are arranged alphabetically, and so can readily be found. This volume forms one of an admirable guild library, at thirty-seven and a half cents a volume, prepared for Presbyterian parish guilds. We wish there were as good a one for Church guilds.

Cranford. By Mrs. Gaskell. With preface by Anne Thackeray Ritchie. With forty colored illustrations and sixty pen and ink sketches by Hugh Thomson. London and New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $2.

What shall one say of such an old favorite as "Cranford"? Shall one affect to believe that it is not known and beloved of many? And should one introduce it to notice by quoting the sober commendation of the critics, as "a masterly delineation of a little world of English provincial society"? Lord Houghton wrote of the book as "the finest piece of humoristic description that has been added to literature since Charles Lamb." But does that give one an idea of this "home of the Amazons"—of dear Miss Matty, Miss Pole, and Miss Jenkins, of all the natural and social charms of a place "where economy was always elegant," and where "some might be poor, but all were aristocratic"? But the publishers have given Cranford lovers a delightful volume in this reprint of 1898, with the most quaint, delicious, colored illustrations. There are forty of the latter, besides sixty pen-and-ink sketches. An olive-green cover, richly and heavily ornamented in gold, completes a handsome volume.

What Shall Our Boys do for a Living? By Charles F. Wingate. New York: The Doubleday & McClure Company. Price, $1.

Mr. Wingate has given us a useful and interesting book upon a topic but little treated heretofore. Peculiarly adapted by his own experience for the work he has undertaken, he writes understandingly and convincingly, and he deserves a careful reading. His articles deal with the plain facts regarding different occupations, particularly the new ones, setting forth their advantages and drawbacks, and giving practical and specific information regarding them. He shows the value of thorough training, emphasizing the fact that there is a demand for capable men in every calling, and laying special stress upon inclination and aptitude. The book is broad, serious in purpose, practical, worthy of more than superficial consideration. In many cases it will fulfill the author's hope "by setting up a few guideposts on life's pathway to prevent the beginner from taking a leap in the dark, and to save him from wasted effort."

For the clergy we know of no better, no more profitable Lenten reading, than Bishop McLaren's new book, "The Holy Priest," treating of the nature, duty, grace, trials, and helps of sanctity. Further notice of this book will be given; we call attention to it as early in the season as possible. Published by the Young Churchman Co., Milwaukee. [Price, $1 net].

ANOTHER helpful and inexpensive book for Lenten use to which we have not before called attention, is "Thoughts for the Lenten Season," by Mrs. C. H. Smith, published by James Pott & Co., New York. Mrs. Smith is well-known as a writer on Church subjects, and is a teacher to be trusted. This booklet is of a practical character, giving suggestions about the meaning and keeping of Lent, and on the Christian character.

ANNA R. B. LINDSAY, PH. D., in another of her admirable series of little books, answers the question: "What Good Does Wishing Do?" She shows that wishing is worth while, if one conforms to the law of right desire—letting wishing be one with the Will of God. The small volume is pretty in its cover of white, with design of thistles in color. It is published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., of New York and Boston, and it costs thirty-five cents.

WITH the beginning of Lent, many of our readers are enquiring for books suitable for the season, and we trust these may be found by reference to our advertising columns, and announcements of books received. We have before us an excellent Lenten companion entitled, "Quadragesima," by the Rev. Reginald Heber Howe, D.D., inscribed to his father, the late Bishop of Central Pennsylvania. It contains a short reading for every day in the season, original and compiled. With great brevity and simplicity the author teaches the lessons which Lent suggests, illustrating each theme by well-chosen quotations from devotional writers. The book is a treasure house of beautiful thoughts, of flowers plucked from every garden, of gems drawn from every mine. Published by Thomas Whittaker, New York. [Paper covers, 50 cents; cloth, $1].

Periodicals

The February issue of The Sanitarian is wholesome reading for all intelligent people. Several articles ought to have a wide circulation among the people, as the one on "Slaughter Houses," "Infection in the Toilet," "The Treatment of Children," "Pavement and Public Health," etc. [Dr. A. N. Bell, editor, 337 Clinton st., Brooklyn, N. Y., $4 a year.]

Chronologically, February is a red-letter

month in the history of the United States, as in that month the two Presidents whom the people most venerate and love to honor were born. Recognizing this fact, the first places in the contents of Self Culture are given to an interesting study of the characteristics of Washington as a statesman and as a man of strong individuality in all the walks of life, by Henry Wade Rogers, president of Northwestern University; and to a similar resume of those sterling, honest, and manly traits that gave Lincoln the place he holds in the hearts of all true Americans. There is an illustrated article on Columbia University, a description of Devil's Island, Dreyfus' prison, and an article on "The Tsar and Universal Peace," by Henry Davies, Ph.D., besides others.

In the February number of the American Monthly Review of Reviews, the editor seeks to apply the lessons of our national failures in the South during the reconstruction period following the Civil War, to the present problems of a similar nature in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines. His deductions are interesting and instructive. A large proportion of space in this number of the Review is given up to editorial and contributed articles on the management of foreign dependencies. Sylvester Baxter contributes an interesting study of the Dutch rule in Java, and Dr. Daniel Dorchester makes a statistical exhibit of the recent drift toward colonial and protectorate governments. The subject of the character sketch is Aguinaldo, the Filipino insurgent leader. A very remarkable career is here outlined by one who has known the young leader intimately.

The February Cosmopolitan opens with a much-illustrated description of the Emperor William's journey into the Holy Land, by Samuel I. Curtiss. The author says that never before in the history of the Turkish Empire were such elaborate preparations made for the reception of a guest. From Damascus to Jerusalem, streets were repaved, roads were repaired or constructed, and there were everywhere evidences of fresh paint and whitewash. The Turkish troops were drilled for months in anticipation of the great event. In "After the Capture of Manila," Mr. Frank R. Roberson describes a visit to the Philippines after Dewey's victory. He thinks that the question whether Americans can with advantage exercise permanent dominion in the tropics depends mainly upon whether they can succeed in mastering tropical diseases. Henry F. Bryant explains the gigantic systems of "City Subways for Pipes and Wires," and the editor of the Cosmopolitan, Mr. John Brisben Walker, begins a serial, "How an Empire was Built," the empire in question being that which the followers of Mohammed established.

GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS.—We have already chronicled a declared purpose on the part of our Roman Catholic friends to secure from Congress, if possible, a prolongation of the contract school system. But that would clearly be unwise, unless a clear necessity for doing so can be shown in the government's inability to provide enough schools of its own during the next fiscal year. The contract schools have done a good work, and doubtless some, if not all, of them will keep on in their original spheres of instruction and training. But it is evident that the Government's need of their facilities has nearly or quite ceased. No doubt some of them have been at expense in enlarging their buildings or increasing other appliances, with a view to accommodating government pupils. But this has been done without any stipulation on the part of our government to continue to use them, and now the five years of ratification must be considered as all that could be fairly insisted upon. The matter ought to end here now and forever.

THE TREATY AND THE PHILIPPINES.—It is very hard to be patient with the type of man that insists upon settling a problem first and examining it afterward. Yet that is exactly the attitude of those members of the Senate who have been trying to amend the treaty with Spain by tacking on to it a declaration that we do not intend to stay permanently in the Philippines. Spain has simply given us a quit-claim deed. It was necessary for the best interests of every one that Spain should be eliminated from the Philippine situation. Spain having thus been eliminated, by virtue of the agreement at Paris, and by virtue further of the concrete fact of military evacuation, nothing could be much more ridiculous than for us to volunteer to make statements to Spain concerning our intentions for the future. We do not know enough at the present moment to declare to the world our permanent policy. We owe some duties to the next generation, and we have no right to declare permanent policies—in matters that must concern the Americans of the next century much more than they concern the men now living—without first having taken the trouble to know what we are about. There is present work to do; and the problems of the future cannot be settled until they are reached.

N. Y. Evening Post

HONOR IN THE ARMY.—The brutish behavior of Gen. Eagan, with all that led up to it, has done more to make the nation feel insecure than the loss of a great battle. If army officers cannot rule their own spirits, they cannot rule their men, and are worthless for national defence. When honor dies in the army, the army is dead. It is unfortunately the case, also, that examples of military dereliction are coming to us from other parts of the world, to make us fear that the soldier's standard of honor is endangered. One of the lamentable things about the Dreyfus affair is that seven brother officers condemned him without a particle of evidence that he was guilty. This has been confessed by one of the original court-martial. A Deputy has declared in print that he is able to prove that one of the military judges expressed his sorrow and repentance in the presence of a distinguished naval officer, for having brought in a verdict of guilty, without proof. "We were about to acquit him unanimously," he explained; but on the strength of a simple affirmation of the Minister of War, the court-martial found Dreyfus guilty. In England, too, they are having their uneasy sensations about the army. Mr. Bennett's story in The Contemporary about the butchering of the wounded after Omdurman, and the looting that went on, is doubtless exaggerated in many respects; but when all allowances are made, it is clear that too much wild work was done. Savagery does not lie far under the surface in the fighting man, be he Dervish or Seaforth Highlander; and it is a most disagreeable revelation, that military discipline cannot be depended upon to hold barbarian instincts in check.

The Shelbyville Missionary Box

BY H. E. R.

THE Woman's Auxiliary of Trinity church, Shelbyville, N. Y., was planning its winter's work, and about to choose the family to whom it would send its first box. The society had been recently formed, but its members were ready and willing to take hold of any work with the zeal that marked them in all things. This winter, the Relief Society, of which the Auxiliary women were members, had successfully accomplished its annual sale, the lecture course was completed, accounts made up, and the small balance turned over to the maintenance fund. The time seemed ripe to take up the needs of some missionary in the West.

Shelbyville was Eastern and conservative; it had few poor families, and took care of them; it wore fashionable and expensive clothing, and expected the self-respecting world to do the same. The church was out of debt and in receipt of a good income, but had never been prominent as a giver to any missionary cause, and its women had never been stirred to any but feeble interest in the work of missions. Recently, however, a president of diocesan work in the West had visited among them, and by her pleasing personality, her winning manners, and her simple, direct way of presenting the cause, at an informal afternoon talk, had so inspired them that they had formed a branch of the Auxiliary, and were now in correspondence with the diocesan secretary who had sent them a number of letters from different missionaries with families of varying sizes and all the needs of a small income far from the avenue of opportunity. After a pleasant discussion of the personnel presented by the different letters, they decided on the family of the Rev. Mr. Dixon, of Windom City, Minnesota, as affording opportunity for giving pleasure and comfort to a number and variety of people. There were two young girls: one, Mary, in school; the other, Belle, at home, playing the organ in her father's chapel; three boys, from seven to twelve, besides Mr. Dixon and his wife, all wanting everything, anything in the way of clothing for each, as well as house linen, blankets, stationery, and ink.

The ladies put forth their best efforts to get the box away before Christmas, and before the middle of December, met in the guild rooms and packed the donations, which came in goodly number and quantity: A new clerical suit for Mr. Dixon, new suits for the boys, sermon paper and a large stone bottle of ink—placed in the middle of the box in blankets—yards of dress goods for Mrs. Dixon and each of the daughters, shoes with the toes of civilization, for each, some discarded games and books in good order, an outgrown jacket well made and lined, of Belle Dixon's measures. So far all was good and fitting, but at the underwear and blankets there were some questioning and critical looks, with some quiet remarks of disapproval that clothing so much worn should be sent to people whose wants they could scarcely supply, and who of all others in that cold country, should receive it ready to put on. It was decided, however, that some of it could be cut down and refitted, and some of it could be worn at once, and they all hoped that Mrs. Dixon was a skillful needlewoman, with a great deal of spa time, although the last seemed scarcely likely. Anyway, there was no time to get more, and they had gotten so much better dresses and suits than they anticipated, that all the money was gone, and they must get the box off at once to have it get to Windom City by Christmas. They had put much love and thought into it, and it was their first one. It was of goodly value in money, and the girls had some pretty new ribbons and neckties, which, it was hoped, would make up for what was lacking. On the whole, the ladies were pleased with the box, and hoped that in the vague "out there" they would not mind the worn and thin underwear when they saw the books and games and the boxes of dainty, girlish trifles, marked lovingly, "for Belle," "for Mary," and they hoped that the weather was as mild in Minnesota as it was in New York, and that everything would get there all right.

Days came and went, and finally brought the anticipated letter from Mr. Dixon to the secretary. It was eagerly opened and read, sadly folded, passed to the president, folded again, thought over, and finally read to the Auxiliary. All that it said was:

MRS. AINSWORTH:

Dear Madame: Box received. Thank you for the goods for the family. What we could not use we distributed among the deserving poor.

Very truly yours,

WM. C. DIXON.

Windom City, Dec. 28, 1896.

The reading was received in profound silence, expressions of pleased anticipation being succeeded by looks of disappointment. All were more or less angry, some showing it by tightened lips and uplifted chins, and some by tearful eyes. It was their box, and their first box, and they were grievously disappointed that it should have been so little appreciated. Nothing was said, however, but the spirit of the meeting grew very tense as the motion was made to place the letter upon the minutes. After adjournment, however, there was a hastily formed gathering, at which each had an opportunity of speaking her mind, and at this it was the consensus of opinion that it would be a long while before they packed another box, while the secretary and treasurer each said that she would never serve another year as an officer in that or any other auxiliary! The pleasant feeling of a single cause during the preparation of the box, and the friendly interest in the Dixon family, had all gone. The expense and style of the new things was somewhat aggressively commented upon, and the condition of the worn ones was not mentioned.

Finally, assertive little Mrs. Dowie who was always wholesome and cheery, said: "Well, perhaps they liked the things better than we know, and perhaps if we had put ourselves in the place of the wife of a missionary priest, we would not have sent some of the things that we did. Probably they are just as particular about wearing patched things as we are, or they would be if they had better ones, and if we could not cut down the flannels, probably Mrs. Dixon couldn't either. She probably had no end of demands upon her time. That brown jacket had a spot on it, too, and perhaps Belle Dixon found it just as difficult to cover it up as Elsie did. The fact that they live on a reservation does not mean that they are senseless, and when you think that this box is the greater part of what they have during the year, you may be sure that if it is a disappointment, it is a very keen one."

"But there was so much that was nice and desirable," said Mrs. Fenwick. "What about that, Mrs. Ainsworth? Do you think it was gracious to ignore the good things, and make no acknowledgment of them?"

"Well," said Mrs. Ainsworth, "it certainly would have been pleasanter had we had a nice letter particularizing the articles, saying 'how nicely the suits fitted,' 'how pleased the girls were with their dresses,' 'how Mrs. Dixon was overcome with the joy of the house things,' and 'how they all thanked the good women of Trinity church.' We should all have felt smoothed and happy, and ready to pack another box next month for another family who should write us another letter of praise. It is far pleasanter to work with and for appreciative and gracious people, but certainly, dear friends, we are not working for appreciation and graciousness, although it would appear so today, when they have been withheld. We work for our Master's smile, which is given to each when she has done her best, and given to her best, and perhaps this cold letter is to remind us that we think too much of the result and too little of the work. I grant you that it stimulates and inspires a better feeling in the Auxiliary to have a warm letter from the missionary on any subject, but I also believe that we should do our work for them irrespective of the quality of their response, or even if there be no response. I am not surprised that you are disappointed in this letter; I am disappointed myself, but let us not be disheartened. If each of us did and gave the best she could, we may safely leave the result with God, even if we never know what they thought of our efforts, and the lesson to us may be much more valuable than the pleasure we might have had in listening to the letter of our choice. We do not know their point of view; perhaps they were disappointed in everything; they may be ill, and, most supposable of all, Mr. Dixon may have no gift at specializing. But let us not for one moment think of relaxing our efforts for the lonely, self-denying men and women who live far from everything that to us makes life rich; and whatever word of acknowledgment may or may not come in return, let us lovingly send them of our best."

The ladies separated quietly and slowly, and talked very little of the box or of the letter, but when the next was packed, there was even more care and love in every corner, and there were no half-worn clothes. From it there has as yet been no response, but Mrs. Dowie told her husband that she "hoped to goodness that the Mrs. did the letter-writing in that family."

The Making of a Bible

HOW many of us know through what processes a Bible must pass before it is ready for sale? Here are a few facts about the famous Oxford University warehouse methods of producing the Bible, which should be of interest. The famous Oxford bindings are executed in a bindery in Aldersgate street, London. Here the skins of upwards of 100,000 animals are used yearly to cover Oxford Bibles alone, and 400,000 sheets of gold leaf are required to letter the backs of the volumes; the quantity used in gilding the edges being much larger. After the sheets have been printed they are sent to the bindery at Aldersgate, where they are folded, and in the case of the more expensive books, this is done by hand to secure exactness, and to make sure that no faulty sheets are used. After folding, the sheets have to be collated, and when a set is complete, the marks which have been printed on the sheets for the guidance of the binder should run in a diagonal from left to right on the backs of the folded sections. If a section by accident has been put in its wrong place, the tell-tale marks soon show the fault. After being rolled, the sheets are stitched. The best books are sewn with silk, and with great care. Silk sewing is stronger than thread, and makes the book more compact. The rough edges of the book are then cut, the back made solid, and it is ready for gilding. The next process is the rounding of the back, and the corresponding hollowing of the front edge. The cheap books are done by machinery, and the best by means of a flat hammer. On the cheap books, the gilding is done before the rounding; but on the best books, the gilding is done "in the round," and this accounts for the solid, burnished appearance of the gold.

Now follows one portion of unappreciated work—the placing of the little piece of silk braid which is at the top and bottom of the back; this is done by hand on the book purely for appearance. With this, the book is practically ready for its cover. In the room in which the leather is stored are beautiful skins of all kinds, the purchase of which is in itself a very important matter. Those who are frightened by the destructive work of the "German scissors" of the German Higher Critics will perhaps be reassured by the fact that the best, strongest, and lustiest binding of the Oxford Bible is done with the skins of German goats—morocco, to wit. The great art in cutting up a skin is to cut as many covers from it as possible with the least waste. An individual who recently visited the bindery saw a number of cut skins for the beautiful yapp covers of the Bible. It would be impossible to turn over the edges of these covers if the leather was not thinned there; and this is very carefully done with a hand knife, which is an art that takes some time to acquire. If one of the yapp covers is examined, it is almost impossible to find where the kid with which it is lined is fastened on to the morocco, with such exquisite neatness is the work done. The last stage of all is the lettering. The words "Holy Bible" are put on at one operation. First it is done "in blind"—that is, without gold. The impression thus made is treated with some gummy substance, and covered with a piece of gold leaf. On this the heated letters are placed again, and the gold is forced into the impression already made. The unused gold leaf is carefully wiped off, and as carefully preserved. The Bible is then ready for sale.—Church Review.

Ancestral Worship in China

BY V. D. CHANG

THROUGHOUT the whole country of China, one can hardly find any place where the people do not believe in the worship of ancestors. This custom has existed in China for thousands of years, so that the people regard it as the most righteous thing in a man's career. In place after place we can see temples of immense size built by the descendants for the special purpose of worshipping their ancestors. These temples contain wooden tablets painted with various colors, on which the names and ages of the deceased are inscribed. Festivals are celebrated twice a year: one in spring and the other in winter, at which times members of the family bow down before those tablets with great reverence, and mock-silver dollars and sycee are burnt for the dead. These are supposed to be converted into real money in the other world and to be used as we use real money in this world.

This custom of worship has become so deeply rooted in the hearts of the Chinese that they do not care much about other religions. It is realized by all Westerners that this custom is undoubtedly the greatest obstacle which hinders the Chinese becoming Christians. It is not the affection for Buddhism or Taoism, but for the worship of ancestors.

Although this worship seems baseless, yet there are several reasons which can be given as the true foundations of ancestral worship.

First. It is the teaching of our great teacher Confucius, and in one of his classics he said that although our ancestors have been dead for such a long time we must still bear them in our mind and offer them regular sacrifices. Because he himself was a believer in ancestral worship, so people think it is right for them to hold this belief most firmly. But still the people have misunderstood the meaning, for the true meaning of ancestral worship is to remember their dead parents. Now they believe that ancestors possess a ruling power over their living descendants, which is able to destroy them if sacrifices are not regularly and respectfully offered. For this reason the Chinese become ardent worshippers of their ancestors.

Secondly. The worship of ancestors is partly due to the filial piety of the Chinese. Not to worship their ancestors they regard as equivalent to an entire forgetfulness of filial duty. Confucius said that "sacrifices to deceased parents should be offered in compliance with propriety and ancient custom." If this be neglected it is looked upon as a great crime. By the erection of different sized tablets in different parts of China we can at once assure ourselves that our Chinese are very obedient to their parents. If once parents are attacked by any sickness they wait by their bedsides patiently until the sickness is thoroughly cured. After the death of their parents they think that in order to make the dead cheerful they must use certain ceremonies; thus the ancestral worship is carried out in this immense empire. Things which their parents loved are often used in offerings, and persons whom their parents regarded with affection are often invited to attend the celebrations. We see that this worship is the only one that is held firmly by our Chinese, and the dead parents are the objects of worship.

Thirdly. The Chinese believe that a man possesses three souls, which are imperishable. After his death one goes into the wooden tablet, where it receives worship of his descendants; the other remains in the grave, where it receives visits once a year, usually in the spring-time; while the third one goes into the infernal world to receive punishment or reward from Pluto, the ruler of the infernal world, according to the deeds he has done in this world.

After remaining in that world for some time the spirit is supposed to transmigrate into a man or into some animal.

Again, the Chinese believe that spirits in the other world require the same comforts and necessities as the people of this world. Therefore boxes of clothing with all articles complete, such as mats and bed curtains, are carefully gathered together, and are presented with the sacrifices. But all these things are forwarded to them through the medium of fire.

In conclusion we may hope that the Chinese will some day find out the true injuries of ancestral worship, and get rid of those superstitions and unnecessary ceremonies, which they have practised from older times to the present day, although still retaining a pious remembrance of the dead.—The St. John's Echo.

AT the Lambeth Conference, when some discussions were taking place upon the newer criticism of the Bible, Bishop Whipple told this story: A master said to his slave, "Do you believe the Bible?" The answer was, "Yes, massa." "Do you understand it?" questioned the master. "I knows a good deal, massa," was the return. "Well, what does this mean: 'Whom He did foreknow, He did predestinate?'" "Where is dat, massa?" was the query. "In Romans," was the reply. "O massa," the slave exclaimed, "I explain this yere whole religious business; yer can't begin dere; yer begin with Matthew, an' yer try ter do all the dear Lord tell yer ter do all through Matthew, an' Mark, an' Luke, an' John, and when yer gits ter dis here place, it'll be easy enough; but dear massa, yer can't begin dere!"

Abraham Lincoln's First Muster

BY BELLE V. CHISHOLM

IT was nearly three-quarters of a century ago, away back in the early twenties, that Abraham Lincoln, then a big, over-grown, awkward boy of fourteen, celebrated Washington's Birthday by attending muster at Gentryville.

Though Abe had never before seen a muster, nor heard the beat of a drum, he forgot the novelty of the day in listening to the address on "Washington," which Squire Gondefre made from the "upping block," in front of Offert's store.

Musters were great occasions in those days, and in little country places like Gentryville, all the men and boys, far and near, were sure to be there. You may think it a little strange that a boy of fourteen had not read for himself a dozen times over that wonderful "Declaration of Independence," which on that day was listened to for the very first time by the future President of the United States. But you must remember that the advantages of these days were not in the possession of the people of this country seventy-five years ago, and though Honest Abe could read and write, and had been taught a great deal about the Revolutionary times, up to this time he had never had a chance of hearing that wonderful document read—of understanding fully the part Washington took in earning for himself the title of "Father of his Country."

Whiskey-drinking was much more common among respectable people in the first half of the century than at the present. Almost any kind of a gathering without a good supply of whiskey to put "speerrits" into the company, was an unheard-of thing. Muster-day, the big day of the year, was also whiskey-day in many places, and Gentryville was no exception to the general rule in this respect. "Old rye" had circulated freely among the grown-ups in the ranks that day, and towards evening the boys, having treated themselves from their father's jugs, became a little quarrelsome, as well as funny. Abe's "angel mother," before she died, had instilled such strong temperance principles into the boy's mind, that no amount of entreating or cajoling could induce him to join in dram-drinking even on his first muster-day. The gang of boys grouped near Abe became so noisy during the oration that he was obliged several times to change his position in order to catch the drift of the speaker's remarks. The boys had taken just enough whiskey to rouse the rowdy element fully in them, and in a spirit of defiance, followed Abe wherever he went. The boy bore the annoyance good-naturedly for awhile, but at last, indignant at the repeated interruptions, he gave the fellows warning that he would not tolerate their disturbances any longer. Abe had no reputation as a pugilist, but these Gentryville "smarties" knew enough of the backwoods-lad, from former experiences, to understand that he could not be "hazed" into a coward; consequently when he marched off with a dare-you-follow-me look in his eye, hisses and groans were all the thick-tongued rabble ventured to fling after him.

As in the olden days, the 'Squire's oration was full of Washington, inspiring in the heart of young Lincoln an enthusiasm that sent him home burning with a desire to know more of the great man who heretofore had seemed more of a dream than a reality.

Learning that a man some six miles up the creek owned a copy of Washington's life, Abraham did not rest that night until he had footed the whole distance, and begged the loan of the book. "Sartin, sartin," said the owner. "The book is fairly well worn, but no leaves are missin', and a lad keen enough to read as to walk six miles to get a book, ought to be encouraged." It was a much-worn copy of Weem's "Life of Washington," and Abe, thanking the stranger for his kindness, walked back under the stars, stopping every little while to catch a glimpse of the features of the "Father of his Country," as shown in the frontispiece, which he could see by the moonlight. After reaching home, tired as he was, he could not close his eyes until, by the light of a pine-knot, he had found out all that was recorded regarding the boyhood of the man who had so suddenly sprung into prominence in his mind.

In the busy harvest season, he had no time to read or study during the day, but every night, long after the other members of the family were sleeping peacefully, Abe lay stretched upon the floor, with his book on the hearth, reading, reading, reading; the pine-knot in the fire-place furnishing all the light he needed; the fire inside burning with such intense heat as to kindle a blaze that grew and increased until it placed him in the highest seat in the gift of his countrymen. What a marvelous insight into the human heart did Abraham Lincoln get between the backs of that wonderful book. The little cabin grew to be a paradise, as he learned from the printed pages the story of one great man's life. The barefooted boy, in buckskin breeches so shrunken that they reached only half way between the knee and ankle, actually asked himself whether there might not be some place great and honorable awaiting him in the future.

Before this treasured "Life of Washington" was returned to its owner, it met with such a mishap as to almost ruin it. The book, which was lying on a board upheld by two pegs, was completely soaked by the rain that dashed between the logs one night when a storm beat with unusual force against the north end of the cabin. Abraham was heart broken over the catastrophe, and sadly carried it back to its owner, offering to work to pay for the damage done. The man consented, and the borrower worked for three days, at seventy-five cents a day, and thus himself became the possessor of the old, faded, stained book,—a book that had more to do with shaping his life, perhaps, than any one other thing. Abe had not expected to take the book back with him, but

In August our babe, then 8 months old, had a very severe attack of cholera infantum; she had also been troubled with indigestion from birth, and previous to her sickness had always used condensed milk. merely to pay for the damage done, and was surprised when the man handed it to him when starting. He was very grateful, however, and when he gave expression to his feelings, the old man said, patting him on the shoulder: "You have earned it, my boy, and are welcome to it. It's a mighty fine thing to have a head for books, just as fine to have a heart for honesty; and if you keep agoin' as you have started, maybe some day you'll git to be president yourself. President Abraham Lincoln! That would sound fust-rate, fust-rate. Now, wouldn't it, sonny?"

"It's not a very handsome name, to be sure," Abe replied, looking as though he thought such an event possible, away off in the future. "No, it's not a very handsome name; but I guess it's about as handsome as its owner," he added, glancing at the reflection of his homely features in the little old-fashioned, cracked mirror hanging opposite where he sat.

"Handsome is that handsome does," said the old farmer, nodding his gray head in an approving style. "Yes, indeed; handsome deeds make handsome men. We hain't a nation of royal idiots, with one generation of kings passin' away to make room for another. No, sir-ee. In this free country of ours, the rich and poor stand equal chances, and a boy without money is just as likely to work up to the presidential chair as the one who inherits from his parents lands and stocks, and moneys and influence. It's brains that count in this land of liberty, and Abraham Lincoln has just as much right to sit in the highest seat in the land, as Washington's son himself, if he had had a son, which he hadn't."

Who knows but that the future War President of this great Republic received his first aspirations to such an honor from this kindly neighbor's homely words. At any rate, his life of toil for something better, truer, higher, was accentuated by this incident, and with increased, untiring labor he went on and up, without help, without rest, until ten—twenty—forty years later, the life he had devoted to the land of his birth, his love, his liberty, was wrenched from his grasp, and without knowing, without even dreaming of the height of his greatness, or the depths of the love of his people, he was, without one moment's warning, transferred from his earthly toil to his heavenly rest. How sad that he was not spared to realize the extent of his work, to enjoy the triumph of his leading; but the divinity that shapes our ends was not lacking even in the firing of the assassin's bullet. "There are no accidents in the Providence of God." Such lives as that of Abraham Lincoln are not accidents in American history. They are rather the great books from whose pages we catch inspiration, and in which we read God's purposes for the progress of the human race.

A Miniature Monarchy

THE "Ship's company" of a man-of-war is like a small, limited monarchy, in which the Captain is the monarch, his powers limited only by the "Articles for the Better Government of the Navy of the United States," otherwise known as the Articles of War, and the orders and regulations of the Navy Department. With this restriction his word is law; his mandates must be obeyed to the letter by all on board. The commissioned officers are the nobles, the aristocracy. Between them and the crew there is a social gulf as wide as that between a British peer and a shopkeeper. There is none but official communication between these two elements; yet the officer has the nobleman's solicitude for his people, and the men have the corresponding respect, loyalty and oftentimes affection for their officers. The burghers are the warrant officers—the boatswain, gunner, sail-maker and carpenter, all worthy, important men, entitled to the prefix "Mr." before their names when addressed by either superiors or inferiors. The naval cadets or "middies," are the student class. The crew represents the great body of the people. In it are to be found the representatives of nearly every trade. There are the "yeomen," as they are technically termed, who are the clerks and storekeepers. The paymaster's yeomen keep record of and serve out the clothing and miscellaneous stores consumed by the ship's company; the ship's yeoman is the storekeeper for cordage, oil, canvas, hardware, and the like; the engineer's yeoman is the custodian of the mechanic's tools, spare pieces of machinery, and general engineer's supplies. There are pharmacists, "bay-men," or nurses, electricians, carpenters, machinists, blacksmiths, boiler makers, painters, tailors, ship's-writers, printers, baker's, and, naturally, the essentially nautical artisans, such as calker's, riggers, and the like.—Harper's Round Table.

"Oh, my friends, there are some spectacles that one never forgets!" said a lecturer, after describing an accident he had witnessed. "I'd like to know where they sell 'em," remarked an old lady in the audience, who is always mislaying her glasses.

Finance and Commerce

Bradstreet gives the bank clearings of 76 cities in this country for January, at 8½ billion dollars, in round figures. This is 41 per cent. greater than those of January, 1898, and 88 per cent. over January, 1897. The gain over last year in cities outside of New York, was 20 per cent. This very likely represents about the rate of increase in the general business of the country, perhaps a little more than represents it.

However, it is enough. In New York city the increase was 51 per cent. This superiority undoubtedly represents the gain in speculative transactions in Wall street. These transactions are likely to, on the average, decrease. There is no material change in the money market. Rates are the same, and money is quoted easy everywhere. There was another increase of eight millions in loans in the New York bank statement last week, and naturally a corresponding increase in deposits. This brings the deposits almost up to 900 millions. The legal reserves decreased, however, two millions, which show that these loans were made not only without any additional influx of money, but with an actual loss of two millions. As business in the interior is unquestionably expanding, more money will be needed to transact it, and this money will be drawn from the centres. In Europe, the interest rates are declining, and London is now having cheaper money than New York. In spite of this, and the fact that the balance of trade in merchandise has been, and is, largely in our favor, no gold is coming from abroad. Instead of sending over gold to pay the balance, foreign investors have been selling their holdings of American securities, and the balance is being paid with these.

High prices in Wall st. have induced it. Easy money in business generally throughout the country is still strongly indicated; there is nothing in sight to change it, but hardening rates to speculators in the metropolis are not unlikely in the near future.

Cotton, after a fair speculative reaction, has recovered most of the decline. In respect of its manufactured products, business seems generally satisfactory. The buyer's panic in copper continues, and last week the price reached 18 cents. For the time being consumption seems to have outgrown supply, and dealers have found difficulty providing for immediate and prospective wants. A doubling of its price must materially reduce its uses, and new mines are being rapidly developed, and old ones pushed for all they are worth. Promoters are very busy. Wheat has shown more strength, reacting 2½ cents from the low point of the week before, and holding most of it. Exports are still large, five and one-half millions last week, but foreigners show no inclination yet to buy on advancing markets. The recent strength came in the general apprehension of damage to the growing winter wheat crop by the severe weather. The buying was mostly by outside speculation. Professionals have long since learned that he who buys wheat on fears of damage in February has many weeks of long waiting before spring showers and sun demonstrate his fears to be well or ill founded. It is not unlikely, however, that if these fears of damage are quite general, it will tend to make farmers hold more tightly to their reserve, until the prospects for the next crop are more clearly forecast. Receipts are already decreasing, and are now less than last year. The coarse grains, corn and oats, have also shown more strength. It is a very prevailing impression that reserves of both are small, and the consumption is at a maximum. Trade in all leading commodities is good, and increasing, and there are very few complaints from any quarter. The real estate men even are preparing for a better season's business, and it is thought rents are likely to be firm, at least in the down-town districts.

Commercial Comparisons

The Yankees of America and the Yankees of the Orient have out-expanded the world in the last decade in the growth of their commerce, and especially their export trade. From 1888 to 1897 the exports of the United States increased more than 50 per cent., and those of Japan more than 60 per cent. In the matter of imports, however, the Yankees of America exhibit far greater ability to supply the home demand than their namesakes of the Orient, the imports of the United States in 1897 being but about six per cent. in excess of those of 1888, while the imports of Japan show an increase of more than 120 per cent.

Some tables just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, comparing the growth of the commerce of the United States with that of other nations, show clearly how the United States has surpassed her neighbors both in Europe and other parts of the world in her export trade during the decade, and that she has at the same time made greater progress in supplying the home demand, her increase in imports in 1897 over those of 1888 being less than that of almost any other nation.

A comparison of our foreign commerce with that of other nations presents some interesting facts, both as to present conditions and comparative growth. A decade ago, France, Germany and the United Kingdom exceeded the United States in their exports, those of the United Kingdom being more than double our own. In 1897, those of the United States were greater than those of France or Germany, and but 26 per cent. less than those of Great Britain, while in the calendar year just ended our exportation of domestic products actually exceeded the export of domestic products by the United Kingdom.

A detailed study of the commerce of the great European nations from 1888 to 1897 shows that none has made so rapid progress in exports as the United States, but that in most cases they have increased their imports much more rapidly than we have. From 1888 to 1897 our exports increased 15 per cent., while those of the United Kingdom fell off 1.4 per cent. France showed an increase of but 10.8 per cent.; Netherlands 33.6 per cent.; British Australia, 9.9 per cent.; Belgium, less than 1 per cent., and Russia a decrease of 8.1 per cent. Germany showed a gain of 18.5 per cent. from 1891 to 1897, the figures for earlier years not being in form to permit an accurate and just comparison.

DANGER IN SODA.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow its Excessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover, the soda only gives temporary relief, and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels, and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20 grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste, and contain the natural acids, peptones, and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour, and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements, and finds them a certain cure, not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food, they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh, and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach diseases and weakness, and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50cts. per package.

Hints to Housewives

The uses to which eggs may be put are many, aside from their employment in cooking.

A mustard plaster made with the white of an egg will not leave a blister.

The white skin that lines the shell of an egg is a useful application for a boil.

White of egg beaten with loaf sugar and lemon relieves hoarseness—a teaspoonful taken once every hour.

An egg added to the morning cup of coffee makes a good tonic.

It is said that a raw egg swallowed at once when a fish-bone is caught in the throat beyond the reach of the finger, will dislodge the bone and carry it down.

The white of a raw egg turned over a burn or scald is most soothing and cooling. It can be applied quickly, and will prevent inflammation, besides relieving the stinging pain.

One of the best remedies in case of bowel troubles is a partly beaten raw egg taken at one swallow. It is healing to the inflamed stomach and intestines, and will relieve the feeling of distress. Four eggs taken in this manner in twenty-four hours will form the best kind of nourishment, as well as medicine for the patient.

A raw egg is one of the most nutritious of foods, and may be taken very easily if the yolk is not broken. A little nutmeg grated upon the egg, a few drops of lemon juice added, some chopped parsley sprinkled over it, or some salt and a dash of cayenne pepper, vary the flavor, and tend to make it more palatable, when not taken as a medicine.

The white of a raw egg is the most satisfactory of pastes, and is better than any prepared muclage or paste one can buy. Papers intended to be put over tumblers of jelly and jam, will hold very securely and be air tight, if dipped in the white of an egg.—Good Housekeeping.

ONE egg will settle two pounds of coffee. Pour your coffee out of can or canister on some broad, shallow pan, as it will dry so much more rapidly. Break a nice fresh egg into this, and rub it very thoroughly with your two hands into the coffee. Let it stand for a couple of hours on your baking table in the summer kitchen; return it to the can, and screw on the cover, and your coffee is settled. All you have to do is to grind it, and make in the usual way. If you use the ground coffee, as many do, proceed just the same, only use an egg to each pound. The egg forms a coating to the coffee, consequently prevents the strength from evaporating. When eggs are high, as they always are in mid-winter, this is a great saving; besides you always have perfectly settled coffee. Be sure it is perfectly dry.

A CURLING FLUID.—The girl whose hair does not curl naturally is often sorely tried by the fact that damp weather removes all wave or crimp from her well-kept locks. She can, if she wishes, lessen her troubles by preparing a curling-fluid with which she may dampen her hair before putting it up overnight on curlers or crimping-pins. To make the curling-fluid, mix together a half-ounce each of gum-arabic and granulated sugar; pour over them a cup and a half of scalding water, and let them stand until thoroughly dissolved. When cold, add one fluid ounce of alcohol, in which have been dissolved three grains of sal ammoniac and three grains of bichloride of mercury. Stir well together, and add to the preparation enough water to make half a pint of fluid.

THE RAPIDITY WITH WHICH NEW industrial combinations have been effected this year, has caused leading financial papers to sound a warning note against the disastrous effect of over-capitalization and fictitious valuation. At the close of the last year, there were in existence in this country about 200 large industrial companies. Their stock issues aggregated 3,288½ millions of dollars, and their bonded debt 378¼ millions. So many of those companies have been organized since January 1st, that there are now about 350 of them, with stock of the face value of 5,118½ millions of dollars, and a bonded indebtedness of 714¼ millions. During less than three months the activity of promoters has brought forth securities with a face value of nearly 1,895 millions, but with doubtful actual value. Of 1,895 millions of new stock, 1,358 millions is common, and 477 millions preferred stock. The larger percentage of the former, to a great extent, represents "water," a slice of which goes to subscribers to preferred, and a good part to promoters. As a rule, preferred stock represents value, and common stock does not. The latter may earn dividends during a period of abnormal prosperity, but generally is not stable. Barring exceptions to the rule, the industrial combination is the result of a desire on the part of the promoter to make money out of the investor. The increase in volume of securities offered this year does not represent a corresponding increase in national wealth.

THE ADDRESS TO THE NATIVES OF THE Philippine Islands, drafted by the American Commission, in behalf of the United States government, and embodying the views of the President, has been made public. After being translated into all the native dialects, it is to be disseminated throughout the archipelago. The address assures the Filipinos of the intention of the Americans to develop the powers of self-government in the people. It explains that the United States has assumed international obligations which it must fulfill, and which makes it responsible to the whole civilized world for the stable government of the Philippines. The Commission, it is explained, is to interpret to the natives the purposes and intentions of the President toward them, and also suggest the establishment of such a government as shall suit the capacity and requirements of the Filipinos, and be consistent with the interests of the United States. The protection of the United States is not to be exercised in any spirit of tyranny or vengeance, but, having destroyed the Spanish power and accepted the sovereignty of the islands, the United States is bound to restore peace in the Philippines. To this end, all insurgents are invited to lay down their arms and place their trust in the government that emancipated them from the oppression of Spanish rule.

WHILE GERMANY HAS NOT DEMAND- ed the recall of Chief Justice Chambers from Samoa, that government has nevertheless intimated quite broadly that it desires his deposition. In its communication with the State department, the German government has placed all of the blame for the trouble at Samoa upon the shoulders of the Chief Justice. This government does not agree with the view taken by the Germans, but, on the other hand, blames the German Consul for the trouble, and is equally anxious to have him removed, although no demands have been made by either side. According to the terms of the treaty between this government, Great Britain, and Germany, neither of these governments can remove the Chief Justice. Because he happens to be an American, that does not signify that he is the representative of this government. On the contrary he is the representative of the three powers that signed the treaty, and can only be removed by united action on their part when complaint has been made against him.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS BEARING ON the discovery of a process for producing liquid air, by Professor Tripler, have attracted renewed interest in his wonderful invention. Having established his ability to make liquid air cheaply, he almost compels belief in his main claim that he can apply his new force to steam engines and locomotives, and operate them without water or fuel. The most important feature of Mr. Tripler's discovery, and one that opens up bewildering possibilities, is the apparently well-founded statement that he can use liquid air to produce more liquid air in an increasing ratio. In a recent lecture before the National Geographic society at Washington he repeated this declaration, stating that with three gallons of the liquid he had repeatedly made ten gallons, and that he could go on doing so for any length of time. While actual demonstrations of practical application of this new force are yet to be made, the discovery gives greater promise than any other now on the industrial horizon. It is not at all impossible that it may shortly outstrip electricity itself in point of practical results; and again it is also possible that it may not fulfill any of its promises for years to come. A good many years ago compressed air seemed about to supersede steam, but the one fact that it froze and clogged the machinery with ice caused its failure in practical work. Some similar difficulty may stand in the way of liquid air, yet only within the last year human ingenuity has triumphed over the defects of compressed air, and it will be strange if the same does not ultimately prove true of liquid air, which is the same thing, only infinitely more compressed.

AFTER A TOUR OF INVESTIGATION OF Western packing plants which supplied canned and refrigerated meat to troops, and hearing testimony of officers and privates as to the quality of rations, the Court of Inquiry will hold its concluding sessions in Washington. Much evidence has been brought out in support of the position taken by General Miles. The fact has been shown that so-called canned roast beef was supplied before its fitness as a regular ration had been demonstrated, and also that the understanding of the contractor was that refrigerated beef would keep good until twenty-four hours after delivery, instead of seventy-two. The testimony of Governor Roosevelt was particularly strong in condemnation of canned beef, his statements, as well as those of many others, supporting the allegation that it was one of the main causes of sickness. Incontrovertible evidence places the blame with the Commissary Department at Washington. The concluding sessions of the Court of Inquiry are expected to sift matters to the bottom.

THE SIGNING OF THE TREATY BETWEEN France, and England delimiting their respective frontiers in the Valley of the Nile, in Egypt, which took place recently in London, brought to a peaceful termination a controversy which at one time threatened to involve the two countries, and possibly other European nations in war. In 1897 the French advanced their claims to the northern and eastern shores of Lake Chad, and to their right to occupy a portion of the Valley of the Nile. To this latter proposition England objected, giving France and all other countries to understand that Great Britain alone had any right to the occupation of that territory. The correspondence over the contested boundary lasted until within a few weeks, when an agreement was reached. That agreement, however, was precipitated by the march of events, and England ultimately conceded to France a portion of her claims. What gave the affair a warlike appearance was the Marchand expedition which preceded Sir Herbert Kitchener to Fashoda. For a time an Anglo-French war was discussed abroad as almost inevitable. The expulsion of Marchand was demanded by the English people, and he finally withdrew, allowing the diplomatic negotiations which had been going on to continue.

AN EXCEEDINGLY INTERESTING REVIEW of business and industrial expansion in the Southwest, is published by the St. Louis Globe Democrat. The facts are collected by special correspondence in various parts of Missouri, Illinois, Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma, fifty-four towns having thus far been heard from. The information in each case is explicitly conveyed in a special letter, and is definite in all particulars. The net result of the inquiry is highly gratifying. It shows that within the last two years, in the fifty-four towns from which reports have been received, new industries are capitalized at over $14,000,000, employ 16,000 persons, pay $10,000,000 annually in wages, and have an output of $76,000,000. This makes the average value of output per town of over $1,400,000, which is a snug sum to come into a community for distribution in payment for material and labor. One feature of the exhibit is that it includes only towns of moderate size, none of the large centres of population and business, like Chicago, St. Louis, and Kansas City, being included.

THE POPULATION OF THE EARTH IS about 1,500,000,000, it being estimated in 1898 at 1,485,763,000. The Statesman's Year Book (an English publication) for 1897 estimated that four-fifths of the world's population, or 1,273,284,463 human beings were under the sway of ten powers, as follows: China, 402,680,000; British Empire, 388,488,469; Russian Empire, 129,545,000; France, 70,467,775; United States, 62,929,706; German Empire, 62,879,901; Austria-Hungary, 41,358,376; Japan, 41,818,215; Netherlands, 38,852,451; and the Ottoman Empire, 39,212,000. The estimate of the population of China is really guess-work, nothing more. It may exceed the figures given, or it may fall vastly below them. In fact, some authorities put China's population as low as 225,000,000. The population accorded Great Britain, France, and Germany is largely composed of Asiatics and Africans. This is especially the case with Great Britain, about 275,000,000 of the people under her sway being inhabitants of India.

Death of the Bishop of Barbados

The Rt. Rev. Herbert Bree, Lord Bishop of Barbados, died at St. Aubyn's, Hove, England, at the age of 71. Bishop Bree was educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, taking his B. A. degree in 1850, and M. A., three years later. He was ordained in 1852, and served as curate of Drinkstone, Suffolk, and of Wolverstone, being subsequently, in 1858, appointed rector of Harkstead, and afterwards, in 1870, of Brampton. In 1882 he was consecrated Bishop of Barbados, and, holding that position, was in charge of the church in the Windward Islands. The Bishop was a D.D. of Cambridge.

The New Bishop of Madagascar

The Rev. George Lanchester King, vicar of St. Mary's, South Shields, England, has accepted the bishopric of Madagascar. Bishop Kestell Cornish who last held the appointment, resigned in 1896, and is now rector of Downe St. Mary, Bow, North Devon. The new Bishop was born Dec. 5th, 1860. Having been an exhibitor and scholar at Clare College, Cambridge, he took his B. A. in 1882. In 1882-'83 he acted as assistant master at Woodbridge Grammar School, Suffolk. Mr. King was prepared for Holy Orders at Auckland Castle, under Bishop Lightfoot. He was ordained in 1884, and took Priests' Orders the following year. He held a curacy at St. Andrew's, Spennymoor, for five years; was curate at Holy Trinity, Gateshead, for one year; was appointed curate-in-charge of St. Mary's, Tine Dock, in June, 1890; and vicar of the same parish in March, 1894.

The Bishop held an ordination in St. Alban's cathedral, Toronto, on the 2d Sunday in Lent, when three candidates received Holy Orders. Two of the speakers at the deanery meeting, held in St. James' school house, Toronto, addressing the audience on the subject of the missions of the Canadian Church, urged the necessity for a cordial understanding between the official and voluntary boards and societies. Many of the mid-day Lenten services in St. James' cathedral have been very well attended. A parsonage has been purchased for the church at Gore Bay, and the property made over to the Bishop. The vestry of St. Clement's church, Toronto, has decided to build a Sunday school house in the coming summer, to cost about $1,800.

The ceremony of inducting the Rev. W. P. Garratt into the mission of Janerville, was performed by Bishop Hamilton in St. Margaret's church, March 3d. The offerings for missions in this diocese, taken up at the annual meeting in the cathedral, Ottawa, in February, were very liberal. Appeals were made to Churchmen to devote at least one-tenth of their income to Church work. Many letters have been published in the Ottawa papers of late, advocating free seats in all churches. The pretty chapel built by Lord Aberdeen at Government House, Ottawa, and which on his departure from Canada, he presented to the Dominion government, with its fine pipe organ, also his gift, has now a regular Sunday evening service. The Rev. Canon Hanington has been appointed chaplain. The reports of the deputations visiting Ottawa parishes on behalf of the Diocesan Mission Fund, promise a good increase over last year's contributions when the work is finished.

Diocese of Huron

The Bishop conducted a Quiet Day in Christ church, Chatham, for the clergy of the counties of Essex and Kent, March 16th. The Bishop held Confirmations in Grace church, West Lorne, and the parish of Tyrconnell, March 5th and 6th. St. Peter's church, Dorchester Station, which has been greatly improved, was re-opened March 12th. There was a good attendance at the annual missionary meeting in St. James' church, London. A statement of the Diocesan Mission Fund finances show that there are in Huron 80 clergymen, 32 widows of deceased clergymen, and 19 superannuated clergymen, who receive aid from the fund. A new church is to be built at Kirkton next summer, for which the material is now being prepared. Special services have been held every week in Lent in St. James' church, St. Mary's. On Good Friday there will be the Three Hours Service.

Diocese of Nova Scotia

Bishop Courtney consecrated the new church at Boyleston, Feb. 24th, and also St. Thomas' church, at Spry Harbor, recently. He held a service to induct the rector of Tangier to his charge, and Confirmation services at Guysboro' and other places. St. Paul's Alms-house, Halifax, has received a bequest of $200, and St. Paul's Sunday school, $100, by the will of the late William Dunbar.

Memorial to the Late Bishop Sullivan

It is proposed to raise a fund, for the diocese of Algoma, to be named "The Bishop Sullivan Memorial Sustentation Fund." Bishop Thornloe in his letter to clergy and laity says he is convinced that in no better way can recognition of the great qualities of the late Bishop be made, "than by raising a memorial fund for the furthering of the work to which he devoted the best years of his life, and which, to the last, was so specially dear to his heart."

Bishop Bond held a Confirmation service in St. Luke's church, Montreal, March 12th. The new headmaster of the school of St. John the Evangelist, who was lately rector of St. Mark's church, Hcosick Falls, N. Y., has arrived in Montreal, and begun his work. The Bishop presided at the annual meeting of the Church Home, Montreal. All the reports presented were most encouraging. It has been proposed that a prize shall be offered to the students of the Montreal Diocesan Theological College, to be known as the "Lobley Prize," in memory of the late Dr. Lobley, first principal of the college.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. Stone held on Monday the funeral services over the remains of Calvin T. Wheeler who came to Chicago in 1851, being then 33 years of age. He was eminent in financial services, and a native of New York.

The church of the Redeemer, Elgin, suffers serious and regrettable loss by the removal to Kansas City of Mr. Albert Chandler Stowell, lay-reader to the Rev. Dr. Fawcett, and superintendent of the Sunday school.

We regret to learn that the Rev. W. C. De Witt is ill with an attack of measles.

The Rev. G. Mead has resigned charge of St. Michael's, Berwyn, and gone East for a visit.

The Rev. H. Goodman goes to Sterling for Easter, and, by sundry changes arranged by Dr. Rushton under the direction of the Bishop, provision has been made for Easter Celebrations in almost every parish and mission in the diocese, Dr. Rushton himself taking Harvey, Pullman, and Morgan Park, between the hours of 7 and 11 A. M.

Home for Boys

A sale for the benefit of the Rev. John M. Chattin's Home for Boys, 19 Bishop Court, will be held under the auspices of friends, in the rooms of the Home, on the afternoon and evening of April 5th. Articles of fancy work, domestic articles, jellies, preserves, etc., will be gratefully received, and should be sent direct to the Home, marked "For the sale." The Home is open to inspection at all times. The Rev. Mr.

Chattin is at home Monday afternoons and evenings.

Musical Services During Holy Week

Stainer's sacred oratorio, "The Crucifixion," was given in St. Peter's last Sunday evening, and will also be given in St. Chrysostom's on Good Friday evening; at the church of the Redeemer, on Sunday night, was sung Benedict's "Passion from St. Peter," and on Thursday evening Dudley Buck's "Story of the Cross" was to be rendered; and in St. James', Mercadante's "Seven last words." In nearly all of our churches the Hours on the Cross will be commemorated on Good Friday.

Confirmation at Grace Church

On the morning of Palm Sunday the Bishop confirmed 90 in Grace church, presented by the rector, the Rev. E. M. Stires, who is just now working without a regular assistant. The class was, in many respects, a remarkable one, over one-half being adults, the number of young men in particular being very noticeable; and the class succeeds the largest known in the history of the diocese, that of last year, 110, in the same church. The Bishop addressed the candidates before preaching. The annual reports from the numerous parish societies and guilds are indicative of unvarying activity and of increasing success in all departments of parochial work in this very prominent congregation. Gaul's Passion music was given its tenth yearly rendering, on Wednesday evening of this week.

Memorial of the Rev. John Rouse

We mentioned in our last issue the beautiful memorial recently placed in the centre panel of the east window of Trinity church, 26th st. and Michigan ave. The original committee appointed to carry out the idea consisted of Messrs. H. Blair, G. S. McReynolds, and G. Foreman. On the death of the last, Mr. G. H. Webster filled the vacancy. Several designs were submitted, that of Tiffany, New York, being finally selected. It is a representation of the Ascension, with the ascending Lord as the conspicuous figure, and in the act of parting from the apostles. Above are two angels, one holding a crown and the other beckoning. Below is the inscription: "In loving memory of John Rouse, M. A. Oxon, for six years rector of this parish." The memorial, considered the most beautiful of its kind in this city, is appreciated all the more as it is viewed with the sun shining upon it. Its cost was $1,500, largely gathered by the wife of Mr. Charles Raymond, treasurer of the fund, whose connection with the parish is almost lifelong, and who served for many years as vestryman and warden. The contributors were the vestry, Sunday school, choir, and, indeed, all of the parochial associations, whose contributions were supplemented by generous subscriptions from other and individual parishioners. On Sunday evening, the choir rendered "The last night in Bethany," a sacred cantata; and on Maundy Thursday evening, Haydn's Passion music will be sung.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At St. Bartholomew's church, the Rev. David H. Greer, D. D., rector, the class just confirmed by Bishop Potter, numbered 150 individuals.

The archdeaconry of Dutchess, with the consent of Bishop Potter, has taken steps to establish St. Andrew's church, Fishkill Landing, on the Hudson.

The rector of St. James' church, the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, D. D., returned home from Palm Beach, Fla., in much restored health, in time for the services of Passion Week, and will officiate on Easter Day.

At Calvary church, the Rev. J. Lewis Parks, D. D., rector, on the evening of Palm Sunday, he first part of Gounod's oratorio of the "Redemption," was rendered by the choir of the parish, augmented for the occasion.

The very efficient work of the Rev. Brockholst Morgan, in connection with the Church's City Mission Society, which has been successfully carried on for the past decade, has been unfortunately terminated by his resignation, caused by ill-health.

At Columbia University the preacher of the baccalaureate sermon this year will be the Rev. Samuel D. McConnell, D.D., rector of the church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. The sermon will be preached at the beginning of commencement week, in the crypt of the cathedral of St. John the Divine, this being the first definite touch between the cathedral and the great university.

Gallaudet Home for Deaf-Mutes

The Church Mission to Deaf-Mutes has been successful in paying off the entire mortgage indebtedness of the Gallaudet Home for Deaf-Mutes, amounting to $7,500. This relief is due to the proceeds of a legacy.

Christ Church, Suffern

Arrangements are making for immediate work in the enlargement of Christ church, the plans having been approved by the vestry. On Palm Sunday, the Rev. Romaine S. Mansfield completed the 21st year of his rectorship of this parish.

Brothers of Nazareth

The new buildings of the Brothers of Nazareth are so far completed at the Priory Farm, Verbank, that they will be put to use this coming summer. But money to supply heating apparatus is needed, and Brother Gilbert makes an earnest appeal that the houses be not closed in autumn for lack of this.

Confirmation Classes Presented

At St. Matthew's church, the Rev. Dr. Krans, rector, Bishop Potter preached March 23d, and administered Confirmation. On Sunday, March 19th, the Bishop administered the same rite at St. Bartholomew's church, in the morning, St. Paul's Memorial church, Stapleton, in the afternoon, and in the church of the Epiphany in the evening.

Firemen's Annual Service

The annual Church service of the firemen of Port Chester was held on Palm Sunday, at St. Peter's church. The rector, the Rev. Charles Edward Brugler, as chaplain of the local department, conducted the service, assisted by the Rev. James Le Baron Johnson, chaplain of the New York Fire Department, and the Rev. Cornelius B. Smith, D.D., rector emeritus of St. James' church.

Sunday School Work

At the series of conferences in the crypt of the cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Sunday school work, the speaker on March 18th, was Prof. James Earl Russell, dean of the Teachers' College, of Columbia University, who took for his topic, "The purpose and scope of the Sunday school." On the feast of the Annunciation B. V. M., March 25th, Miss Patterson, a deaconess, spoke on "Material, its selection and distribution."

Charitable Bequests

Legacies have been provided by the will of the late Mary Beach Tousey, as follows: For the Board of Missions and St. Clement's church, New York, $10,000 each; for the Episcopal Orphan Asylum, St. Luke's Home for Indigent Christian Females, St. Luke's Home for Old Men and Aged Couples, the Society for the City and Port of New York, the Church Mission to Deaf-Mutes, the City Mission Society of the Church, and St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children, $5,000 each; and the New York Bible and Common Prayer Book Society, $2,500.

Memorial of Rev. T. McKee Brown

At the church of St. Mary the Virgin, the Rev. George M. Christian, D. D., rector, a memorial to the founder of the parish, the late rector, the Rev. Thomas McKee Brown, has been decided upon. It will take the form of an altar tomb of stone, with a sculptured recumbent figure of the beloved priest, in his sacerdotal vestments, and with the chalice in his hands. The design of the tomb is by Mr. J. Massey Rhind, with the co-operation of Mr. Le Brun, the well-known artist, and its treatment will be in accord with the Gothic architecture of the church.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Burial Office for the late Hon. Samuel G. King, mayor of Philadelphia, 1881-'4, was read on Saturday, 25th ult., at his residence, the Rev. George H. Moffett, rector of St. Clement's church, officiating.

At its meeting on Monday, 20th ult., in the Church House, Philadelphia, the Clerical Brotherhood was addressed by the Rev. Joshua Kimber, associate secretary of the Board of Missions, on "Specials"—special missionary offerings.

Reunion Service of Confirmation Classes

Ever since the Rev. Dr. Joseph N. Blanchard became rector of St. James' church, Philadelphia, an annual reunion of the several Confirmation classes has been held, and is regarded as one of the most important services of the year, and one of the most fruitful in good results. The reunion this year was held on Friday evening, 24th ult., when several hundred members of the classes since 1891 were present. The last lecture to the Confirmation class of 1899 was delivered by the rector.

The Mission of St. John the Divine

This mission which has been for several years past under the fostering care of the South memorial church of the Advocate, the Rev. Dr. W. W. Silvester, rector, and which has been faithfully served by Mr. W. Frank Reber, lay-reader, who took sole charge of the mission in 1894, has again changed its location to 2625 Lehigh ave., where services will be held for the first time on Sunday, April 9th. This new site is about a half mile south-west of the building formerly used as a chapel, and which was abandoned because it was in the immediate vicinity of the Municipal Hospital (pest-house). The Rev. James O. McIlhenny has accepted the appointment of the Bishop as missionary in charge.

John Rapson, an Aged Churchman, at Rest

John Rapson, so long and favorably known among the financiers of Philadelphia and the country, generally, as well as to Church people, entered into life eternal, on the 18th ult. He was a native of Plymouth, England, came to America in early life, and was appointed to a clerkship in the Bank of the Northern Liberties, and after a service of 50 years in that institution, was recently retired with the honorary, and somewhat unique, title of cashier emeritus. He had been a vestryman of the church of the Incarnation since its inception, and for many years its accounting warden. The funds for erecting the church edifice were raised largely through his influence and personal efforts. His acts of charity were many and judicious, and performed in the quietest manner. He was always considerate for others, and was of a cheerful and sociable disposition.

Silver Anniversary of the Rev. Dr. Falkner

The Dr. Rev. J. B. Falkner, rector of Christ church, Germantown, Philadelphia, preached his 25th anniversary sermon on Sunday morning, 19th ult., taking as his text, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us," I Samuel vii. 12. Dr. Falkner said that in March, 1874, the vestry of the church had extended a call to him to become its rector. Christ church was then passing through troubled waters. A large and influential portion of the congregation had just colonized, and taken with them their labor, influence, and support. The church was decimated; the Sunday school was empty; and the organizations for work were few and feeble. Severing his connection with St. Matthew's, he came to Christ church. By degrees, the congregation increased, and now stands among the most distinguished churches in Germantown. During his rectorate, there have been Baptisms, 571; confirmed, 566; marriages, 101; burials, 315.

Boys' Club House—Gift to the Church Club

A movement looking to the eventual erection of a building, to cost upwards of $25,000, and possibly $50,000, to be used for many purposes in the work of the Church among the boys of the old district of Kensington, is to be considered at a special meeting of the Church Club, in the near future. The board of directors of the Club recently received a letter from one of its members who requested that his name be not used, and stated that he had purchased a large lot at the north-east corner of Somerset and Howard sts., for $12,000, and that he was ready to give it, and $12,000 in addition, for the erection of a building and the establishment of a boys' club house, on condition that the Church Club would pledge itself to raise whatever additional amount may be required to keep the club in a satisfactory condition for five years. The writer adds:

It seems to me that we have a great opportunity open to us, the benefit of which to our community cannot be overestimated, and I hope that we may enter into, and possess permanently, this great field, and thus show the broad and liberal spirit in which a true Church Club should do its work.

Among the deeds presented for record in the recorder's office, on the 20th ult., was one from F. J. Rumpf to the Church Club, for a lot 95½ x 108¼ ft., N. E. corner of Somerset and Waterloo sts., $12,000; the deed dated March 17, 1899.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Richard Howell has been obliged, on account of continued ill-health, to resign the rectorship of St. Margaret's church.

The fifth lecture of the Churchman's League was delivered in St. Andrew's church, on the evening of March 21st, by the Rev. Thomas P. Hughes, D.D., of New York, on "Christian missions in the Orient."

Recent Confirmations

There has seldom been a more impressive and beautiful service at St. Paul's church, than at the Bishop's visitation, on the 5th Sunday in Lent. There was a choral Celebration, with the Confirmation service after the Nicene Creed; 40 candidates were confirmed, among them many children of the Sunday school, and some members of the choir. The Bishop addressed them, and also preached. In the evening, at Christ church, East Washington, the Rev. A. S. Johns, rector, 10 persons were confirmed by Bishop Satterlee who, on the previous Friday evening, had visited St. Matthew's chapel, a mission of this parish, which is doing a successful work in a district of laboring people. Here, the priest in-charge, the Rev. J. M. E. McKee, presented 18 candidates for Confirmation. The rector of the parish and his assistant, the Rev. Mr. Myer, were present, and a very large and interested congregation from the neighborhood. The Bishop has also recently confirmed 19 persons at St. Andrew's church, the Rev. J. B. Perry, rector.

St. John's Orphanage

On the afternoon of Sunday, March 19th, the anniversary service of St. John's Orphanage was held at St. John's church. The annual report was read, showing that over 100 children have had a happy home and been taught in the Church's ways during the past year. The Rev. Dr. Mackay-Smith, the rector, conducted the service, and the Bishop made an address, urging the liberal support of this true home for Christ's little ones who have no other.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

Mrs. Gilbert, wife of Bishop Gilbert, has been very ill at St. Luke's Hospital. We are glad to state that she is now recovering.

By the will of the late Levi Cook, $5,000 has been bequeathed to St. Barnabas' Hospital, Minneapolis.

The Rev. J. J. Faude, rector of Gethsemane, Minneapolis, was presented with a purse, well-filled with gold, by his parishioners, on the completion of his nine years' rectorship. Mrs. Faude was also remembered, with a bouquet of beautiful roses.

Bishop Gilbert's visitations, Minneapolis: St. Mathew's, 6; Holy Trinity chapel, 6; St. Mark's, 10.

Why I am a Churchman

Bishop Gilbert's lecture, delivered extemporaneously at the People's church, St. Paul, on Refreshment Sunday, in spite of the terrible blizzard that prevailed, brought out an immense audience. The lecture on "Why I am a Churchman," from the Church's point of view, was one of the Bishop's best efforts. He made it perfectly clear why he was, and could not be anything else. He was definite and positive on every point of Church teaching, clear, and logical. His evident sincerity and unflinching loyalty to the Church which he represented, and the broad charity towards those he differed from, made a deep impression. At the conclusion, the Bishop answered a large batch of questions that had been sent up to him.

Olympia

Wm. Morris Barker, D.D., Bishop

The Bishop of the jurisdiction visited St. Clement's, Seattle, on the 5th Sunday in Lent, and confirmed a class of 33, presented by the rector, the Rev. George Buzzelle.

Western Michigan

George De Normandie Gillespie, D.D., Bishop

The rector of Emmanuel church, Petoskey, has been holding services, not only in his own parish, but also at Charlevoix and Mancelona, during Lent. Nativity mission, of the latter place, has received a Sunday school library, the gift of Mr. David Ward, of Detroit.

A Unique Lenten Feature

The clergy of the whole diocese have been faithful during the "dear feast of Lent" in ministering to the needs of their people. In St. Mark's church, Grand Rapids, from one to three services have been held daily, with good attendance. The rector, the Rev. J. N. McCormick, has been giving a series of addresses on the Litany, at the afternoon services, and on Wednesday evening holds a Bible class. A unique service is the Lenten recital given every Monday afternoon, in charge of the assistant, the Rev. Chas. R. Hodge who is ably assisted by Mr. Ferdinand Warner, organist, and Mrs. Mary S. Palmer, violinist. Mr. Hodge is a tenor of rare culture and ability, and sings three numbers at each service, from oratorios and old Italian masters. A special idea runs through each service, culminating in a five-minute address by Mr. Hodge. The topics for the entire series are, "Repentance," "Mercy," "Confession," "Forgiveness," "Love," "The Sacrifice." The music, besides the congregational hymns, includes selections from Handel, Cherubini, Stradella, Pergolesi, Mendelssohn, and others. The church is well filled at all these services.

A Quiet Day

On Wednesday, March 15th, Quiet Day services for women were conducted by the Rev. Chas. Scadding, of La Grange, Ill., in Grace church, Grand Rapids. "Personal religion" was the general topic selected for the meditations, and the interest was well sustained throughout. At a service held in the evening, a powerful sermon was preached on the subject of "Names." The altar of Grace church is now three steps above the choir, and other changes in the sanctuary are contemplated. On Palm Sunday the Bishop visited this parish for Confirmation.

The New Mission at South Haven

On the 5th Sunday in Lent, Bishop Gillespie visited Epiphany mission, South Haven, and confirmed four candidates, presented by the missionary, the Rev. Woodford P. Law. This mission, organized in September, has been presented by the warden, Dr. Haupt, with a pulpit and a new organ. It is hoped that arrangements can be made for holding services each Sunday during the summer months.

Quiet Day at Battle Creek

The annual Quiet Day, March 17th, was conducted by the Rev. Robert Claiborne. After the celebration of the Holy Communion by the rector, the Rev. Lewis Brown, the Rev. Mr. Claiborne began his most helpful and eloquent addresses. The opening one was upon the words, "What think ye of Christ," and was a masterly presentation of the doctrine of the divinity of Christ. The other addresses were upon "Christ the Deliverer," "Christ the Reconciler," "Christ the Sustainer," and "Christ the Comforter." While each was distinct in itself, the connection between the entire series was admirably preserved. A large congregation followed the speaker with close attention, and manifested their gratitude for the helpful thoughts expressed. St. Thomas' church, by the will of Mrs. Jane Nakelee, recently deceased, will come into possession of handsome residence property in the centre of the city, valued at $10,000. It will make a commodious parish house, and will be ready for occupancy early in June.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D.D., Bishop

Six thousand dollars have been raised in Cohasset for a church building.

Fall River Churches

The debt of $2,000 in the parish of the Ascension, will be liquidated at Easter. St. John's church proposes to raise the parish house and place under it a commodious basement. This arrangement would give accommodations for the choir and Sunday school. The Rev. G. W. Sargent has taken charge of St. James' parish.

The City Board of Missions

Bishop Lawrence presided at the annual meeting of the City Board of Missions, in Emmanuel church, Boston, March 19th. In his address, he commented upon a few of the drawbacks of the ministry, because the income was so small, and made it impossible to have that skillful division of labor which is to be found in hospitals and other secular institutions. He thought a large part of the time of rectors had to be given to small matters, which should be done by some one else, leaving them free for their Sunday duties. He also dwelt upon the need of religious teaching as keeping the poor to a healthy life of the body as well as of the soul. The Rev. T. B. Allen described the work of the board in detail, and the inception of a new work among the Swedes in the new parish of St. Ansgarius, on Shawmut ave. Mr. S. H. King outlined the important work at Charlestown, among the sailors, and the many reform measures begun there. The Rev. J. G. Robinson depicted, in an interesting way, the work among children in South Boston, and how necessary this was in the poorer districts.

The Rev. J. M. Foster showed the meaning and responsibility of the Church's work among the poor in large cities.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop

Legal Decision against Griswold College

In an action brought by the American Church Missionary Society against Griswold College, Davenport, requesting the Supreme Court to direct the disposition of a trust fund which was given to the society by Louisa Dean, for the establishment of a theological professorship in Griswold College, Justice Kellogg holds that for more than ten years the college has refused to provide the theological school, or to maintain any seminary in which there was a theological department. He says that this neglect and abandonment on the part of the college must be interpreted as a refusal to comply with the conditions of the trust, and that this must operate as a voluntary surrender of all benefits under it.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Bishop

On Monday, March 13th, the Clerical Union held its monthly meeting at the residence of Bishop Whitehead, beginning with luncheon at one o'clock. The paper on this occasion was read by the Rev. H. E. Thompson, and was based on St. John xviii: 38. The attendance was good, and the meeting a very enjoyable one.

The Church Club held its March meeting in the chapel of Trinity church, on Tuesday evening, March 21st. The Rev. E. H. Ward, D.D., made an address on "The Church's claims on men to-day." The Rev. Dr. Francis Launt, of Philadelphia, was also the guest of the Club, and made a short address.

The Rev. A. J. Nock has been chosen rector of St. James' memorial church, Titusville. He has been in charge of the parish since the death of the Rev. Dr. Purdon, at Christmastide.

Confirmation of Deaf-Mutes

Bishop Whitehead visited St. Margaret's Deaf-Mute Mission, on the 5th Sunday in Lent, and confirmed two members, presented by the priest in charge, the Rev. A. W. Mann. For many years the "silent" congregation have worshiped in the chapel of Trinity church.

Newark

Thomas Alfred Starkey, D.D., Bishop

Trinity church, Newark, the Rev. Louis S. Osborne, rector, has just put in an organ, the cost of which is $10,000. Its energetic rector succeeded in getting that large sum together by the time the organ-builders were through their work.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

On Thursday evening, March 23d, the combined chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the diocese, held a service at Trinity church. A number of the choirs of Newark rendered the music, and the Rev. George R. Van De Water, D.D., of New York, preached the sermon.

Improvements in Christ Church, Newark

The Rev. Dr. Dean Richmond Babbitt entered on the rectorship of this church three months ago. Since then the rectory has been improved within and without. A number of repairs have been made to the attractive old church. New heating apparatus has been put in, and general improvements of the church property have been made. A reunion of all the past and present parishioners was lately held, at which much enthusiasm was manifested, and generous offer ings were made. Addresses were made by the Rev. Louis S. Osborne, of Trinity church; by the Rev. Dwight Galloupe, of St. Paul's church, and by the Rev. John S. Miller, of the House of Prayer. Dean Babbitt read an historical sketch of the parish from its founding by the Rev. Dr. Lowell, brother of James Russell Lowell, in 1850, to the present year. The parish, which is thus about 50 years old, has had but three rectors besides the Rev. Dr. Babbitt; viz., the Rev. Dr. Lowell, Dean Stansbury, and the Rev. W. H. C. Lylburn. Dr. Lowell was rector about 10 years, Dean Stansbury 32 years, and the Rev. Mr. Lylburn, about nine years. The property includes a fine brown-stone church, extensive and beautiful lawn reaching from Prospect to Congress st., and a comfortable rectory. It is the only parish among about 50,000 people on its side of the city. On Feb. 8th, the Rev. Dr. Babbitt, the rector, opened a large parish house on one of the densely populated streets. In it are centred many institutional agencies, as free reading and game rooms for men and for boys, a men's smoking-room, parish kitchen for teaching domestic science, an industrial school, and the various parish societies. The second story is given over to the rector's offices and study, and to a suite of rooms for women's work, for tired clerks, seamstresses, etc. About 1,000 persons a week at present use the parish house.

Delaware

Leighton Coleman, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Quiet Days for Clergy and for Women

On March 7th, the Bishop of the diocese conducted a Quiet Day for the clergy, in the chapel of the Good Shepherd, at Bishopstead. The two main subjects for meditation were: (1) "How to deepen our own spiritual lives"; (2) "How to deepen the spiritual lives of our people." The Rev. F. W. Clappett, of Baltimore, conducted a Quiet Day for women, in St. Andrew's church, Wilmington, on March 14th. The subjects of the addresses were "Prayer"; "The joy of self-sacrifice," "The life, active and contemplative," "Self-abandonment." At an evening service for men and women, Dr. Clappett preached on "The victory of faith."

The Friday services for men, held under the management of the local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, in St. Andrew's church, Wilmington, were well attended, and the addresses very helpful.

Milwaukee

Isaac Lea Nicholson, D.D., Bishop

Archdeacon Webber conducted a very successful Mission at Waukesha, from March 13-19th inclusive. There were four services each day, and on the last day of the Mission, the Archdeacon made seven addresses. Large evening congregations gathered from city and country, and from every religious organization. The surpliced choir assisted each evening. On Sunday, besides the Archdeacon and rector of the parish, the Rev. J. W. Areson, of Elkhorn, assisted in the services. On Sunday evening many had to stand, and many more could not find place. At the close of this service a family conference was held. The archdeacon gave the members some valuable advice concerning personal responsibility, duty, and privilege. During Passion Week there was preaching every night; Canon St. George on Monday; the Rev.

C.B.B. Wright, Tuesday; the Rev. L. P. Holmes, Wednesday; the Rev. H. B. Haslam, Thursday; Canon Richey, Friday. During Holy Week, the rector, the Rev. John Brann, has continued the services morning and evening, including the Three Hours' Service on Good Friday. The unanimity pervading the parish is a prophecy of future prosperity, spiritual and temporal.

Alabama

Richard Hooker Wilmer, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
H. Melville Jackson, D.D., Bishop-coadjutor

Trinity church, Mobile, is to have a choir of 40 men and boys, who are now in training for the Easter services. Until changes can be made necessary for their sitting in the chancel, they will remain unvested in the gallery of the church.

Bishop Jackson made a visitation among the Gulf Coast missions during the past month, preaching, and administering the rite of Confirmation to nine candidates, at Bon Secour, Whistler, and Point Clear. A number of candidates were prevented from meeting the Bishop by the inclement weather that prevailed during his visitation.

A successful eight days' Mission has recently been held in Trinity church, Mobile, by Archdeacon Webber, of the diocese of Milwaukee. His illustrations, taken from the Bible and the Holy Land, in which he has traveled extensively, have greatly interested the crowds who have thronged to hear him. All his sermons, meditations, and addresses were delivered without notes.

Bishop Jackson's Appointments for April

- 5. Florence.
- 6. Sheffield.
- 7. Tusculumbia.

Church of the Advent, Birmingham

The congregation are looking forward to the consecration of the church on Easter Day. Bishop Wämer having notified them of his intention to be with them for this purpose, if his feeble health will permit. Besides freeing their church from debt, this parish has contributed during the past two years, $1,000 for diocesan purposes; $500 for the "Mercy Home Building Fund"; $400 for relief of poor; $300 for gifts and memorials; $3,400 for improvements on church and rectory; other expenses making a total of $30,100, all except $400 having been paid in full. The Advent chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew hold services every Sunday at three mission stations, with most gratifying results. The guild and aid society have recently placed windows in the chancel of the church, and hope soon to present it with an altar and reredos to accord with the windows.

Mississippi

Hugh Miller Thompson, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop

Bishop Thompson speaks in glowing terms of the beautiful new church at Batesville, which was built while the Rev. Mr. Winecoff had charge of this mission. This rector was the architect, and has built a churchly and substantial structure, at a very low cost.

The mission fields of Como, Batesville, Sardis, and Hernando, have just been left vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Irenæus Trout who has accepted a call to All Saints', Grenada.

During the Bishop's recent visitations, he has confirmed 41 persons, preached 16 times, administered the Holy Communion seven times, and delivered a lecture, by request, at the "Round Table Club," New Orleans.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop visited the church of St. John the Divine, Syracuse, the Rev. David B. Matthews, rector, on the 12th ult., and confirmed 27 persons.

The Brotherhood men of Syracuse have commenced arrangements to entertain the State convention, which is to meet in that city May 13th and 14th.

The interior of St. Andrew's chapel, Utica, the Rev. J. W. Clarke, priest-in-charge, has been decorated. A brass altar cross has been presented to the chapel by a lady parishioner, as a memorial of her mother.

The parish of St. George's, Utica, the Rev. Wm. B. Coleman, Jr., rector, rejoices in the enlargement of its chapel into a combined parish and clergy house. It is both comfortable and commodious for present use, and makes a much-prized home for the rector.

Gift to Trinity Church, Watertown

Mr. Anson R. Flower, a vestryman of Trinity church, Watertown, has recently presented $13,000 toward the endowment fund of the parish, and also contracted for a chime of bells, of the finest quality, to be placed in the tower of the church the coming summer. Mr. Flower was the chief contributor to the erection of Trinity's fine stone church and chapel.

Confirmations in Utica

At the visitation of the Bishop, March 14th, to Calvary church, Utica, the Rev. E. Huntington Coley, rector, a class of 35 was confirmed, and also five persons presented by the rector of Trinity church, the Rev. J. R. Harding.

Death of Hamilton S. White

The sudden death of Mr. Hamilton S. White, March 13th, in Syracuse, was a severe shock to the community, and a bereavement to the diocese and the Church at large. His death was caused by overexertion at a large fire. All his life he was interested in methods to conquer the element of fire, giving of his time and means to that end. He was a devoted Churchman, and regularly attended the daily services in his parish church. The burial was from St. Paul's, the Rev. Dr. H. R. Lockwood, rector, officiating, assisted by the Bishop. The whole city mourns Mr. White's death, and a movement has been started to erect a monument to him by popular subscription.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

Report has only just reached us of the Quiet Day for the clergy of Hartford and vicinity, held by Bishop Brewster on Feb. 7th, in Trinity church, Hartford. It was a day long to be remembered by those who were present, and, though the addresses gave rise to "deep searchings of heart," they also gave incentive to renewed devotion and consecration. The privilege of meeting the Bishop in this close and intimate way was a precious one.

St. Agnes' Church, Bridgeport

On mid-Lent Sunday, Bishop Brewster confirmed 15 candidates at St. Agnes' church. This parish has been presented with a complete set of stoles and Communion linen, the gift being a memorial of the late Miss Malvina F. Murray, of Albany, N. Y. In his sermon on mid-Lent, Bishop Brewster said that he came prepared for surprises (this being his first visit), but that he was surprised beyond expectation. He also stated that he hoped he should soon see the congregation worshipping in a much statelier house of God than the present building, which is the former St. John's West End Mission House.

Editorials and Contributions

This Easter Day

"THIS is the Day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it." No element of human weakness dims its radiance, no shadow of humiliation obscures its splendor. We will rejoice to-day that life and immortality are brought to light, and all the yearnings of a waiting world are satisfied. We will rejoice to-day in hope, for the stone is rolled away from the door of the sepulchre and from the hearts of mourners. The Risen Lord bids us "All hail!" All hail! to the faithful women who were first at the tomb; all hail! to friends and enemies; all hail! to the great brotherhood of humanity in whose behalf the victory was won.

"All hail, dear Risen Lord! no trace
Of Calvary's woe hath marred Thy face.
All hail, Redeemer of our race!
Alleluia!"

"Behold, He is alive forevermore." Because he lives we shall live also. Our souls are living souls once more, and the breath of God has returned to us. "Alive forevermore!" What imagination can pass even beyond the vestibule of that vast existence! By faith we can see only the nearest stars of the galaxy of glory that shines in the heaven of deathless souls. Those that sat in the shadow of death, the Day-Spring from on high hath visited. The serpent's head is bruised, the curse has been endured. The power of an endless life returns to man by the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, and the life of God once more quickens dying souls.

"In Christ shall all be made alive." It is not merely duration of existence, prolonged vitality, that is promised to us. To be made alive by the quickening spirit of the Second Adam, is to be made heirs of everlasting blessedness and glory. Being risen with Christ from burial by Baptism, we have already passed from death unto life. The miracle of the Resurrection still goes on, no less a miracle in the souls of men, than at first in the guarded tomb, "according to the working of His mighty power which He wrought in Christ when he raised Him from the dead."

Of the Resurrection of Christ, the Church gives perpetual proof, in her Apostolic Order, which witnesses to the Risen Lord; in the solemn assembly of her members on the first day of the week, "for the Breaking of Bread and for the prayers"; in this great annual feast of Easter; at the font and at the altar and by the open grave of those that sleep in Jesus. This risen life is bestowed in power by the quickening Spirit, and its presence is manifested in His Body, the Church. Whatever be our state of earthly misery, of poverty, or bereavement, we are still blessed with all spiritual blessing, in heavenly places in Christ. Amid the darkness of departed hopes, under the shadow of earthly sorrows, we have the light of immortality to illumine the soul; we have an inheritance that is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. "In Thy Resurrection, O Christ! let heaven and earth rejoice!"

A LETTER from the Rev. Dr. McConnell, in The Churchman, on the conditions with which the ministry of the Church are confronted at the present time, has attracted considerable attention. He asks the question: "Whether there is any room in the ministry?" and his answer inclines strongly to the negative. He puts the case in a very practical shape, by describing an experiment which he recently tried. Endeavoring to obtain a parish for a clergyman out of work, who is described as "a first-rate man, with a wife and two children," a good preacher, "a Prayer Book Churchman," and in every way desirable and efficient, he addressed a letter to every one of about seventy bishops. He desired to know whether there was, or soon would be, an opening for such a man, which would give him a salary of $1,000 and a house; or, failing that, whether there was a position where he could be assured of even a meagre support for a time, until he should be able to make a place for himself. Out of fifty-nine replies, only two gave any hope of such a position as was desired, and in each of these cases, there were already many applicants. Dr. McConnell draws the conclusion that, from whatever cause or causes, the supply of clergy at present greatly exceeds the demand.

We are not at all sure that he is justified in drawing so broad a conclusion from a single instance. There are many reasons why bishops might not feel justified in holding out inducements in a case which came to them in this way, and from a distance. It is true, also, that the number of places of the character desired in this instance, in which the bishop has it in his power to influence appointments, is necessarily small. Then, there are men nearer home who ought to be provided for before inducements are held out to those further away. Again, it is easier for a man who already has a parish to secure a call to a new one. Vestries are more or less suspicious of a clergyman who may be described as "stranded."

But whatever may be true of the premises, we have no doubt that the general conclusion is correct, that the number of one thousand dollar parishes looking for a rector is at any time very small. We have also the statement of a majority of the bishops that the average salaries of their clergy are from $500 to $700. But we do not agree with Dr. McConnell to any great extent in his estimate of the situation and its causes. At least we think he makes too much of certain causes, and his estimate of what we believe to be the chief cause of all, is quite different from our own. Dr. McConnell will not hear of any fault in the laity. He thinks they will pay for what they get, according to its intrinsic value. He says: "If the Church retains in her ministry men who do not actually give the goods which the laity have a right to expect, the laity will decline to pay." He is, of course, thinking of organized and self-supporting parishes and this or that kind of "goods" which the "practical" men who control them consider that they have a right to expect. But the laity, as a class, includes all sorts of men. Some of them are liberal and some are not.

Some are reasonable and some are not. All the ineffective and impracticable men are not in Holy Orders, nor are all the laity people of earnest loyalty and sweet reasonableness. The truth is, that where there is trouble, it is sometimes the fault of the priest and sometimes it is the fault of the people. Occasionally, there is fault on both sides. But we do not think these considerations are particularly connected with the subject before us.

Dr. McConnell gives chief prominence to two causes of clerical indigence. The first of these is the enormous advance of what he calls the "priestly" idea. He thinks it capable of proof that wherever the "Oxford Movement" has gained control the clergy are poorly paid. We shall not now stop to consider the validity of that statement, further than to say that, if it be true, it may be owing to the fact that that movement has taught many men to disregard the law of supply and demand, and to undertake forlorn hopes where there was but little prospect of adequate remuneration. But Dr. McConnell seems to bring against the clergy of this type the charge of neglecting to "preach the Gospel," and also of "dogmatism, pettiness, and hardness." These accusations do not strike us as fitting. It is quite useless to make such accusations against any one school of the clergy or party in the Church. None of these undesirable things are the exclusive characteristics of one class of men. We wish we could believe that there was such burning eagerness to hear the Gospel, and nothing but the Gospel, preached from our pulpits, that faithfulness in that respect formed the criterion by which the clergy are judged. But the satisfaction with which some of our congregations listen from week to week to discourses in which subjects of the day have the pre-eminence, and the "Gospel" is a "new Gospel," if any; where the "faith once delivered" is resolved into symbols capable of all possible interpretations, makes us doubt whether giving the people what they want and giving them the Gospel are precisely synonymous terms.

In the end, if we understand him, Dr. McConnell finds the chief explanation of the fact that the average salaries of the clergy are so small, in the multiplication of missions which remain for a long time a burden upon the Church at large. He recalls the good old times up to about twenty-five years ago, when the missions invariably passed on, and became self-supporting parishes in a short time. Without doubt this is an important point. We suppose it is quite true that during the earlier history of the Church in America, such missions as were started did ordinarily become self-supporting before long. And the change is very apparent. Scores of missions are set on foot, many of which fall through altogether, many others fail to become self-supporting, and only a comparatively few gradually gain strength to stand alone, become permanent, and are able to contribute to the diocesan or general funds. In those old times the Episcopal Church was still the Church of a class. It was regarded in the community as an aristocratic institution. One of the points commonly alleged in its favor was the fact that it was composed of the "nicest" people. Missions, in the proper sense of the word, were hardly thought of. If there was a "group of Church people in a town, they drew together, grew larger, built a church for themselves, called a minister for themselves, and paid for all themselves." The bishop of the diocese would do what he could to help such a congregation in the selection of a "minister," if they thought they needed his help, and would visit the parish subsequently, and administer Confirmation. The idea of sending a missionary to people who had not asked for the Church, who knew little about it, and probably cared less, hardly entered the minds of the people of that generation.

The whole matter, we take it, hinges upon the question whether this Church has any such vocation as that. For many years past the conviction has been strong that it has such a vocation. At quite an early time individuals were convinced of it. It was such a conviction, for example, which sent Breck and his associates to the Northwest. The time came when the idea seized the minds of those who had chief control of the destinies of the Church, that it was her duty even to multiply bishops in regions where nobody thought of asking for them. This carried the whole principle with it. It greatly accelerated the development of this kind of work in the older dioceses as well as in the missionary jurisdictions. Bishops no longer waited for the "group of Church people" in a town to organize themselves; but they endeavored to plant the Church in every possible place.

This may be a mistaken notion of the mission of the Church. We suppose there are those who think it is. But there can be no mistake in assuming that, if it is pursued, it must entail much hardship upon many of the clergy who undertake such work; that it will result in large and continuous drafts upon the general funds of the Church; and that it will reduce the average of salaries. If this Church is to be a missionary Church in any real sense, all this must be deliberately faced. Another thing, we imagine, is also true; namely, that this changed policy is due chiefly to the influence of that "Oxford Movement" of which Dr. McConnell speaks. For the conviction that the Church was bound to propagate herself, even in communities where she has not been known, is closely connected with the view of the nature of the Church which that movement most strongly insisted upon. Here is the point at which the "priestly" idea really comes in on a large scale, and has undoubtedly wrought momentous changes.

Father Austin and His Teachings--XIII.

BY THE RT. REV. DR. MCLAREN,
BISHOP OF CHICAGO

ONE of Father Austin's leading parishioners had a son of thirty years, who had been sent to a university where everything but the Christian religion, or perhaps I ought to say, every religion but the Christian, was taught.

Two things ensued: First, the young man lost his faith, forgot his vows of Baptism and Confirmation, and "whooped up" the opinions of one of the professors who was altogether on the side of philosophical materialism. Second, he had a jolly good time during his course, was an expert in polo, devoutly given to billiards and cards, wonderful for century rides, lavish in betting on the games and races, and a representative member of three different clubs. In due course, with the aid of a coach, he got his degree, and returned to his home with the intention to become a gentleman-farmer on a large tract of land near the city, a gift from his parents. There was not much farming done, but he was a very busy young man, nevertheless; for nothing that could afford him amusement was neglected—parties, dinners, theaters, races, games, drives, cycling, and methods of "fun" of more dubious kind. Self-indulgence described the character and life of the man.

Father Austin often saw mortification and disappointment on the faces of the parents, and they might have seen the same on his; but while they were reticent about the iron that entered into their souls, he determined to break the silence, and in some way to get at the boy, if by winning his confidence he might haply draw him back to God, and to this end he asked him one day when there was a convenient chance, why he had given up his old place in the church.

The reply was entirely frank and unreserved. He did not think the Church was necessary to him, or consistent with his views of life. He had a belief, and he was living it out. The latest revelations of science had proved that man is the product of lower things, and has reached his present state as other animals have reached theirs. His life, like theirs, is an awaking out of other material phenomena, and his death is a falling asleep into still other phenomena. We have no memory of the matter of which we were composed, and never shall have any knowledge of the matter which is our fate at death. This is true as well of what is known as the mind as of the body. Mind is only a complicated material machine, and it dies with the death of the brain. This is the only life he had to live; and therefore he was the devotee of the present. The only time for him is now, and he intended to make it a good time.

Father Austin said he reminded him of St. Paul's words in the lesson of the Burial Office: "If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

"Precisely, that is the creed I profess and practice!"

"Of course, my dear boy, you are not the only one in this community who holds that creed, and there are many more who, while they profess the Christian creed, practice yours. The fact must be acknowledged that some modern scientific writers, without demonstrating their views, have made the impression upon many that they are cunningly arranged matter, and nothing more, and that they are doomed to extinction as conscious entities, although the actual matter of which they are composed is assumed to be indestructible. While very few know the cause of their tendencies, thousands are under the influence of this materialistic view of man, his origin and destiny, and are actually living in the world to-day as if the grave were the goal, and the idea of immortality demonstrated to be the baseless fabric of a dream. I heard of a millionaire who built himself a palace, saying he was going to have a fine palace to live in while he was in this world, for this was the only world he knew anything about. There are thousands, I say, who have come consciously or unconsciously under the influence of inferences from the teachings of materialistic scientists, and as a logical consequence, as you candidly acknowledge in your own case, they have given themselves up to self-indulgence. Their only aim seems to be to have a good time, so far as they can get it. How many of our young men and women recognize no higher end, and little wonder is it, when "papa" and "mamma" live the same life! I know what the end of all this will be, for the conditions have their frequent parallel in history. Well, my dear boy, from my point of view, it is all painfully sad, and I think I could break my heart over it, were it not that I know whose Spirit is striving with man's, and that His might is the ultimate force in the world. But, now, good by!"

"Stay! You are not purposing to leave me, are you, Father Austin? Why, I expected you would try to reason me out of my new opinions!"

"A man who adopts a creed and lives up to it, will soon enough find out by his life whether his creed is true or not, and if he finds that he has been mistaken, he will renounce it, and get another, as he is an honest man."

"But suppose that he goes so far and so long in the practice of it that he is not able to make a change?"

"True, true! I thank you for saying that, because it shows me that our talk ought not to end here. There is something to be said to a man who confesses the future possibility of a change of views when there shall be no possibility of a change of practice, and therefore my word to you is not to rest your eternal future on the creed that makes you the most animal of animals, for, if you and the beasts are only material organisms, they live to keep up life, and you live to abbreviate it by excess."

"It doesn't strike me that way; but I want to hear what you have to say, and I'll be honest with you, Father, if it shakes me."

"Well, let us define terms. The materialist says there is but one substance, and that substance is matter. Matter and the motions of matter are everything. Thought is the material product of the mechanical operation of the brain, and if thought, then emotion, imagination, memory, religion, every thing. Death is the death of the whole man. Therefore immortality is a dream. Chemistry will take care of the corpse. Over against this depressing statement, we believe that matter and mind, while partners, are distinct existences. Matter has properties which mind has not, and mind rises to planes which matter cannot reach.

"Of these two hypotheses, if they are no more, the hypothesis of two substances is most acceptable to mankind, and involves fewer difficulties than the theory of materialism."

"But does not modern science bring proofs that finally settle the question that matter is everything?"

"Credulous indeed are they who believe that materialism has been proved by modern science. What science has done, and this is all that it has done, has been to bring out more clearly than before the fact (which we unhesitatingly accept) of a very intimate relation between our thinking and our brain. We deny that 'the brain secretes thought as the liver secretes bile,' but we are profoundly convinced that in our present condition the mind works in partnership with the brain. We accept without dissent the inductions of science, but we do not commit ourselves to the conclusions of some scientists. We are not ready to reduce all psychology to physiology, any more than we would reduce all physiology to psychology, as the followers of Mrs. Eddy do. Knowledge is still hedged in by limitations, and science cannot go beyond a certain point. Thus, it has never been able to dissect a live brain. Its only anatomy is the brain from which the spirit has forever flown. It has nothing but matter to investigate. The intimate relations which yesterday existed between matter and not-matter have ceased. It is an absolute impossibility now to demonstrate by those relations that mind is matter.

"There is undoubtedly a similar limit of demonstration in the proof that mind is distinct from matter. Knowledge is as yet partial. But Emerson says all serious souls are better believers in immortality than they can give grounds for. 'The real evidence is too subtle, or is higher than we can write down in propositions, and therefore Wordsworth's ode is the best modern essay on the subject.' Man shall not live by science alone, and he is conscious of inner capacities which are not the less real because they cannot be pinned down by scalpels or disclosed by X rays. We do not expect that the immaterial will ever be demonstrated by the material. Nor has it been demonstrated by syllogisms. Its validity rests on consciousness, and this is the supreme reason why all the unscientific people follow the lead of those scientific experts who believe that mind is not material. Their instincts direct them. There is in them an intuitive conviction, a consciousness that their nature is dual, and that the mind is distinct and separable from the body."

"But the consciousness itself may be material!"

"Then is it not a strange and inexplicable phenomenon that the brain should secrete the thought that thought is not originated by the brain? and is it not even more incredible that it should be the ordinary habit of the gray matter of the brain to palm off that illusion upon the whole world? Matter makes many troubles for us, but it tells no lies."

"Can you say the same of consciousness? Is it truthful when it represents itself to be immaterial?"

"In reply to that, I would say that our knowledge of self by consciousness is more immediate than our knowledge of matter by the senses. We become conscious of matter only through the medium of the senses; it is secondary knowledge; it is knowledge by representation, while we are conscious of our own existence intuitively and without meditation. We have therefore more reason to trust original testimony than testimony at second-hand. There is also, therefore, more reason for doubting the evidence of the senses, by which only can we know matter, than the evidence of consciousness by which we know mind. Why should we doubt either? Why not accept both lines of evidence, and act accordingly, as all the world does? Every man acts as if matter were matter; and every man instinctively recognizes the duality of his nature, and this forms the guiding principle of his whole life. His actions, his language, his laws, his education, his poetry and art, his social relation, his religion, all are based upon the validity of his conscious mentality."

"But cannot all this be accounted for by education?"

"The difficulty with the objection you offer, my dear boy, is that duality asserts itself in the younger years of childhood, and has been discovered to have existed in the most primitive stages of human history. The earliest forms of natural religion were saturated with belief in the presence and power of invisible spirits. From what other source could this belief have been derived than man's instinctive conviction that he was himself a spirit, a soul within a body, which would survive after the death of the body?"

"But here is another consideration. You are not so long away from your books as to have forgotten that modern thinkers, in their efforts to explain the significance of the universe, have come to believe that its ultimate reality is to be found beyond the line of sensuous perception, that there are forces not immediately knowable, which are the true centres of energy, and that all these unknown factors resolve themselves, by centripetal activity, into one infinite and eternal energy; that this fontal source, which is transcendental to the universe, does not refuse to remain within it as its ultimate potency and directing providence, and that nature thus becomes a veil which half reveals and half conceals the Infinite One. This inspiring conception of the relation between the seen and the unseen, holds strong sway, and must influence the world for good, if too eager minds do not distort it into pantheistic shape. It is largely the scientific, rather than the theological, thinker to whom this revival of the old Hebrew conception is due. Now, if it is the lesson of the material universe that behind its phenomena rises in majestic splendor the vast upholding Spirit Divine, why should not we as gladly embrace the suggested relation of the spirit of man to his body as a relation which glorifies the latter without violating the incommunicable unity of the former? And why should not the heart leap within us as we contemplate an analogy which makes us in some sense a reflection of God?"

"If there be any virtue in these thoughts, let it reach your reason, but above all, let me appeal to your heart. Why should one who is so dear to others put an impassable gulf between him and them?—a gulf of intellectual variance, but worse than that, of moral incongeniality? For it is a fact which you have acknowledged that your life has changed with your change of belief, and certainly the kind of life which your theory has produced is not what you have known so long in your parental home. The condition of men is always governed by their views of the world. You know what views made that home. You know that your views have withdrawn you from the sacred atmosphere of its oratory; already you have lost taste for its viands of heaven, its cup of salvation, you! you, of whom I heard your proud father say in Hamlet's words:

'Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;
A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man.'

You, to surrender to a creed that animalizes, and a code of ethics that demoralizes, and a career that can end only in disgrace and despair. How can you, oh, how can you do it?"

There was a far-away look in the young man's eyes, for he was thinking of the former days, before he went away to college, and was saying to himself that those were his happiest days. With a quiet "good evening, and God bless you!" the priest withdrew, and went away to minister to some of his dear sick folk.

One year after.—The change did not come at once; there was a gradual surrender of self-indulgences, there was infinitely more farming done, and the old home brightened up wonderfully. To-day (Easter) just one year after their conversation, the priest gave him the Bread of Life. On the right knelt his father, on the left, his mother.

The Angel of the Garden

BY S. ALICE RANLETT

What chosen seraph of the radiant host
Knelt, wondering, reverent, at the Saviour's side,
In dark Gethsemane?
How did he comfort the World's Comforter,
Himself in pain and anguish all untired?
What consolation—message to the Son
Did he from home-land and from Father bring?
In that strange agony,
How did he strive to bind Christ's breaking heart?
What was the marvel of his ministr'ring?
However else the spirit bright is called,
Among his brothers in heaven's courts above,
That secret and soul name
Which made him dare bend o'er God suffering,
Was that above all others—it was love;
Love was the message which the Father's Word
Spoke through the angel, and love winged his flight,
What time alone he came
To suffering, triumphing, Incarnate Love,
In the dim garden, at the still midnight.

Letters to the Editor

CHURCH AND SACRAMENTS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

"Parish Priest," in your issue of March 18th, says: "One or two things in the paper" (which I contributed to your issue of Feb. 25th) "struck me as being rather strange," and one of these is the statement that "the Evangelicals of our country treat this rite (i.e., the Lord's Supper) as a memorial and not as a means to convey grace," and he cites the Methodist article on the subject to disprove what I said. The Methodists have never outgrown their Wesleyism, and for this let us be thankful. But I do not find the sacramental system with the Baptists, the Presbyterians, the Congregationalists, or the Disciples, all large religious bodies in this country. The last-named come nearer to the Church's position than any of the others, but they almost negative the teaching by a practical denial of the Real Presence—they discredit the office and work of the Holy Ghost to a very large extent. My sympathies are, with the good people in all these denominations, and I welcome any tendency that looks to "godly union and concord." But I must insist, surrounded as I am by three-score-and-ten to one, that these good people reject and repudiate in toto the idea of grace conferred through the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. As to whether or not they get the blessing—that is another question, as Rudyard Kipling would say. "Parish Priest" argues that "regenerating grace" can flow through irregular channels. Now, it seems to me that we might go as far as Frederick W. Robertson, and affirm "that there is a Church on earth larger than the limits of the Church visible; larger than Jew, or Christian, or the Apostle Peter, dreamed; larger than our narrow hearts dare to hope even now." But it is very certain that the Master called certain men out of the world, instructed them in the ways of the kingdom, and commissioned them to do certain things, promising to be with them to the end of the world. And this Church affirms that persons are admitted to the threefold ministry by "lawful authority"—certainly we cannot assent to the performance of priestly functions by those who have not the lawful authority. It is not a question of what God does or will do—for who can limit the goodness and the mercy of the Lord—it is a question of fact. Is the Christian Church a divine institution, or is it a human organization? Has it perpetual life, or is it subject to lapses? Would "Parish Priest" permit me, layman as I am, to take his place at the altar? If not, he is illogical, for I am a communicant of the Church, and if my non-communicating Methodist brother performs priestly functions, why may not I? Any of the race of Adam are privileged to call on God's Holy Name, and I am sure He will hear and bless. But if the Master "hath instituted and ordained holy mysteries as pledges of His love," and hath committed these to a holy priesthood, it is not lawful and right for us to hold the same in contempt. Layman as I am, I yet put greater store on these words than apparently does "Parish Priest": "Receive the Holy Ghost for the Office and Work of a Priest in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the Imposition of our Hands. Whose sins thou dost forgive, they are forgiven; and whose sins thou dost retain, they are retained. And be thou a faithful Dispenser of the Word of God, and of His Holy Sacraments; in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

TEXAS.

P. S.—Since writing the foregoing, I have had a talk with a Presbyterian brother, and he tells me their standards hold the Lord's Supper to be an extraordinary means of grace to the worthy recipient. That, too, is encouraging, and if "Parish Priest" can point out others, I shall rejoice in the information. But if we believe in "One Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church," are we not necessarily driven to the Succession for the proper administration of the Lord's Supper? On any other basis, it seems to me, we are an impertinence in those communities where the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists have full sway.

THE BIBLICAL EXPLORATIONS IN EGYPT

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Splendid as are the discoveries in Egypt relating to every department of human learning and progress, none surpass in value those which relate to Old Testament history, and to the teachings of Christ and his disciples and followers, in the earliest days of Christianity. Here the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund appeals with unique interest to Christian people everywhere. The papyri with the earliest texts of the Gospels far exceed in interest to such the texts of the newly-found lines of Homer, and stanzas of Sappho, or the ancient text of Thucydides. The Egypt Exploration Fund must appeal earnestly for many more subscriptions—even but five dollars securing an ample return in the fine illustrated quarto volume of the year and the annual "Archæological Report" brochure. Fifty bishops of the Episcopal Church, eminent ministers of all denominations, one hundred and ten university or college presidents, have subscribed. All services by the honorary officials are a gratuity. I simply ask now that all interested, address, for our illustrated circulars, the Rev. William Copley Winslow, or Mrs. Buckman, secretary, at the national office, 59 Temple Street, Boston. Other information gladly given. A request for circulars will be promptly answered. WM C. WINSLOW,

Vice President and Hon. Secretary.

SELF-SACRIFICE

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Everybody ought to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest the sermon on self sacrifice, preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury in Westminster Abbey, and recently published in THE LIVING CHURCH.

The sermon applies quite as well to the tobacco habit as to the drink habit, and it is high time for self sacrifice in regard to the former habit; for tobacco, in one form or another, is doing so great harm among our boys and young men, that it is deemed necessary to teach boys, in our schools, the destructive effects of it on the human system.

For this purpose there is now in use in our schools a book on physiology, in which the effects of alcohol, opium, and tobacco are set forth.

In said book is a quotation from Dr. Willard Parker who wrote: "It is now many years since my attention was called to the insidious, but positively destructive, effects of tobacco on the human system. I have seen a great deal of its influence upon those who use and work in it. . . . The duty of abstaining from the slow killing of one's self by this poison is as clear as the duty of not cutting one's throat. Tobacco is doing more harm in the world than rum. It is destroying our race."

These observations of Dr. Parker have been confirmed by recent events. For when war was declared with Spain, it was discovered that a large percentage of the young men offering themselves for the army, were unfit for military duty on account of the "tobacco heart!" and wherever one goes, he sees boys with their cigarettes, cultivating the worse than useless smoking habit. Nor can it be denied that the influence of the smoker is on the side of this destructive habit. But in this age of self-indulgence, self-denial seems to have become a "lost art," and few can be found willing to make the self-sacrifice in regard to smoking or the use of tobacco, even for Christ's sake, or for the sake of the salvation of our boys and young men.

Perhaps some who read this letter may say the writer is an old crank. But many said worse things than that of our Saviour: "For many said, He hath a devil, and is mad, why hear ye Him?" J. I. CORBYN.

Personal Mention

The Rev. Octavius Applegate, Jr., rector of St. James' church, Keene, N. H., has accepted the rectorship of St. John's, Kingston, N. Y.

The Rev. John F. Ballantyne has resigned St. Peter's church, Springfield, Mass.

The Rev. H. A. Chouinard, rector at Montevideo, Minn., has resigned, and accepted the rectorship of Holy Communion, St. Peter, Minn. He will enter upon his new cure on Easter Day.

The Rev. Frank Pinckney Clark, priest-in-charge of St. John's church, New London, Pa., has resigned on account of ill health.

The Rev. Chas. A. Denfield has resigned the rectorship of the church of the Saviour, Providence, R. I., to accept that of the church of the Transfiguration, Edgewood, in the same diocese.

The present address of the Rev. J. Belton Haslam, curate of St. Edmund's, Milwaukee, is 155 Oneida st.

The Rev. P. H. Linley, of the senior class, Seabury, has been assigned to St. Luke's, Hastings, Minn. Upon his ordination to the priesthood in June, he will be inducted into the rectorship.

The Rev. Wyllys Rede, D.D., has resigned his position as canon of the cathedral and rector of the church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, Ga., and accepted the office of Archdeacon of Savannah. He will continue to reside in Atlanta until after the diocesan convention in May, but will devote his whole time to the work of the archdeaconry.

The Rev. E. M. Rodman, of Plainfield, N. J., has gone for a three months' trip to Palestine and the Orient.

The Rev. Henry M. Stone has resigned the rectorship of Berkeley Memorial church, Middletown, R. I., to accept that of Trinity church, Newport in the same diocese.

The Rev. George R. Savage, rector of the church of the Beloved Disciple, Philadelphia, has removed to 1632 Oxford st., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Rev. Stanley F. W. Symonds has resigned the rectorship of the church of the Advent, Kennett Square, Pa., to accept a call to St. Michael's mission church, Wilmington, Del., of which he will take charge April 9th.

The address of the Rev. H. P. Viborn is changed from Albion, Mich., to Dowagiac, Mich.

Official

Bishop Potter has deposed the Rev. Robert T. Nichol from the priesthood, and the Rev. B. Beverley Arden from the diaconate, for causes not affecting moral character. The deposition took place at the church of the Beloved Disciple, New York City, and was witnessed by the Rev. Messrs. Henry M. Barbour and the Rev. John Acworth.

STANDING COMMITTEE, LONG ISLAND

At a meeting of the Standing Committee, held Feb. 26th, Messrs. Henry Rutgers Remsen and Henry Walter Bunn, Ph. D., were recommended to the Bishop as candidates for Holy Orders, Mr. Robert Philip Kreidler, for Deacons' Orders, and the Rev. Arthur Wynn Shaw, for Priests' Orders.

Ordinations

On the 5th Sunday in Lent (Passion Sunday) at St. Simeon's memorial church, Philadelphia, a special ordination was held, when the Rev. W. J. Robertson and the Rev. T. A. Hilton were advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Whitaker. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. H. Falkner. The Rev. Mr. Robertson was presented by Dean Bartlett, of the Philadelphia Divinity School, and the Rev. Mr. Hilton, by the Rev. Edgar Cope. The latter is now assistant at St. Paul's church, Camden, N. J. The Rev. Mr. Robertson is assistant at St. Simeon's.

Our Easter Offering

BY ADA STEWART SHELTON

'Tis Easter morning. Holy is the hour
Within the church, where festal wreath and flower
Have made His dwelling place most fair and sweet,
With joy again, the risen Lord to greet.
Through chancel window radiant sunbeams steal,
The throng of worshipers in silence kneel,
Until from priest, the glad command is heard—
"Lift up your hearts!" How every heart is stirred!
The answer vibrates on each deepest chord.
"We lift them up," we cry, "unto the Lord."
What are these hearts so freely offered there?
Have they been beautified by love, by prayer?
By work for Him? Been strengthened by His grace?
Been often found within His dwelling place?
Or is it 'neath the glow of Easter skies
We offer them, a careless sacrifice?
Oh, Lord Divine! grant that our hearts may be An offering worthy to lift up to Thee.

THE Eastern peoples are generally sharply distinguished from Europeans by the "quiescence." The Chinaman, for example, can write all day, work all day, stand in one position all day, weave, beat gold, carry ivory, do infinitely tedious jobs for ever and ever, and discover no more weariness and irritation than if he were a machine. This quality appears in early life. There are no restless, naughty boys in China. They are all appallingly good, and will plod away in school without recesses or recreation of any kind. The Chinaman can do without exercise. Sport or play seems to him so much waste labor. He can sleep anywhere, and in any position—amid rattling machinery, deafening uproar, squalling children, and quarrelling adults.

IN Hall Caine's noted romance of the Isle of Man, "The Deemster," occur two remarkable literary bulls which have, as far as is known, not hitherto been noticed. The first occurs in the seventeenth chapter, where Dan, the hero of the story, comes to the parish church, and the novelist proceeds as follows:

He remembered that this was Christmas Eve. The choir was practicing the Psalms for the morrow's service.

"Before I was troubled I went wrong; but now have I kept Thy Word."

Dan went up to the church porch, and stood there and listened.

"It is good for me that I have been in trouble, that I may learn Thy statutes."

The service alluded to is that of the Church of England, or the Protestant Episcopal of this country, and the abstract quoted is from the Psalms for the morning, which is part of the cxix; that is to say, for the 25th day of the month. But as it is Christmas Day, it happens that there are proper Psalms appointed for that day, and no portion of the cxix Psalm is designated.

Again, in the 26th chapter, the Bishop is said to read for the first lesson on this Christmas morning, the story of Eli and Samuel, as found in the First Book of Samuel, chapter

iv. The proper lesson, as given in the calendar, is Isaiah ix, and the only date when the Eli story referred to could be legally read, is April 17.

It may be that Hall Caine purposely erred, to meet the exigencies of his story, but then again, as he is not an Episcopalian, he could readily have made the blunders referred to. —Syracuse Journal.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

"My daughter is too delicate to go to early Communion" said a mother recently to the writer, "the doctor has forbidden it." But the same fragile creature thinks nothing of going to a ball and dancing till daylight, six and seven times in a month.

Miss E. M. Charles, said to be England's first woman architect, is about to be admitted as an associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects. The profession is held to be peculiarly adapted to women.

Ruskin Hall, Oxford, is the latest addition to the colleges of that university. The scheme has been devised by two young Americans, Messrs. W. Vrooman and C. A. Baird, members of the university, and its aim is to supply a practical education to labor leaders at the minimum of expense. The entire cost to the students of the proposed college, for board, lodging, and tuition, will be $5 a week. To those who are willing to do service in the college as cooks, scouts, etc., the privileges of the institution will be extended at a very reduced rate—in some cases free. The success of this experiment will be watched with very great interest on both sides of the Atlantic—not least in the United States, where, it must be remembered, Cornell university was started in accordance with a similar idea.

A church in the suburbs of London had a new reredos put up. It was a beautiful piece of wood carving, the work of some Ober-Ammergau carvers. The old verger was very proud of it, and liked to explain it. One day he said, pointing to the carved halo around the head of a saint, "I suppose they do wear them things in hot countries."

We may not agree with all that Dr. Theodore Cuyler said to the reporter of the New York Tribune, who asked him if he thought the world was growing better, but there is food for thought in it, and therefore it is worth quoting: "In this country there is an advance in some respects, and in some directions we have retrograded. There is more unity among the Churches, better sanitary conditions in our cities, and popular education has advanced. There is a lowering of tone in reference to the Sabbath [Sunday], and I am afraid that in our commercial life there is a larger infusion of the gambling element, making it more exciting and trying to the consciences of men. There is an increase in social extravagance, an aping of things in Europe. It makes the country less severely Republican. Our old American stock is diminishing every year, and we must stand more and more for our old ideas against the influx of foreign ideas."

"Voluntary? What's that?" says Sam.

"Why," said Milly, "it's a hymn that the choir, or somebody in it, sings of their own accord, without the preacher givin' it out; just like your tomatoes come up in the spring, voluntary, without your plantin' the seed. That's the way they do in the city churches."

It seems strange, says The Interior, that a nation which enforces the laws of the Bible in its courts and its penitentiaries, and even executes its penalties upon its scaffolds, should refuse to teach that Bible code in its schools. The anomaly will seem more and more startling as the question is the more discussed. Eventually the common precepts of our common Christianity will be taught in our schools, or be no longer required by the State. The question is coming to a head in our next Congress, when it will be found by the Mormon issue, whether we hold the Christian view of marriage as a principle or as a fad. The fact is, that Christianity is rooted deeper in the mind and heart of the nation than demagogues and trimmers know.

Music is the latest developed of the arts; therefore, says The Literary Digest, "it is not surprising if we are still at the day of small things in American music." Mr. John S. Van Cleve, writing in Music, speaks thus on the subject:

American musical life is in much the same heterogeneous, even chaotic, state as American society. Here is a country fashionable on one side of the street and plebeian on the other; proud of its progressiveness, yet patiently tolerant of abuses of public franchises such as would disgrace the most despotic nation of the Old World; dividing itself sharply more and more into two classes of human beings, those who have more money than is good for them, and those who have less money than is good for them; a nation which is no longer a country, but an empire, which contains every climate of the globe, every nation of the human race, and keeps its citizens in every possible degree of varied circumstance. Is it strange that such a people should pay thirty thousand dollars per year in royalties to such a march-maker as Sousa, and such a waltz maker as the author of "After the Ball," should feed its religious life upon such a mild mixture of milk, warm water, sugar and bread crumbs, as the Gospel hymns and the like outputs, yet patronize the great artists of the operatic world with such lavishness that they may well bless us and laugh at us alternately? Demand of the orchestral director all the latest works of the Germans, French, and Russians, and pour themselves in tumultuous waves to hear the most abstruse creations of Bach, Brahms, and Berlioz, as they do at the Cincinnati May Festivals? Surely, a strange land this dear America, with her muddy stream of street music and her crystal fountains of most sacred art, with her worship of Handel, and her toleration of banal Sunday school ditties.

The Philadelphia Times draws attention to a condition of things which demands serious thought. It is certainly not a promise of good to the country: "Continental Sunday gaiety seems to have struck New York with a force which almost causes milder-mannered places to stand aghast. Nearly everybody now has Sunday afternoons at home, and the avenue is crowded with turnouts almost as much as on a week day in mid-season. Musicales are given in the smartest of style, and the restaurants are crowded with dinner parties in evening dress—quite a departure from the staid old notions of just dropping in, in frock coats and wraps for a few minutes' chat after church. But such a condition is immensely popular, and, like as not, the fever will spread."

The permanency of a true work of art has for us an inspiration, expressed thus by The Outlook:

"An artist pours his life into his book, his statue, his building, his painting, with the conviction that he has laid up for himself that fame which is the human synonym for immortality, and men guard and cherish the perfect work because, being perfect, they are persuaded that it must endure. So the marbles remain though the Greeks are gone; the Madonna survives though Raphael has departed; the Fifth Symphony speaks though Beethoven is silent; Westminster abides though its builders have perished. In its art the race sees the visible emblems of its immortality."

The effect of stimulants on the endurance of fighting men has been tested in various ways of late. The Sirdar in his Soudanese campaign, sent out three regiments, one to whom whiskey had been given, one to whom beer had been allowed, and one to whom nothing but tea had been permitted. The men to whom the whiskey and the beer had been given evinced renewed vitality at certain stages of their journey, but all showed reaction and a certain collapse before the march was finished. The men who had taken nothing but tea showed the most endurance, and the regiment was the only one to reach its destination in good condition. No stimulants were therefore allowed afterward in the campaign. During our late war with Spain, says Harper's Bazar, two of our men-of-war were sent out without a drop of any kind of stimulant on board, and as all of us now know, the fighting qualities of naval men have proved themselves beyond the suspicion of reproach. A substitute for alcoholic stimulants was given in the oatmeal water, a tank of it being always on tap, as it were. Both nourishment and stimulus are given by this harmless and innocent beverage, which has been used for some time by the denizens of large cities.

The Resurrection

WE like to look on the mountains because heights are in us, and on the ocean because far shores and horizons still farther are in us. We like life, because life eternal is in us. What we want is that amity which will knit into a whole, height and distance and eternity, with brief time and hindering space, and the scars and seams and shadows we carry. It was with the Resurrection that the new reconciliation began its career.

Death is ever before us, as the glacier pass girt on either side by snowy precipices which we fear to cross, an arrangement of which we do not approve, and which we think might have been something different. But the worship of Christ has so wedded death to life, so joined the country here and the country transalpine, that snow and glacier have lost their terror, and the pass invites adventure. There are times, oftenest at evening, that the snow glows into a rose and the peaks are tipped with gold and a purple gathers on the sky beyond, and we cannot keep our eyes off the landscape, and what is beyond becomes an inquisitiveness. Every religion lifts the line of this horizon on to another; the evolution of religion which the Ascension pressure has effected, has so lifted the horizon as to make a friendly unity of two worlds, so expanded the religious faculty that we regard our interests and relations far away with wonder, curiosity, desire. The years bring us a deepening solitude, the memory of what has been a deepening sadness, the sorrow of the world a deepening pathos, but there is no sense of wrong or anger at the heart as we communicate with the Resurrection power.

Rather we go deeper into trust and hope, we touch the element of infinity, we wait our assumption into the unseen. Our last shall be as the first, a birthday into light and love. Much remains to be explained—the misfits, jars, tragedies which confuse us here; but we see enough to wait the reversion into which we are coming in the Resurrection, when we shall find, past all doubt, that all is love. A modern lyric of this reversion was written by Newman:—

"Praise to the Hollest in the height
And in the depth be praise;
In all His works most wonderful,
Most sure in all His ways."

A second life is an assurance confided to us in the medium of the Resurrection. Mixed in this mystic being is the sense of our continuance beyond death, "a presence which is not to be put by," as Wordsworth has it. Somehow we have not had a freehold in it. It is an awe in many religions, a silence in others, a gleam of the homeland from which we have come, the murmurs of a memory. It has at last resulted into confidence and persuasion. Life and immortality have been brought into light.—W. W. Peyton in Contemporary Review.

The King of Musical Instruments

BY THE REV. FRANK J. MALLET

THE evolution of the modern pipe organ must ever be of interest to Churchmen. It has a history, unique and attractive. A few facts will remind us of the slow, but sure, development of this instrument that has been of such inestimable benefit to God's saints throughout the centuries. We read in the history of a time not far from the deluge, that "Jubal was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ," but the tyro understands that "the organ" there mentioned could mean nothing more than a mere set of Pandean pipes, a number of reeds, of different lengths, placed side by side, so as to be conveniently blown by the mouth.

Who could have predicted that, from such an unpretentious beginning, the marvelous and complicated instrument of our days could possibly be evolved? What toil of hand and brain all this implies! What skill and devotion! What success and failure! What romance and biography hover around this mighty instrument!

To one standing, as some of us have been privileged to stand, before the organ in St. Paul's or King's College chapel, it seems almost impossible to conceive of the "former day"—to realize that the majestic tones of "to-day" were the shepherd pipes of the far-away "yesterday."

The organ was introduced into the service of the Church probably about the end of the seventh century, but the development of the instrument was slow, for as late as the twelfth century, there were seldom more than twelve or fifteen notes in the entire compass, and as the keys were six inches wide, if "reports are true," the work of bringing forth music was pretty hard, and, moreover, required a strong man to manipulate them—striking each with the clinched fist. Those were not the days for "women organists."

A description of the organ in Durham cathedral, as it existed in the fifteenth century, runs thus: "Such organs as you have built are seen nowhere; twice six bellows above are ranged in a row, and fourteen lie below; these, by alternate blasts, supply a quantity of wind, and are worked by seventy strong men laboring with their arms, covered with perspiration, each inciting his companion to drive the wind up with all his strength, that the full-bosomed box may speak with its four hundred pipes, which the hand of the organist governs. Two brethren of a religious order sit at the instrument, and each manages his own alphabet; they strike the seven differences of joyous sound, adding the music of the lyric semitone; like thunder the iron tones batter the ear, so that it may receive no sound but that alone. To such an amount does it reverberate, that echoing in every direction, every one stops his gaping ears, being in nowise able to draw near and bear the sound. The music is heard throughout the town, and the flying fame thereof is gone out over the whole country."

Thus we find the good citizens and Churchmen of Durham were made to suffer, that we might enjoy our noble organ-heritage. Verily we are debtors to the past, debtors to a long line of inventive geniuses and devotees to the art divine—some lay, some clerical—and no man can estimate the study, devotion, and piety that through the ages have been freely lavished on the magnificent instrument.

That their labor has not been in vain, the world knows full well, for as among the arts music holds a foremost place, claiming a larger constituency than any of the sister-arts; so the work of these men was fraught with greater results, not only from an ecclesiastical, but from a secular, standpoint, than if they had devoted their energies to some other artistic end.

These men believed that there was some real connection between music and morals, between consecrated art and religion, and so it has come to pass that just as the military band evokes, and is expressive of, the patriotic spirit, and the orchestra stands for, and evokes, the "gay and festive" spirit, so the pipe organ stands for, and ever evokes, the soul's highest and best emotions.

The orchestra is adapted for the footlights and the ballroom; the military band, for outdoor, patriotic, and public purposes; and the organ—the Church's own instrument—seems most at home within the hallowed courts of the Lord's house, the temple. All this the Anglican Church has ever practically emphasized, and so it has come to pass that the Independents and other Reformation-begotten bodies, have at last been moulded to her model, and the interdicts have gradually been removed, except in the case of a few sects who will ere long also add themselves to the admiring throng who recognize the part the organ plays, in more senses than one, in the worship of Almighty God. In the "light of other days," it is amazing to read Henry Ward Beecher's eulogy on the organ. Some years before his death he said: "I would not be thought unduly enthusiastic in speaking of this instrument, which I look upon as a historian looks upon a great nation, that through a thousand years has been evolved by great providential events and eductions, until it has reached a place in which manifestly it stands a prime power in the world. It is the most complex of all instruments, it is the most harmonious of all instruments, it is the grandest of all instruments. Beginning far back, growing as things grow which have great uses, it has come now to stand, I think, immeasurably, transcendently above every other instrument, and not only that, but above every combination of instrument."

This is not mere empty eulogy; yet how strange it sounds, coming from a leading preacher representative of Puritan elements who, in former years, hated and anathematized this noble instrument, and the Church which it stood for and represented. What would the predecessors of Beecher say to this glowing tribute?

The Church clung tenaciously to the "box of whistles," because it has ever been "the outward and visible sign" of stately and elevating ideals in Church music, embodying the best ideas of worship. The organ has stood as the representative of chaste and solemn music, and this instrument is the most potent factor in the expression of our liturgy and offices.

Through all the clamor raised against the Church and her ways, against her "forms and ceremonies," her architecture, her symbolism, through all this, the Historic Church has stoutly and consistently maintained her position, and she has already seen the harvest of such faithful sowing; and so to-day we find that the prominent religious bodies are coming to acknowledge that our position is right, hence they are copying our architecture and liturgical worship, and even our vested choirs.

The organ has taken with it into the outside religious bodies, the Te Deum, the canticles, the chants, the Churchly hymnology of the Anglican Communion. In a word, the various denominations, or at least their leaders, are about ready to endorse the utterance of one of their own number, a professor in a certain institution of learning, who, lately writing on "Religion and Music," said: "Christianity has borne consummate flowers of song, hymns that palpitate with precious heart-throbs, melodies that mount up on eagle's wings, anthems and oratorios that seem to be foretastes of the angelic praises, and yet these very blossoms have been so imitated and reproduced in clumsy wax and flimsy paper, that thousands of would-be worshipers know nothing of the fragrant and fruitful originals, and are even disgusted with the sham and paltriness of everything called sacred music; this prevalent vulgarity of music in religious uses is a grievous evil."

Surely, this kind of utterance indicates a yearning for "better things" in religious music, and may we not credit this growing dissatisfaction to the influence of the organ and its inherent accompaniments? The historic branches of the Church have been using, and, by the grace of God, will continue to use, what the professor says the other religious people have not—"the fragrant and fruitful originals." Some of these are in our possession, and can be enjoyed, in some portions of the Church, in their "original" purity and power.

The organ, in neither prelude nor postlude, should ever lend itself to light or unseemly music. It is set apart for sacred use. Its message is sacred. The organ is "a poor thing to play a waltz on." Its office is to express for each worshiper the "inarticulate, heavenly speech," the dumb craving of the soul that comes heavily laden to the "holy place," there to find this good angel waiting to waft the soul towards God and heaven.

Easter Victory

BY THE REV. JOHN POWERS

Rejoice, ye sinless spirits bright,
Ye first-born, fadeless sons of light,
Extol your Victor-King, for He Hath spoiled the spoiler mightily.

O Ye, His ransomed saints, proclaim Triumphantly your Saviour's Name,—
The Christ who died but lives again,
And evermore shall live and reign.

Ye sons of men, exultant sing,
Loud let your thankful psalms ring,
Your direst foe, the monster death,
The Great Redeemer conquereth.

Let all things that have breath give praise,
Be this, henceforth, the day of days,
For life to death no more is thrall,
But Christ, the Life, is Lord of all.

The Garrison Church. Sketches of the History of St. Thomas' Parish, Garrison Forrest, Baltimore Co., Md. 1742-1852. By the Rev. Ethan Allen, D. D., Baltimore. Edited by the Rev. Hobart Smith, M. A., Rector St. Thomas' Parish, 1898; with additional sketches. New York: James Pott & Co. 1898. Price, $2 50.

Would that every colonial parish had had such careful historians as the author and the editor of this handsome volume, for we should not only know more about the beginnings of the American Church, but we should also be able to form a far better estimate of those struggles with political disaster and sectarian jealousy which the Church in so many individual parishes sustained, sometimes with success, but not always. In this book there is a most interesting and valuable account of the efforts of one rector of St. Thomas', the Rev. John Andrews, D. D., in conjunction with the Rev. Wm. West, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, to persuade the two Methodist leaders, Messrs. Asbury and Coke, not to separate from the Church by setting up a formal, organized schism. The effort was futile, but it is worth noting that Mr. Asbury professed that "the difference between us lay not so much in doctrines and forms of worship as in experience and practice." As the historian justly remarks: "These relative differences between the Church and the Methodists have since that day materially changed. . . . Now, after seventy years have passed away (1784-1852), it is seen that the difference lies not so much in experience and practice as in forms of worship and government." (P. 47.) After all the vicissitudes of colonial and revolutionary days, and the hardly less discouraging epoch of 1789 to 1820, this old parish, after seeming to be almost extinct, or at any rate, moribund, took on new life. Its roots were planted too deep in the soil to allow of its perishing. It is now one of the strongest country parishes in Maryland—in fact, it is now a mother of parishes and chapels. "Within the limits of St. Thomas' parish, as constituted in 1742, there are now seven parishes or organized congregations, with ten churches and chapels, 656 communicants, and appropriations, $10,371.95. The historical notes, appendices, and biographical sketches make this a very valuable "original," under the category, "Americana." The illustrations are excellent, and so is the press work.

The Kingdom of Heaven, Here, and Hereafter. By Rayner Winterbotham, M. A., LL. B., B. Sc., Canon of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh. New York: The Macmillan Company. 1898. Price, $1.

Our Lord set forth the salient characteristics of the Kingdom of Heaven in parables, which have been an inexhaustible mine for the Christian students of every age. This volume is an other contribution, and in many respects a very valuable one, to the Parable literature. The author confesses that his undertaking is an arduous one, in which any large measure of success can scarcely be looked for. Nevertheless, he has given a fresh and helpful exposition in most instances, and has endeavored to avoid the common snare of finding, or trying to find, much more in the Parables than our Lord appears to have intended we should find in them. It has been pointed out by many expositors that we should be on our guard against this tendency to find a hidden meaning for every detail of a parable, yet nearly all of them fall under the temptation to do so. We would particularly commend Excursus III., "On the Destiny of the Lost," which is appended to this volume. While it is as broad a treatment of the subject, from the Scriptural point of view, as we could have, yet it is clean contrary to the rather mawkish Universalism which has such a prevailing power in Christian thought.

Workers Together With God. A Series of Papers on Some of the Church's Work by Some of the Church's Workers. Edited by Nathaniel Keymer, M. A. Second edition. Oxford and London: A. R. Mowbray & Co.

If we ventured any criticism on this collection of papers, we would suggest that rather too much has been attempted, and that the result is in many instances disappointing. Here are sixty-seven papers, on as many separate topics, besides a series of notes on the work of the district visitor, by the compiler, occupying thirty-nine pages; and the whole collection fills three hundred and seventy-eight pages. Quite a number of the papers are scrappy, and seem to have been hastily written. However, one can gain many helpful suggestions from them, as a whole, and one of the impressions the reader will doubtless take away is that of the magnitude, variety, and searching minuteness of the work of the Church of England among all sorts of poor and needy folk. Most of the papers are thoroughly practical, and will repay study.

The Federation of the World. By Benjamin F. Trueblood, LL.D. New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.

The noble dreams—are they prophecies?—which Tennyson utters in "Locksley Hall," and "Locksley Hall Sixty Years After," give the germic motive of this sympathetic essay for the hoped and longed-for betterment of man. Is it a dream, or is it a prophecy, to imagine that America may yet be the key-stone of an arch of peace which shall embrace within its shadow all races of men upon this earth! May not our gradually increasing consciousness that America has a higher destiny than to be a well-fed, self-sustaining nation, help on the greater idea that she is to lead all people to true life, liberty, and happiness in a world made one by universal light and a world-wide peace? The book in question is well worth reading, and no one can read it without hoping and wishing for the federation of the world.

Prof. Smith is widely known as a clever man of letters, and a destructive critic of Christianity. His attitude towards Christian institutions is so hostile that no one but an advanced free-thinker or open infidel could read his writings with patience. So biased and distorted are his views, that they lie at most beyond the range of reasonable consideration. What, for instance, is to be done with a man who can make such a statement as the following: "Christianity, as it came from the lips of Jesus of Nazareth, was like the philosophy of Socrates, unliturgical and unsacerdotal; its liturgy was one simple prayer." What further errors could be crowded into a single sentence? His view of the inspiration of Holy-Scripture may serve as another example of the sort of ideas which are embodied in this book: "An inspiration which errs, which contradicts itself, which dictates manifest incredibilities, such as the stopping of the sun, Balaam's speaking ass, Elisha's avenging bears, or the transformation of Nebuchadnezzar, is no inspiration at all. It requires the supplementary action of human criticism to winnow the divine from the human, the truth from the falsehood; and the result of the process varies with the personal tendencies of the critics. The use of the phrase 'inspiration,' when the belief in inspiration has been abandoned, is worse than weak; it is Jesuitical, and will end as all Jesuitry must end." To those whose business it is to combat the prevailing forms of unbelief, this book may be of interest. We could not recommend any one else to read it.

The Hebrew Prophets. By the Rev. R. L. Ottley, M. A. (Oxford Church Text Books). New York: James Pott & Co. 1898. Price, 30c.

The Oxford text books are cheap but scholarly manuals, dealing with the more important branches of religious knowledge. This little volume on the Hebrew prophets is a marvel of condensed learning and information. We were about to say accurate information, but as the book is written from the point of view of the "Higher Criticism," we are precluded from attributing accuracy to it until it is settled that the conjectures of certain modern scholars are certainly true. Aside from this aspect of the matter, however, the little handbook cannot fail to be welcomed by laymen and students of theology both, as a valuable summary of what is known concerning the prophets and their writings, together with their historical setting. The books in this series are published at the low price of one shilling sterling each.

The City Wilderness. A Settlement Study, by Residents and Associates of the South End House. Edited by Robert A. Woods, South End, Boston. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

This is an exhaustive study of a slum district of Boston, drawn up by people connected with the South End House, one of those useful institutions now found in every great city, and of which Hull House, in Chicago, is a conspicuous example. It treats of the public health, work and wages, amusements, criminal tendencies, religion, and education of this district, and it is accompanied by most carefully drawn and thorough maps. Such a book as this is not only invaluable to those studying sociology, or engaged in philanthropic work, but it cannot fail to interest every man who has at heart the good of his fellows. The district contains 40,000 people, and there are 22 churches in it, besides four rescue missions, two corps of the Salvation Army, and one Corps of Volunteers of America. It might seem as though the spiritual needs of any nationality, class, and type, would be adequately met. Only one of these churches is Episcopal. It is St. Stephen's, and while the contributors to this book are not Churchmen, they speak in glowing terms of the work done for the poor in that well-known parish. Speaking of the Protestant ministers, this impartial critic says: "Their preaching is exceptionally genuine and sincere, but except at St. Stephen's, it misses that call to devotion in which Catholicism, with its vivid sense of the nearness of God, is so strong. One has the feeling that something of the ritualistic sacrificial system is almost necessary to express the struggle of life in such a district as this."

The Archdeacon. By Mrs. L. B. Walford. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 274. Price, $1.50.

The conversion of an archdeacon to Christianity is a rather serious undertaking for a novelist, but it is very thoroughly accomplished in this book. That some archdeacons do need to be converted from the error of their ways, there can be no manner of doubt. We only wish their conversion might be effected as surely and swiftly as that of Theobald Yorke. But we fear many of them have become so hardened in sin, as to be beyond such means of grace as were brought to bear upon this one. To all who are interested in such cases, as well as to the sinners themselves, we would recommend this tale. The archdeacon is almost worthy to take his place along with those famous clerical characters whom Anthony Trollope made known to the last generation, and who ought to be more familiar to the people of to-day. Bishop and Mrs. Proudie, the warden, and Mr. Crawley belong amongst the immortals, and he who does not know them misses one of the true joys of life.

The Heart of Denise; and Other Tales. By S. Levett Yeats. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. 1899.

A collection of short stories, all full of action, and some of them rather lurid, after the style of Dumas, Weyman, and Kipling. They are quite readable, and are published in time for the idle days of summer, when this sort of literature can be enjoyed with a clear conscience. The author exhibits considerable power at times, and his tales are skillfully told, the interest being sustained to the end.

The Principles of Protestantism. By the Rev. J. P. Lilley. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Pp. 250. Price, 75cts.

It would seem to many minds a most difficult and forbidding task which this author has set before himself. To define the principles of a religion of negations, whose every professor is an infallible pope, and to harmonize its contradictory teachings, is a gigantic undertaking. But the author has the courage to enter upon it, and we are bound to confess that he has done his work wonderfully well. He is an able writer, and possesses the true judicial temper. His effort is to exhibit the teachings of Protestantism, in contrast with those of Rome, in such a way as to show the superiority of the former. This is of course an impossible task, as the "views" of Protestantism are legion, and no one Protestant can speak for anyone but himself. Many of his statements of Protestant teaching would be violently repudiated by large bodies of his brethren, and others would be unrecognizable by the original Protestants. For instance, in defining the doctrine of "total depravity," he defines it away, making it merely a statement that unredeemed human nature is (not wholly given over to sin, but) more or less prone to evil throughout its whole range. Our good old New England Puritans would hardly recognize this form of total depravity. We give the author great credit, however, for having made the best of a very difficult undertaking, and recommend his book to those who wish to discover, if possible, what the distinctive features of Protestantism are.

Theological Encyclopedia and Methodology. By Reverend Franklin Weidner, D.D., LL.D. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.50.

The information given in this work is very extensive, and in a form that is attractive to the Biblical student. The book is a very useful one to place in the hands of seminary students, because it gives the names of the most prominent writers on the Bible, and their works, and at the same time a brief summary of the principles of criticism and exegesis they followed. Dr. Weidner has added a valuable work to our theological library.

Jesus Only. By Albert L. Gridley. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Company.

Mr. Gridley dedicates his book to his congregation in Kidder, Missouri, and in the preface states that his design is to help them to a fuller sense of the Godhead of our Lord. This is necessary, he says, on account of the spread of Unitarian influences. The writer is very earnest, and there are many excellent points about the book. For men and women troubled with doubts, the suggestions of a nearer approach to the heart and life of the Saviour are very useful. Many of our clergy might glean some helpful thoughts from this book.

The Bishop of Springfield writes as follows, of "The Hill Called Calvary," addresses for Good Friday, recently published by the Young Churchman Company, Milwaukee: "I have read with personal profit the excellent addresses of the Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Green, D.D., rector of Grace church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. There can never be too many addresses based upon the Seven Utterances of our Lord while He was on the Cross, provided they are well done, and on this condition these sermons of our brother of Iowa must not only be admitted, but must claim, a high position in the list of such instructions. We are grateful to the Rev. Dr. Green for placing the results of his studies and meditations at the disposal of his brethren, clerical and lay, for their edification."

Periodicals

Most readers of The Critic will agree that, in its present form, it is more pleasing in appearance, more convenient to read, than formerly. The March number contains many good things in the way of sketches, essays, and illustrations. The enterprise of the editor is shown in three hitherto unpublished portraits, those of Washington, Gladstone, and Thackeray. The painting of Washington, from which this is taken, was made by Rembrandt Peale, in September, 1795. It is claimed for this portrait that it is the best, as it reflects the striking features of Washington, without idealizing him. An interesting article of two pages gives an account of the circumstances under which this noteworthy portrait was made. There is a discriminating essay on Cable, with portrait; some original sketches by Thackeray are reproduced, with a portrait, never before published; about six pages are given to Dickens and his illustrators, and there is a lengthy review of the Browning letters, with portraits and extracts. So much, the table of contents leads the reader to expect. What it modestly withholds, however, is any hint of the rich variety of comment and brief criticism to be found in the pages furnished by "The Lounger," and others. There is no mention made, either, on the outside page, of the painting of Gladstone, never printed before. Readers of The Critic will be repaid for the time spent in discovering for themselves the many enjoyable features of the March issue of this readable journal. [The Critic Company, 289 Fourth Ave., New York. $2 a year.]

POISONING THE ATMOSPHERE.—The character of children is affected much more powerfully by the quality of the atmosphere in which they are brought up than it is by formal instruction in morals and religion. There is such a thing as the unconscious inhalation of right or wrong notions, sentiments, and convictions. Could parents only realize this fact, they would surely be more careful than the most of them are to create and maintain a right order of home life. We were once deeply impressed by the remark of a thoughtful friend who said in our hearing: "The home in which I was reared was narrow, poor, and almost hard; but it was as pure as the breath of a May morning in the mountains. Never once did I hear a word spoken there that was irreverent, vulgar, or even of doubtful propriety. The recollection of the high and almost austere virtue that surrounded my early days has braced me in the thick of every fight during my later life." What a word was that!

... Speaking lightly or contemptuously of religion, as if it were a matter to be despised or, at least, ignored, in the regulation of conduct, and a fit subject for jest and merriment; indulging in a constant flow of censorious and critical remarks concerning the Church, its institutions, and its ministers; sneering at all pretensions to consistent uprightness in character and action; speaking of honor and honesty, of truth and purity, in terms which intimate that they are not to be found in the world; laughing at sin as if it were a mere peccadillo, and not a damning fault; toying with all high and sacred things, and thus dragging them down to the level of the commonplace and the profane—such follies as these serve the purposes of Satan, and drive away the influences of the Holy Spirit from the heart. We have listened, with a wonder that bordered on amazement, to fathers, and even to mothers, as they filled the sensitive minds of their children with false lessons of irreverence and doubt, of suspicion and mistrust, of dishonesty and uncleanness, and so closed and barred the doors to all better and holier teaching.

The Meadow-Lark

MARGARET DOORIS

Oh! when I hear the meadow-lark at morn,
My pulses quicker beat;
My heart is thrilled to hear the wild notes sweet.
Oh! then I know that flowers will soon adorn
The ground beneath my feet.

The chill March wind is blowing as he sings,
And cold the March sun beams;
But in its rays I see the glinting gleams
Of yellow gold upon his outspread wings—
How beautiful he seems!

I look around, the while I stand to hear,
The lilac buds are green;
The crocus and the snowdrops new are seen;
In graceful boughs of willows, bending near,
Are mossy catkin's sheen.

I give you joyous welcome, meadow-lark!
Your singing makes me glad—
Earth without songs and blossoms would be sad;
Ye wake in me sweet hopes of days afar—
And happy days I've had.

Oh! sing, and sing; my soul is listening—
What is it that ye say?
Methinks your an' hem is of Easter Day—
It lifts my thoughts to Christ, the Risen King,
A song of victory.

Easter

BY JEANNETTE GRACE WATSON

"The world itself keeps Easter Day,
And Easter flowers are blooming."

IS it not true that all of the world is coming to keep Easter Day, as all of the world has come to keep Christmas?

"The world itself keeps Easter Day."

Not long since it was cold and wintry, heaps of brown leaves lay huddled in the hollows and fence corners, and men and women were happy to be at home sitting before the blazing logs, and thankful for the cheer and charm of it all. Then a change began to creep over the face of the old, brown earth: the wind came and swept away the leaves; you went to sleep predicting a storm, but awoke to find the miracle of new life again showing itself. A gentle shower had fallen; the grass seemed to have turned green in the night, and everywhere the lovely carpet lay unrolled for our admiration. A bluebird sang so sweetly that it was almost a pain to hear him.

The days creep on, and the children who live near the country go to gather the blossoms that have come to embroider the emerald carpet; for

"Out on the hills in the mild spring weather,
So early that only the bluebirds knew,
Thousands of little flowers grew together,
Pink and purple, and white and blue."

Lent means springtime, and Lent rightly used is a season of meditation, of prayer and of special spiritual preparation for the crown, the pre-eminent festival of the Christian Year, Easter.

The Saxon name Easter is derived from the old German festival of Ostra, the goddess of spring, which was celebrated at the same season.

As the Lententide draws to a close we come to Palm Sunday. How the shouts of the throngs who crown the Saviour King ring in our ears. Up the city streets he goes, meek and lowly, and riding on an ass, and the fickle multitude cry Hosanna! Hosanna! On Thursday we draw near with reverent awe to watch in memory the institution of the Lord's Supper. Good Friday—why, the world is keeping that day. The busy hum of Wall street is hushed, the children leave their accustomed tasks, and all are learning to remember the sufferings of Him whom we welcomed at Christmas.

Long, long ago, there were solemn night services on Easter Eve, and these vigils marked the transition to the joyous Easter celebration. An old legend that on this night Christ's second coming would take place, rendered the service particularly solemn, and as the first hint of the dawning came into the sky the people began to sing, "The Lord is risen," and the response rang out, "He is risen indeed."

The little Babe in the manger at Bethlehem is to-day not only Lord of Life, but Lord of Death as well.

Early in the morning Mary saw her glorified Lord in the garden, and she knew Him and heard Him speak.

To all that have eyes to see, and ears to hear, and hearts to understand, He is speaking to-day in His visible creation, in the soft, red coloring of the maple tree that is just leafing into beauty, in the ripple and dance of the stream lately bound in icy fetters, and in every blossom that has found beginning and nurture beneath the earth's brown mold.

There is a good deal of talk and of jeering in these days about Lent and its social observances; about Easter and its Easter gowns and its Easter bonnets; about the Easter openings and the Easter gayeties.

Pray, why shouldn't one have an Easter bonnet? To be sure, ostentatious display is always bad taste, and having the new gown and bonnet may or may not be that; and then the pretty things are so fascinating. It is the festival of the springtime, of risen life, of deathless glory, and we do well to deck our churches with flowers and to remember with the sick and the lonely and the old who can not come to church.

"These stars that in earth's firmament do shine,"

The little children bring their carefully hoarded pennies to church to be put upon the altar, and their united offerings are used to send the Gospel to the man who sits in darkness because none have come to show him the light—the Resurrection Light of Christ.

And so the world keeps Easter Day, and God's children are learning to sing, with some glimpses of its true meaning:

CHAPTER VI.

AND what of Griffith? It had happened on that pleasant September afternoon, as he leaned carelessly against the door jamb at the smithy, that Veeder's wife, a good soul who had some reason to be grateful to the Underhill family, offered the young master a drink of her home-brewed ale. Griffith tossed off the draught with a smile and a pleasant word. Another moment, however, he asked for a cup of water; the ale had not quenched his thirst, he said.

While the goodwife was fetching the water, a strange giddiness and weakness of the limbs seized him. He leaned heavily against the door, and heard as if in a dream the pounding of the anvil within. Then all grew dark about him. He knew nothing more, except that he seemed to be passing through great spaces of blackness, on and on, perhaps in the body, perhaps out of it. After what seemed an eternity of this half-conscious dream-like progress (it had actually lasted some twelve hours perhaps), some realization of outward things came back upon him. He was indeed journeying, but why this darkness? Was he in truth a disembodied spirit?

Suddenly he felt a hand upon him, then a heavy covering was thrown down and a bandage removed from his eyes, while a harsh voice said: "And now the day is somewhat advanced, you may as well guide your own beast. We are far enough on our journey, and you will do well to follow peaceably."

Griffith for a moment was blinded by the sudden access of light. He passed his hand across his forehead and asked: "On what planet am I then?"

"You are where your own tongue is still spoken," laughed another discordantly, "but you may as well spare your breath from asking further questions, for the answers will be forthcoming but at the journey's end."

Griffith now saw that his companions were three mounted men, one of whom rode beside his own bridle. Their appearance and dress was that of traders or trappers, but they were evidently strangers to the neighborhood of the Queen's Glebe. Instinctively the young man felt in his belt for his purse, and a small pistol. The weapon was gone, but the purse was there with its contents, for he could feel the coin with his fingers. What did it all mean? But to that question he could extract no reply, and he found himself compelled to journey ignominiously onward with his strange companions, who, however, treated him with some degree of respect.

The party traveled steadily for two days, merely stopping for hasty lunches, or to rest their horses, but at nightfall on the third day Griffith was glad to sup with them more bountifully at a small public house on the outskirts of a village, where the host was as taciturn as he himself was apathetic.

After the meal that strange giddiness again seized him, and he knew nothing clearly for what might have been hours, days, or weeks of continuous travel. When full consciousness at last returned, he knew that he was at the unknown goal of his strange journey. The bare walls of a small, neat apartment confronted him. He walked stiffly and rather feebly to the window and looked out. To his astonishment it commanded a view of the roofs and chimneys of a large town. Almost directly opposite was a great, many-windowed building having a dome-like cupola. His own room was evidently several stories from the ground, and his window was barred. At one side he caught a glimpse of a vast sheet of water, masts, and sails, and even the side of what looked like a gunboat. A parapet of earth stretched away toward the distant horizon. Griffith tried the door for form's sake, but he knew before he touched it that he was a prisoner, a prisoner with no knowledge of his crime or sentence!

Scarcely had he turned away from the door when it was opened, closed, and locked within by a new guardian. There was something forbidding in the solemn unctiousness of this man's appearance and speech. In person he was tall, swart, and rather heavily built. In garb he was a cross between a Dissenting minister and a militia captain.

"My young friend," he began, "the time is come to tell you wherefore you are here held in bondage, though you know well that no harm has been done you, either in person or goods. Naturally, however, you are chafing at the restraint on your liberty. It rests with you to remove it, as you will."

"Conditions," cried Griffith fiercely, "do you make conditions? Let me hear them at once, and end this folly."

"Softly, softly, good young sir, and hear

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS

LIFE OF EDWIN M. STANTON.

By GEORGE C. GORHAM. With Portraits, maps, and facsimiles of important documents. 2 vols. 8vo, $6.00.

Lincoln's great War Secretary was, perhaps, next to President Lincoln and General Grant, the most important figure in the war for the Union. Mr. Gorham has told the story of his career with much power, and his book is a work of great value as a contribution to the history of the Civil War and as a memorial of Stanton's great public services.

A WEST POINT WOOING, AND OTHER STORIES.

By CLARA LOUISE BURNHAM, author of "A Great Love." 16mo, $1.25.

Mrs. Burnham's West Point stories are so well told, and represent so delightfully the life and spirit of the romantic features of the Military Academy, that she wisely gathers several of her successful tales, mostly relating to it, and gives them the attractive title of one of them.

THE BATTLE OF THE STRONG.

By GILBERT PARKER. 35th Thousand. 12mo, $1.50.

"The Battle of the Strong" is another characteristic success in Mr. Gilbert Parker's gallant, romantic style. * * * All this is told in as dramatic a series of chapters as any reader could wish. * * * Such a splendid story, so splendidly told, will be read with avidity."—St. James' Gazette, London.

PRISONERS OF HOPE.

By MARY JOHNSTON. 12th Thousand. With a Frontispiece illustration. 12mo, $1.50.

"Wonderfully dramatic and fascinating. The scene is laid in Colonial Virginia, in the days of Charles the Second, and the story is not only a sound piece of historical fiction, but a vigorous, forcible, stirring romance, and preserving throughout a singularly even level of excellence."—Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier.

the reasons first. It is only in the Papal Church, and that of her cruel English daughter, that conscience works aside from reason."

"What prating is this?" muttered Griffith, but the other spoke on calmly.

"Know you then, first, that you are held as a hostage for your father."

"For my father?" exclaimed Griffith.

"Yea, verily; he is known as an upholder of royalty and prelacy, and now you are surety that he shall not be known further for treachery."

"Treachery!" burst out Griffith, pulling unconsciously at his belt, "What call you the seizure of an innocent man, the carrying of him drugged and blindfolded to a prison?"

"The enemies of the Lord shall be taken in a snare," replied the other coolly. "Will you hear further reason?"

Griffith assented somewhat savagely.

"Your purpose has been to journey across the sea, to receive ordination from a foreign potentate, and to urge the establishment of such usurpers here. You have been detained until your party and your good ship have sailed, in hopes that the way may be impossible shortly. Lastly, you may choose under godly training to change your career. I could convince you of your errors."

"Fool and traitor, whoever you are," cried Griffith, hotly. "Think you your prating would weigh a hair's heft with me?"

"I think you are not so rash as you speak. Do you desire liberty?"

"Assuredly; and look you—"

"Patience! Your liberty may be obtained immediately, or indefinitely postponed. It rests with you."

"Your conditions?"

"You shall take no steps against your captors who have treated you with indulgence."

"Hah!"

"And you shall pledge yourself, on God's Holy Word, to give up your purpose of entering upon the ministry of the English Church."

"I take no such oath to any man."

"You are speaking rashly. Take time to think."

The elder man looked at Griffith steadily, patiently, imperiously. The young man, in spite of himself, dropped his own eyes. Then he looked up and shook his head.

"Why tempt me to forswear myself?" he said.

"Stay, I will compromise with you," returned the other. "Will you swear to give up for one year the attempt to procure ordination?"

"And after?"

"After, you shall do as you will."

"I shall not be kept in durance for that period?" inquired Griffith suspiciously.

"You shall be free in two weeks. It will take that long to hear—but consider."

The young man again dropped his head, supporting it with his hand. An inward vision passed before him. Was it of Him whose follower he had sworn to be, refusing the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them? Or was it of honors laid aside, of a social and spiritual eminence yielded? Perhaps, indeed, it was a double vision, and all these elements entered into it in the strange complexity of our humanity.

But when Griffith looked up it was but to say, with the free drawn breath of temporary reprieve, "I cannot give answer now. Make your arrangements, and you shall have my decision before the time is up."

About three weeks later, a solitary man of military bearing was pacing to and fro before a low, one-story building upon the water front of Boston Harbor. The storehouse, or whatever it might be, which he appeared to be guarding, was in total darkness. But the moon emerging now and then from an overcast sky, to shed a transient illumination on the dark waters, threw his figure into bold relief, as that of a well-made and stalwart man.

As he turned in his rounds towards the bayside, voices came up to him from the water. Cautiously he stepped nearer to the shore, at the same time flashing out a weapon hitherto concealed. One of the men in the approaching boat ran up a colored light, at sight of which the pistol arm of the solitary watcher again dropped to his side. In a few moments the newcomers were alongside, and one of them had sprung ashore, exclaiming, yet not over loud, "Good evening, Captain McKaye. Here be some dispatches just received from the militia men of Concord and Worcester, and there be also private letters. As I am to relieve you in the care of this store-house whose grains are leaden, and whose blades are other than those of the harmless, rustling corn, you may read in peace."

ing, "Look well to the signals, comrade, and make known to your companions the requirements for to-morrow's training," then passed on to his comfortless lodging not far off, where he read by the light of a stinking whale-oil lamp.

The dispatches were unimportant, but they were accompanied by a personal letter from Schenectady, with which McKaye toyed uncertainly before opening. Then crimsoning even in the solitude, as if ashamed of his own fancies, he hastily broke the seal and read:

"Honored Commandant:

'Tis not like You have forgot more than I, for your Heart was always in the right place and so thank God was your Stomach which I have often filled with good victual, and hope the same again, the Good friends of the Valley whose heads now mayhap are somewhat addled by the stirring Events of these Times. And so methinks You will have heard of the taking off for I mis-doubt me if it were of his own Will and Consent, but willy-nilly as the learned say, of Mynher Griffith Underhill and the sore Distress of all his Volk, particularly of the Juvrouw Darcy who grieves for her junker like a Lamb that bleats for the ewe till her sweet Face is not like You remember. And no wonder for she loves they say the Junker though such Things are not to be spoke of to men Volk, who are puffed up enow with Pride since the Day they ate the Apple in Eden which Adam did. Though he blamed the Vrow no Doubt he got the Apple all but one bite. And now we hear the junker is confined in Boston Town where he was brought after Anneke saw him at the Tavern, which Peter would almost choke her if he knew this Letter, and now mayhap if You could give some knowledge of him to the Sorrowfull Volk at the Glebe, and help him to escape, the Good Lord will reward You. And now honored sir no more from,

JUVROUW KATRINA MYNDERT.

It took the Captain some time to study out this epistle of scant punctuation, in that fine, irregular writing, and he dwelt especially long upon one sentence—that concerning Evelyn Darcy. As he gazed, his face lost those stern lines which these days were fast writing, but his dark eyes were full of sadness.

He knew not how time was passing, but when, with a heavy sigh, he at last refolded the letter and placed it in his coat, the cocks were crowing for the dawn.

The Easter Message

BY HOPE DARING

Rap, rap, rap.

The sound penetrated the room where Doctor Bailey lay sleeping. He stirred uneasily.

Rap, rap, rap, it came again, clear and incisive. The doctor sat up, then sprang to the floor and rapidly began to dress. A moment later he opened the outer door, but it was too dark to see who his caller was.

"Who is it?"

"Please, sir, it's me."

"And who is me?" the doctor asked, striking a match and lighting the hanging lamp which was suspended in the hall. "Oh, Tim Dunn, whatever are you after?"

The light of the lamp fell upon an eager, freckled little face. The boy's clothing was faded and patched, but clean, while a cheery good nature looked out from his sunny blue eyes.

"Please, doctor, you are to come out to Higly Farm right off. Mr. Higly, he's took awful bad."

"Humph! Higly Farm is two miles away

How did you come to be sent from there after me?"

"Why, you see, I am working for Mr. Higly. There hain't any other hired man, so I had to come."

"Come two miles in the dark! Wasn't that pretty hard on a little fellow like you?"

"Oh, not very. I wasn't afraid—not much, I mean."

"Working for Mr. Higly, are you, Tim? What do you do?"

"Most everything, sir. Been picking stone part of the time."

The doctor shook his head. Tim was too small for such work, but there was no one save an invalid, half-demented father to care for him. The two lived in a tumble-down cottage near the doctor's house. Tim was always on the lookout for chances to earn money, thus bringing many comforts to that forlorn home.

While this conversation was going on, the doctor had lighted a lantern, made his way to the barn, and, with the help of Tim, harnessed bay Fancy, and hitched her to the carriage. As he put his medicine case under the seat, he said cheerily, at the same time looking at his watch:

"Jump in, my lad. Morning is here. See, it is growing light in the east."

The doctor stopped to draw the heavy robe carefully about the thinly-clad form of his companion. Then he chirruped to Fancy, and she stepped off at a brisk pace.

They had gone but a little distance when from the bells of the village churches rang out a glad peal.

"Easter morning," the doctor said thoughtfully.

"Please, sir, what do them bells say?"

"Say? Why, Tim, they tell us it is Easter."

"And what's Easter, please, sir?"

"Don't you know, you poor child? It is the anniversary of the day when our Savior rose from the grave. The bells say, 'He is risen! He is risen!'"

"Not is, Doctor Bailey. You don't mean that He is alive now, and cares what comes to a fellow like me?"

Doctor Bailey looked sharply at Tim. The light was still too dim for him to see plainly, but the eagerness of the child touched him.

"Surely you have heard all about it—" he commenced, when Tim interrupted him to say:

"Yes, sir, I heard it to Sunday school. Somehow it didn't seem to mean me, though. Daddy can't explain things to me, and there hain't any one else. Poor Daddy! He would if he could. If them bells say, 'He is risen,' he must be here, and—"

He paused. His eyes were fixed on the east, where the sun was peering above the horizon and painting the sky with gold and crimson. In the south, these colors paled to soft yellow and pink. Gradually the light grew brighter. The doctor heard the boy's breath come fast between his parted lips.

"That is just what Easter means, Tim," and the voice of the strong man trembled. "Christ is indeed alive up in heaven, and, best of all, He cares for you and me."

"Oh, it seems most too good to be true. Why, sir, everything will be all right. He'll take care of daddy and me. I couldn't jest understand 'bout trust before, but I see now. I can trust Him."

They had reached the gate of Higly Farm. The doctor descended slowly from the carriage.

"I want to see you a moment before I go back, Tim," was all he said, as he strode up the path, his medicine case in his hand.

All the time the doctor was listening to Mr. Higly's complaints, and Mrs. Higly's explanations, he was considering an idea which had come to him. Doctor Bailey was a man of wealth, and alone in the world. Many good deeds were done by him. Still, this was different.

"I'll do it," he said to himself at last. "I really believe it's my duty."

"Tim," Doctor Bailey began, tenderly laying one hand on the lad's shoulder, "I want a boy. Want him to take care of my horse and office, go to school, and grow up to be a good man. In return for this, I will buy his books and clothes, besides furnishing a comfortable living for him and his father. What do you think about it?"

Tim's face flushed, then grew white. "Please, sir, do you mean—" he began, but he could go no further.

"Yes, my boy, I mean you."

A moment's silence. Finally Tim said slowly:

"Please, sir, I don't know how to thank you. You shan't ever be sorry, for I'll try hard to please you. I know now that what the bells said is true. You've proved it to me, sir, 'cause He must be alive, or you could'n't do so near like Him."

Doctor Bailey looked off across the fields, sudden tears dimming his eyes. Again the Easter bells took up their message of joy and love. Once more there floated through the air the glad tidings, "He is risen!"

That was fifteen years ago. Tim is Doctor Timothy Dunn now, Doctor Bailey's partner, and his son in love and confidence. The truth and beauty of the Easter message are still dear to both men, and their lives are noble and useful ones.

Fifty Dollars or Fifty Cents

THERE is on the borders of the Connecticut a small town, which, though weak and feeble, still, with the help of a "home missionary society," supported a minister and maintained regular divine worship. About the time when it became necessary to pay the minister's salary, there moved into the place a man who gained his living by carting coal, and by other similar labor. It was noticed that this man was very regular in his attendance at church, and was never absent from the prayer-meeting, but from a pecuniary point of view was not considered important. It was the custom, when the salary was due, for one of the deacons to collect all he could from the people, and then get the balance from the home missionary society. In accordance with this custom, one fine morning, Deacon A., a man of considerable means and considerable penuriousness, started forth, subscription paper in hand, to see how much he could squeeze out of the parish for the support of the minister. The first person he met was the above-mentioned coal-carter, moving along the road with a cart load of that material. The deacon considered within himself that it might be worth while to ask him to contribute, seeing that he was a good sort of person, and every little helps, and so accosted him with, "Good morning, Mr. B., are you willing to give anything toward the support of the pastor?" at the same time handing him a paper. The man stopped, stood thoughtfully for a moment or two, drew a pencil out of his pocket, and with his dirt-begrimed hand he headed the list with the sum of fifty dollars.

The deacon was so taken by surprise that he could scarcely believe the evidence of his eyes; and thinking the man had made a mistake, and not wishing to take the advantage of him, he asked: "Did you mean that for fifty cents?" The coal-carter turned, drew himself up to his full height, and with great earnestness replied, "I do not value the gospel at fifty cents a year."

The answer placed the case in a new light. The deacon went immediately to the pastor, related the incident, and said: "If that man can give fifty dollars I can give five hundred." The same spirit actuated the rest of the parish on hearing the story, and in a few days the salary was raised by the people themselves without the necessity of applying for outside aid.—The Lutheran Evangelist.

Cuzzi's Long Imprisonment

During my fifteen years' imprisonment I never saw a mirror, and gradually all interest in my personal appearance faded, completely away. When it became sure that an expedition was on its way to Omdurman I began to live again. When at last the cannon began to thunder and the wild cries of the battle penetrated the city, I laid my sword ready, determined, should this last hope be destroyed, to put an end to my life. When finally the noise of the cannon ceased and the victor, Kitchener, stood before me, congratulating me on my release, I thought I should suffocate with emotion. The next day I made my toilet in an officer's tent, and held in my hand the first looking-glass I had seen for fifteen years. I looked curiously at my reflection in it and started back. I had gone out into the world a young, active, strong man, and the image which now stared at me was that of a sick, hollow-eyed, wrinkled, broken man. Never did all that I had suffered enter my mind with such strength as at this moment, and I wept, wept like a child, the first tears in fifteen years! The day after I was made a prisoner I saw my wife die, but my grief was too great for the relief of tears; my child was torn away from me, and died of starvation far away, and I could not weep; I suffered deprivations and ill-treatment without a sign of weakness, but now, before this small looking-glass, I was overwhelmed. The pain of all that I had lost seemed concentrated in the grief-stricken features reflected in the mirror. At one glance I saw the story of my sufferings.—The Egyptian Courier.

Children's Hour

Between the dark the the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations,
That is known as the Children's hour.

The Cheerful Heart

"The world is ever as we take it,
And life, dear child, is what we make it."
Thus spoke a grandma bent with care,
To little Mabel, flushed and fair.
But Mabel took no heed that day
Of what she heard her grandma say.
Years after, when no more a child,
Her path in life seemed dark and wild.
Back to her heart the memory came
Of the quaint utterance of the dame:
"The world, dear child, is as we take it,
And life, be sure, is what we make it."
She cleared her brow, and smiling thought:
" 'Tis even as the good soul taught!
"And half my woes thus quickly cured,
The other half may be endured."
No more her heart its shadow wore;
She grew a little child once more.
A little child in love and trust,
She took the world (as we, too, must)
In happy mood; and lo! it grew Brighter and brighter to her view.
She made of life (as we, too, should)
A joy; and lo! all things were good
And fair to her, as in God's sight,
When first he said, "Let there be light."

The Brook's Easter

BY S. ALICE RANLETT

THE dark, green firs were powdered with glittering snow-dust, the ground beneath was buried under white drifts, and the brook, which usually leaped down the hill in tinkling cascades and ran through the wood in a series of merry rapids and still pools, was strangely silent; no dancing bubbles on its waves, or flecks of creamy foam; indeed, no waves at all, but a smooth, gleaming floor built over it, and hiding its merry play.

"O mamma," cried little Irene, out on her winter walk, "where is the brook? It always laughed and chatted and played with me; now it is so still; why, mamma?" sorrowfully, as she saw only the icy floor over the stream, "the dear brook is all dead!" and sadly she turned away.

If Irene had put her ear close to that icy floor, she would have heard a gurgle of silver laughter and, a little more softly sung, but still quite clearly, the old brook-song, with its trills and ripples, and a thousand sweet notes known only to brook-music, and those who lovingly listen to it. And if she could have peeped under the icy floor, she would have seen much besides music that meant life; sparkling wavelets, cold, yet clear and bright, in some of the pools, swaying gently with the currents; tiny water-weeds; emerald-green mosses, and swift, slender pickerel darting through the icy current; but Irene did not see these things.

For a long time the snow lay deep in the forest, and Irene did not go there again till it was early spring and Easter. A soft, warm wind had been blowing for some days, and ice and snow had melted away, but on the night of Easter Eve came a sharp frost.

When Irene saw the brook, it was dancing in sparkling waves and singing as gayly as on any summer day, only in a little hollow beneath some over-spreading rocks, near a bit of a cascade, the frost had caught the spray and made a wonderful grotto; above a clear pool, green-floored with emerald moss, hung tiny gleaming icicles, and a thousand jewels of ice flashing out the many-colored fires of the diamond.

Irene called joyfully: "The dear brook is alive again! But a little of the dead is left, and makes it more beautiful than ever."

Her mother thought of the Life which, arisen from the dead at Easter and taken into heaven at Ascension, was beautiful, was glorified, in that it had been through death; and of those who sleep but who shall pass "through the gate of death to a glorious resurrection," and she said to the child: "The brook has never really been dead; its beautiful life has been there all the time, waiting the day when God would call it out again into light, and so help us to understand a little better how brook-life lives on by God's power through the winter, as soul-life, through Christ's Resurrection, lives on through death."

A Cat's Household Duties

MISS ANGIE EDDES, a lady living near Stockton, Cal., owns a cat bearing the euphonious name of Bildad that is a marvel of feline intelligence and industry. Miss Angie lives on a little place of her own, where she has her busy hands pretty full in looking after the ranch work and attending to her father, who is a cripple; and the cat, Bildad, has come to be very helpful to her in many ways. Among other sources of revenue, Miss Angie has a dozen fine bearing almond trees that bring in no inconsiderable amount, and Bildad is invaluable to her in taking care of the nuts. Every morning in falling time Miss Angie sets a large basket out in the orchard and Bildad begins work, frisking back and forth under the trees, picking up the plump brown nuts, never ceasing till the basket is full, when he goes in, letting his mistress know, by pulling at her apron, that he needs her help. Aside from thus relieving Miss Angie of all the trouble of gathering the nuts, Bildad's services are called into requisition to protect them from rats, which otherwise would begin to ravage the trees as soon as the young almonds show evidences of maturity.

Another one of Bildad's accomplishments is that of churning, at which he is quite an adept. Old Mr. Eddes, who has quite an inventive faculty, has manufactured a little churn, with a unique, light-running treadle, upon which Bildad mounts and treads away with the most praiseworthy industry till the work is done. So expert has the cat become that he can tell by the sound of the milk when the butter has come, and strikes with his paw on the little bell which is attached to the churn to let his mistress know.

In the midst of all this industry Bildad finds time for as much fun and frolic as the average cat, and is a source of great amusement and pleasure to the old man Eddes, relieving him of many tedious hours.—Happy Thought.

Who Loved Mamma?

THE sun had gone down, and it was dark in the sitting-room. Great flakes of snow were flying through the air outside. The wind whistled and blew through key-holes and under door-sills.

Mamma sat in a big Boston rocker in front of a blazing grate fire, surrounded by her little family—Willie, the youngest, on her lap, Janet on one arm of the chair and Jack on the other, both with their heads leaning on mamma's shoulders, while Sam, the eldest boy, sat on a stool at her feet with his back up against her.

"I love you, mamma," said Janet.

"So do I," "So do I," "So do I," chimed in the three other voices.

"I love you more than anybody else can love you," said Sam, because I am the oldest. I loved you the longest."

"I love you the most, because I'm the only girl," said Janet.

"I love you so much that I wish a big bear would come after you and I'd shoot him," said Jack.

"I love you more than I can tell you," said Willie, putting his arms around his mother's neck and kissing her again and again.

Then all the children kissed her at once, and poor mamma was almost suffocated with their embraces.

"Do you love me, children?" she asked.

"Do you really know what love is?"

"Why, love is love—something you feel inside of you that makes you want to do something for somebody."

"Yes, love is doing something—not at your own pleasure, but doing something for some one else, perhaps something hard and unpleasant."

Just then the postman whistled at the door, and the children ran to see what he had brought.

"It's a letter for me," said mamma, as she opened it, "and I must write an answer at once, so it will go in this evening's mail. Who'll take a letter to the lamp-post for me?"

Sam looked out of the window. How the snow blew around! His rubber boots were away upstairs. Oh, dear, he had five hard examples to do. Why couldn't that letter wait until morning! He'd take it on his way to school.

Jack looked out of the window, too. Ugh! how dark it was. He didn't like being out in the dark alone. It made him scary. Suppose there should be bears somewhere about the street corners! In the stories he had read, when they came, it was always in a snow-storm.

Janet thought: "Why, certainly mamma doesn't mean me to go as long as Sam and Jack are in the house. I've got my slippers on. I hate going out in the cold."

So when mamma had finished writing the reply to her letter, and looked up, she found Sam busy with his slate and pencil, Jack with one of his games, and Janet knitting away very industriously on a hood for her doll. Only Willie stood before her, with his big boots on, and his overcoat turned up about his ears.

"I'm all ready, mamma," he said.

"But, Willie, aren't you afraid to go alone?" she asked. "It's getting dark, and it's cold out of doors."

"I love you, mamma," he answered. "I'll run fast, and I don't believe anything will hurt me."

"Yes, you may," said mamma.

"Don't get lost in the snow-drift, little man. I'll watch you from the window. I know who loves me truly to-night," she added, with a sorry smile. "Love does not think of itself, and love conquers even fear, doesn't it, Willie?"—New York Observer.

MORE BOXES OF GOLD.

Also 350 Greenbacks.

To secure some desired information direct from the people, it is proposed to send 5 little boxes, each containing $10.00 gold; 20 boxes, each containing $5.00 gold, and 350 envelopes, each containing a $1.00 bill, to persons who write the most interesting and truthful descriptions of their experience on the following topics:

1. How have you been affected by coffee drinking?

2. Do you know anyone who has been driven away from Postum because it came to the table weak and characterless at the first trial?

3. Did you set such a person right regarding the easy way to make Postum clear, black, and with a crisp, rich taste?

4. Have you ever found a better way to make it than to use 4 heaping teaspoonsful to the pint of water, let stand on the stove, until real boiling begins, then note the clock and allow it to continue easy boiling full 15 minutes from that time, stirring down occasionally?

5. Give names and account of those you know to have been cured or helped in health by the dismissal of coffee and the daily use of Postum Food Coffee in its place.

6. Write names and addresses of 20 friends whom you believe would be benefited by leaving off coffee. (Your name will not be divulged to them.)

Address your letter to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., writing your own name and address clearly.

Decision will be made on May 1st next, by three judges not members of the Postum Co., and one of the $10.00 boxes of gold sent to each of the 5 best writers, one of the $5.00 boxes of gold sent to each of the 20 next best, and one of the $1.00 bills sent to each of the 350 next best writers.

These 375 persons will earn money prizes, and each and every person who fails to win a money prize, but whose letter contains 20 true names and addresses of persons who would be benefited by leaving off coffee, will receive 25 cents worth of Postum Food Coffee free.

Almost everyone interested in pure food and drink is willing to have their name and letter appear in the papers, for such help as it may offer to the human race. A request to omit name will be respected.

Every friend of Postum is urged to write, and each letter will be held in high esteem by the company, as an evidence of such friendship, while the little boxes of gold and envelopes of money will reach many modest writers whose plain and sensible letters contain the facts desired, although the sender may have but small faith in winning at the time of writing.

Talk this subject over with your friends, and see how many among you can win prizes. It is a good, honest competition, and in the best kind of a cause. Cut this statement out, for it will not appear again.

Finance and Commerce

Bank clearings for the last week show the enormous increase over last year of 73 4 per cent. Baltimore heads the list with a gain of 129 per cent., with New York next, with a gain of 100 per cent., Boston, 47 per cent., and Philadelphia, 45 per cent. Probably the average outside of the centres of stock speculation would be fully 25 per cent. increase. These figures fairly represent the growing industrial activity of the country. The first rush of buying naturally following an advancing tendency of prices in leading standard commodities, is probably over, and business has settled down somewhat to the more moderate movements of actual demand and supply. Following this, however, there are no indications of decreasing products, for in nearly all departments actual wants are still pressing on supply. In the iron trade there has been a pause in some products, and a further advance in others, but in few can new orders be filled except for delivery at considerable periods in the future. In copper the recent advance carried the price far beyond export figures, and even with the reaction to 17 cent's, sales abroad are still prohibited.

In the wool market an increased pressure of selling by interior holders, has caused a further recession in price, and the volume of transactions have been materially increased. It is thought that a prospect of combination among manufacturers for the time being lessens the demand from that quarter. There is an improved demand for manufactured goods over last year, but the full capacity of mills is by no means yet employed.

There has been a slight decline in cotton. Stocks in the hands of mills and speculators are liberal. The demand for manufactured articles is good, but no further advance in prices has been established. Wheat took a sharp turn up the latter part of the week. The principal incentive was the poor appearance of the growing crop in the South-west, mainly in Kansas and Nebraska. The complaints so far come through commercial channels direct from the farmers. None of the leading authorities, like Snow, The Statistician, The Cincinnati Price Current, or The Modern Miller, yet accept these reports as conclusive, as they are regarded as being premature, no warm growing weather having yet pervaded these localities, to demonstrate the real conditions. The speculative buying that has resulted, has, however, carried the price up several cents, per bushel. Receipts at primary markets are decreasing, as is usual, and a gradual reduction of visible stocks may be expected. Corn has also advanced about 2 cents per bushel the past week. This has been partly in sympathy with wheat, but the receipts at Western markets are well below last year, and with the good demand which prevails, a rapid reduction in the speculative load is not unlikely. A fair upward reaction in provisions has also taken place. Receipts of hogs are still larger than last year, and the largest on record, but a little better foreign buying the past week, mainly for lard, gave the market a better tone. In the money markets there is a slowly hardening tendency. The New York bank statement last week was less unfavorable. Reserves only decreased slightly, while loans and deposits increased. The tendency, however, still seems to be for currency to go to the interior to handle the constantly growing volume of business. There is as yet no movement of gold either way, and financiers are still in the dark as to the extent and ultimate effect of the recent selling of American securities heretofore held by foreign investors. All signs point to greater activity in real estate this season.

Foreign Trade Statistics

A picture of the foreign commerce of the United States from the adoption of the Constitution to the present time, is presented in a single table which forms a part of the recently issued report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics. This table shows the imports and exports, and excess of imports or exports in each year since the adoption of the Constitution, and includes both merchandise and specie. The total imports of merchandise in the entire period are $29,979,961,487, and the total exports, $30,952,202,985, making the excess of exports of merchandise, $972,241,498. The total imports of gold and silver are $1,940,150,320, and the exports, $3,400,623,581, making the excess of exports of specie $1,460,473,261. Combining these, the table shows the total imports of merchandise and specie in the entire period, as $31,920,111,807, the exports, as $34,352,826,566, and the excess of exports, $2,432,714,759. Commenting upon these figures, the report says: "The fact that the statement gives the total exports of merchandise since 1789 as practically a billion dollars in excess of the imports of merchandise, and the grand total of exports two-and-a-half billion dollars in excess of the imports, seems susceptible of explanation.

"All statements of values of imported merchandise, give merely the cost of the goods abroad, and do not include the sums paid for their transportation to the United States, which of course enter into their real cost to the importer, and their real value. Statements of value of goods imported into the United States are, therefore, to that extent misleading. To obtain the real value of imports at the point where the value of exports is taken, the cost of freights should be added. A recent elaborate computation puts the average cost of freights on imported goods at 3.5 per cent. of their original cost. If this be accepted as a fair addition to be made for freights to the stated values of the importations since 1789, it would make their real value $31,029,260,139, a sum which about equals the value of the merchandise exported."

With the exports of merchandise practically equalling the imports of merchandise, the excess in the grand total of exports must be found chiefly in the specie account, and amounts approximately to $1,500,000,000. This excess of exports of specie seems to be accounted for by the fact that large sums are annually sent abroad on account of foreign capital invested in the United States, and considerable sums also expended abroad by our citizens temporarily sojourning in foreign countries.

Is It Malaria or Alum?

[Popular Science Monthly.]

Languor, loss of appetite, indigestion, and often feverishness, are the common symptoms of a physiological condition termed "malaria." All these symptoms may be, and frequently are, the effect of the use of alum baking powders in food making. There is no question about the poisonous effect of alum upon the system. It obstructs digestion, prostrates the nerves, coagulates and devitalizes the blood. All this has been made clear, thanks to physicians, boards of health, and food commissions. So "highly injurious to the health of the community" does the eminent head of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Barker, consider the alum baking powders, that he says "their sale should be prohibited by law."

Under these circumstances, it is worth the while of every housewife to employ the very little care that is necessary to keep so dangerous an element from the food of her family.

A pure cream of tartar baking powder, which is the only kind that should be used, ought to cost about 45 cents to 50 cents a pound. Therefore, if you are paying much less, something is wrong; if you are paying 25 cents, or less, per pound, the powder is certainly made from alum.

Always bear these simple facts in mind when purchasing baking powder.

Paste and Cement for Family Use

A good paste, warranted to stick tight to almost anything, can be made as follows: Take 3 parts lead acetate (sugar of lead), 3 parts alum, 5 parts gum arabic, and 16 parts wheat flour. Dissolve the gum in two quarts warm water. When cold, stir in the wheat flour, and add the sugar of lead and alum, both previously dissolved in warm water. Cook the mass until it shows sign of boiling. Then set away to cool.

To stick paper to wood, take gum arabic, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz.; powdered gum tragacanth, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz.; water, $1\frac{1}{2}$ oz.; acetic acid, 20 drops. If the paper is good, this paste will not stain it. Give the paper, when dry, a coat or two of gum arabic.

A paste that will keep several months is made by dissolving a teaspoonful of alum in a quart of warm water. When cold, stir in flour to give the consistence of cream, beating out all the lumps. Then stir in as much powdered rosin as will lie on a dime. Pour boiling water over the mass, and stir until it is as thick as treacle, which will occur in a few minutes. Cool in an earthen vessel, by covering and putting in a cool, dry place. When needed, take out a portion and thin with warm water.

Paste suitable for scrap-books is made by taking equal quantities of glue and alum and dissolving them in water. Add flour, and beat until the mass is mixed together and quite smooth then add boiling water, stirring constantly. A good keeper in a cool place.

To keep paste from spoiling in warm weather, add a few drops of oil of sassafras, or oil of cloves; essence of wintergreen and carbolic acid are also good. Alum will harden or stiffen paste, and oil of pennyroyal will keep the flies from it. Two grains of hydronaphthol to a pint of paste will preserve it. The oils named are apt to discolor or grease delicate paper. Hydronaphthol (which must be dissolved in a little alcohol) is free from this objection, as is carbolic acid.

CEMENTING CHINA, GLASS, ETC.—Plaster of Paris, mixed with gum arabic water, makes a white cement that hardens quickly, and must be used at once.

Five parts of gelatine to one part of acid chromate of lime gives an insoluble cement. Press the edges together and expose to the sunlight.

Plaster of Paris, mixed with a cold solution of alum, makes a slow setting, but very hard cement, for stoneware.

For mending fine china, dissolve three parts of fresh casein in one part of silicate of soda, or soluble glass.

To mend glass or porcelain, to eight and one-half ounces of a strong solution of gum arabic add 30 grains of a solution of sulphate of alumina, dissolved in two-thirds ounce of water.

For china and glass, mix milk and vinegar, a half pint of each. Take the resultant whey and beat the white of eggs with it; then sift in powdered alum. Stir well to form a paste. Rub, or cover, with it, and cover the outside crack also, and allow to dry for hardening.

The Golden Day

BY THE REV. FRED. C. COWPER

Throned on the golden car of day,
Enters the monarch of the morning!
Holding the sceptre of mild sway,
A radiant crown his brow adorning.
His subject vassals all do greet him—
The birds, the brooks, the trees, the flowers;
All spring in joyful mood to meet him,
In certain hope of happy hours.

So doth my soul salute the Dawn
That brings to earth transcendent brightness;
New light, new joy, new life is born,
When Easter glows in purest whiteness.
It tells me that my Lord is risen—
The Righteous Sun with healing wings;
It bursts the bars of Death's grim prison;
In the abyss my jailer flings.

Hail! Hail! All hail! thou Easter Day!
Ten thousand voices sing thy praises;
So gleaming glorious is thy ray,
Its splendor my rapt soul amazes.
Thou art the Sum of treasured story—
The Golden Day without alloy!
The Risen Christ is all thy glory!
The Risen Christ is all thy joy!

Notes of the World's Progress

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY IS NO longer a theory, but an accomplished fact. A test of the apparatus invented by Marconi resulted in the successful transmission of a message between points in England and France, a distance of thirty-two miles, wind and thick weather proving no obstacles. Further experiments are now contemplated between New Haven and Dieppe, a distance of sixty-four miles. The method by which the result is achieved is not new to the scientific world, but the young Italian inventor is the first to discover a means of practical application. In discussing the matter, Professor Sylvanus Thompson, England's most distinguished electrician, says: "Marconi's demonstration is the natural development of principles propounded by Hertz and Oliver Lodge. It will be possible to establish direct communication across space, either between England and the Cape, India, or even Australia, far cheaper than by submarine cable. Nine years ago I offered to establish telegraphic communication with the Cape, provided $50,000 was forthcoming, but the scheme was treated as visionary. Before long I believe you will see it realized." The cost of the method of transmission is infinitesimal compared with cabling. The whole installation by which these demonstrations are carried out cost only about $1,250. With a multiplication of appliances the expenditures would be greatly reduced. A recent issue of the Electrical Review contains the first elaborate description of Tesla's experiments in wireless transmission of electricity. They involve handling currents up to 8,000,000 volts produced by his perfected oscillators with entire safety. Photographs of the experiments actually performed make it appear that not only can the energy be transmitted in this manner, but also directed to any point desired, regardless of distance and environment.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY CONTROVERSY, has attracted considerable attention, and assumed great importance, owing to the development of gold fields. The British claims to Skaguay are based on treaties made several decades before Alaska came into possession of the United States. In the early part of the present century, when Russia still owned Alaska, Great Britain, starting from the south, claimed jurisdiction along the coast as far north as sixty degrees. Russia, starting from the north, asserted claims to a coast line as far south as the fifty-first degree. The rivalry of the British and Russian fur companies was so intense it soon became necessary to reach an understanding. Accordingly, in 1825, a treaty was signed definitely limiting the boundaries of Russia and British America, and it is upon this treaty Great Britain bases its present claims to Skaguay.

THE TREATY GAVE TO RUSSIA A STRIP of territory thirty miles wide, and running down the coast for a distance of 500 miles. The main point for discussion in the present controversy is whether in the treaty with Russia in 1825, Great Britain did or did not reserve certain gateways in this fence through which to reach the interior. The British diplomats contend now that it gave them three. In proof they point to the wording of the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which they claim the 30-mile line granted to Russia was intended to be measured from the waters of the ocean and was to be carried at the 30-mile limit across the waters, not around the shores of such narrow inlets as indent the coast more than thirty miles. Of the inlets which penetrate farther than thirty miles inland, the most important is the Lynn Canal which extends nearly a hundred miles into the interior. It forms two harbors, one at Dyce, the other at Skaguay.

DURING THE LAST YEAR THE UNITED States Department of Agriculture has had four agricultural explorers at work in different parts of the world, having in view the introduction into the United States of such seeds and plants as may prove to be of economic value. Professor Mark A. Carleton has just returned from Russia. He is confident that some of the seeds he secured will prove of benefit. He mentions a winter rye which is grown at Ust-sislolsk, which is in about 60 degrees north latitude. The climatic conditions are similar to those of Labrador. It is believed that this rye will do well in Alaska. The cereal that promises best results is the Kubanka wheat from the Kuban territory, in the Volga region. While this is a spring wheat in Russia, it is believed it can be changed to a winter wheat here. It is harder than any of our wheats, and is the great bread wheat of the Volga region. This wheat needs a warm climate, and is expected to give good results in Texas, No-Man's Land, Western Kansas, and Eastern Colorado. It does best in Russia, where the annual rainfall is only fifteen inches. In Western Kansas the annual rainfall is eighteen inches. A variety called Polish wheat, which was obtained, has the largest grain of all wheat in the world, the average length of the kernels being about five-sixteenths of an inch. Like the Kubanka, it is exceedingly hard, but is not a bread wheat. Its use is in pastry, and as a macaroni wheat. The Polish wheat needs a warm climate.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA SEEM TO BE AT A standstill, so far as steps toward further reorganization of conditions are concerned. A peculiar situation has developed. The Assembly, a creation of the army, stands between the latter and the United States government, and absolutely blocks the plan to disband the Cuban army and distribute $3,000,000 to those soldiers who fought for independence, by refusing to turn over muster roles to the proper authorities unless accorded official recognition. As the latter course might lead to complications, it will not be considered by the United States. General Gomez, leader and backbone of the insurrection, and commander-in-chief of the Cuban army, has been deposed by the Assembly, not being in accord with its views and believing that the welfare of Cuba depends in large measure upon the continued friendship of the United States. Fortunately the Assembly does not represent the sentiment of Cuban people. Its action in refusing to surrender muster roles is probably due to the hope that an issue of Cuban bonds can be floated, and a sum of money thereby realized largely in excess of that which the United States proposes to distribute. The probable outcome will be a dissolution of the Assembly, or curtailment of the powers and functions it has assumed.

NEWIS IS CONVEYED, BY DISPATCHES of an encounter on the frontier between Turkish and Bulgarian forces. Relations between Turkey and Bulgaria have been particularly strained since the beginning of the present year, owing to a renewal of the demands for enlarged political rights for the Macedonians. On Jan. 21st, the Macedonian committee, sitting at Sofia, presented to the Porte a note demanding autonomy for Macedonia, a Christian governor appointed for five years, a legislative assembly elected by universal suffrage, and a local militia. The Sultan notified Austria and Russia of the Macedonian demands, and also made representations to the Bulgarian government. Russia, in a note dated Jan. 23d, informed the Powers it was not disposed to make representations to Turkey in favor of the reform, as such a step might encourage the Macedonian agitation. On the same date, Russia sent to Odessa orders for nine cruisers and two torpedo boats, to be kept in readiness, in view of expected trouble in Macedonia.

WHATEVER FEAR MAY HAVE EXISTED over international complications arising from trouble in Samoa, has been dispelled by the agreement on the part of Germany to the commission proposed by Great Britain, and accepted by the United States. This removes the Samoan question from individual negotiations entirely, as the commission can act on a majority vote; and only in the improbable event that two of the commissioners cannot agree, will an umpire be necessary. He would, of course, be the King of Sweden and Norway, as stipulated in the original treaty. The outcome, it is believed, will be an entirely new form of government for the islands, which will probably wipe out the sovereignty of the natives entirely, as they have shown themselves wholly incapable of self-government. It is even probable there may be a partition of the islands into "zones of influence," where each nation will exercise an undisputed protectorate. This will protect the American interests in the naval station at Pango Pango.

INFORMATION COMES FROM THE PHILIPPINES that the insurgent army is broken and that the end of opposition in force is in sight. Guerrilla warfare may obtain for a time, but little danger of hostilities on a large scale is looked for, unless Aguinaldo should be successful in effecting a re-organization of his army during the unhealthy season, when our forces cannot act on the aggressive. Continued reverses have affected the prestige of Aguinaldo to the extent that many natives have deserted his standard. The Philippine Commission is expected shortly to issue a proclamation offering amnesty to those who lay down their arms, and it is believed the majority will take advantage of these terms, as they are already beginning to show confidence in Americans by asking protection of them.

THE NEXT CHURCH CONGRESS IS TO be held in St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 10-13, 1899. The list of topics for discussion is as follows: 1. Does National Expansion Involve Imperialism? 2. The Value to Christianity of the Comparative Study of Religions? 3. The Bearing of the Newspaper on Intellectual and Moral Life. 4. Is Nature Christian? 5. Lessons of the Recent Ritual Crisis in the Church of England. 6. The Sunday Question. 7. The Prayer Book in the Life of the People. The speakers have not yet been appointed.

THE CITY OF DETROIT, MICH., IS TO solve the problem of municipal street railway ownership. The measure was backed by Governor Pingree. A commission is appointed with power to negotiate for properties, and if acquired, to operate them. Opponents of the plan resisted strenuously.

The Church Abroad

Honor Paid to Bishop Williams

At a meeting of the Aberdeen and Orkney Diocesan Council at Aberdeen, Scotland, the Bishop of the diocese prefaced the proceedings by speaking of the death of Bishop Williams, of Connecticut. It will be remembered that it was at Aberdeen that Bishop Seabury, first Bishop of Connecticut, and of the Church in America, was consecrated. This relation of the Bishops of Connecticut to the Scottish Church has never been forgotten on either side. The Bishop of Aberdeen recalled the visit of Bishop Williams to Scotland on the occasion of the Seabury Centenary in 1884, and spoke of the way in which he had endeared himself to them all by his own goodness, and by the hearty sympathy he showed for everything relating to the Scottish Church. At his suggestion, they had undertaken to erect a tablet in commemoration of the consecration of Bishop Seabury. This had been placed upon the walls of the University of Aberdeen, close to the spot where the consecration took place. It was intended to unveil this tablet sometime in March, under the auspices of Lord Lothian, and it was a matter of sincere regret that the Bishop of Connecticut should have passed away before an event upon which he had set his heart had been accomplished. The Rev. Dr. Dawson, of St. Andrew's church, Aberdeen, spoke very warmly of his personal impressions of Bishop Williams, of his genial dignity and his magnificent personality, his strength as a preacher, and his relations to the clergy who had been prepared for ordination under his eye at the Berkeley Divinity School. Wherever he went in Scotland he made friends and won admirers. It had been said by one of these that if all the English episcopate consisted of men like Bishop Williams, no power on earth could disestablish the Church of England. A resolution of sympathy with the Church in America was then passed, in which it was said that "Bishop Williams was always most genially kind and helpful to all Scottish Churchmen, invariably expressing in the strongest terms his deep sense of the debt which the Church owed to her Scottish sister." "His kindly feelings were warmly reciprocated in Scotland, especially in the diocese" of Aberdeen. The resolution concluded by expressing the hope that Bishop Williams may have many like-minded successors.

The Assyrian Mission Committee

At the February meeting of the Board of Managers, a resolution was offered to the effect that the work of the New York Assyrian Committee should be recognized by the Board as an auxiliary. The matter was referred to the Advisory Committee, consisting of two bishops, two clergymen, and two laymen, to carefully consider and report to the March meeting. At this meeting, as already reported in our columns, the Advisory Committee having reported favorably, the Board gave its moral support to the work of the Assyrian Mission, by formally recognizing it as an auxiliary. It should, of course, be clearly understood that no grant of money was asked for or desired, but merely the sanction and sympathy of the Board in its endeavor to extend its work in this country. The committee therefore remains a separate organization, depending, as heretofore, entirely upon the special contributions of Church people for this particular object.

Notwithstanding the new responsibilities devolving upon the American Church, as a result of the late war, the actual needs of our Syrian brethren are such as to fully justify the wisdom of the present effort to extend and develop this special work. The recent upheavals and risings in Turkey, Kurdistan, and Persia, against the native Christians, have been of a most ominous character, and although originally directed against the Armenians, have had at the same time a most disastrous effect on the Assyrian Christians, just south-east of Armenia, who have suffered acutely from the raids of the Kurds. If our government is in no way able to help these Christians, the Church, at least, is privileged to extend to them a helping hand. We have been urgently entreated by the Syrian Church itself, not only to relieve the sufferings of its members, but also to do positive missionary and educational work. In the whole empire of Persia and Turkey this Church has but one single missionary, the Rev. Mr. Neesan. The Church of England supports five other missionaries engaged in the same work with Mr. Neesan. The Assyrian mission is, therefore, the only mission of our Communion through which American Churchmen can show, in a practical way, their sympathy with these suffering Christians. It is the one effort of the Anglican Communion to perform its duty in this respect, and repay in part the debt we owe to the Christian East.

It is therefore earnestly hoped that the members of the Church will make use of this means to send to this suffering Church their message of sympathy and love. Assistance is greatly needed at present, not so much to support or increase the existing staff of workers, as to extend the work which is going on under their supervision, by helping to supply schools, to print books, to furnish necessary hospital provision, and in various ways to lighten the burden of Mahomedan tyranny and extortion, by lessening its inevitable accompaniments of misery and want. To assist in this effort, it is proposed to take immediate action in the formation of a women's society, as an indispensable means of enabling the women of the Church to take their rightful place in this important field. Perhaps the crying need of a physician and hospital may thus be secured. Will any Church woman who reads these lines, and desires to have her part in this work, send in her name at once to the Rev. D. Parker Morgan, D.D., 3 East 45th st., New York city, who is acting as chairman of the organizing committee.

Diocese of Ontario

The sum asked for aid in rebuilding St. George's cathedral, Kingston, was $10,000. This amount has been subscribed, the lists indeed amounting $10,350. The Archbishop of Ontario who is in failing health, and who is residing in England, has deferred his intended return to Kingston. There has been a proposal to secure his residence in that city for the purpose of a private hotel, for which it is said to be suitable. The Ontario Diocesan Fund is increasing steadily; St. Mark's church congregation, Deseronto, have given $1,000 towards it.

There has been a very good attendance at the noonday Lenten services in Christ church cathedral, Hamilton. Very encouraging reports were read at the meeting of the local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew for Hamilton, in St. Thomas' church schoolhouse, March 9th. Bishop Du Moulin opened the meeting with prayer. The Rev. C. H. Dixon, of Toronto, held a Mission in St. Thomas' church, St. Catherine's, the second week in Lent, which seems to have been very successful. Mr. Dixon also held a six days' Mission at Campbell's Cross, beginning March 14th. Reports given at the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the church of the Ascension, Hamilton, show it to be a very active branch. Amongst other work, it supports a missionary at Athabasca Landing, and two Bible women (natives) at Trichoor, India.

A circular letter has been sent to the clergy by the Bishop, reminding them of the centenary services to be held all over the world in April, to commemorate the hundredth year of the Church Missionary Society. He authorizes a thanksgiving prayer to be used at the services held in the diocese for the purpose, and hopes that the offerings made then will be devoted to the society's fund. Dean Norman has resigned his position as rector of Quebec and dean of the cathedral, on the ground of ill-health and advancing years. Steps have been taken by the cathedral congregation and the Bishop to make choice of a new rector. The eighth annual report of the Quebec Church Helpers' Association, which has for its primary object the improving of the condition of the clergy in the poorer parts of the diocese, shows work done which is not covered by any other society. Aid has been given in the repairing and improving churches and parsonages, in sickness in families of the clergy, and in providing suitable vestments and vessels for country missions.

The mid-day Lenten services in the Church of England Institute, St. John, under the auspices of the St. Andrew's Brotherhood, have been well attended. The Rev. J. A. Richardson, rector of St. Luke's church, Winnipeg, has been holding services and preaching in St. John. He was sent by Archbishop Machray, in the place of Archdeacon Fortin who was prevented from going, by illness, to plead the cause of Ruperts' Land missions in Eastern Canada. He gives very telling and practical accounts of the development and present needs of Manitoba. Dr. Richardson conducted a course of children's services in St. John's stone church school room, which were so successful that there was not room enough for all who wanted to come. Much regret has been expressed at the sudden death of Archdeacon Brigstocke, of St. John. The new church at Baie Verte is free from debt, and it is expected will be consecrated in May by Bishop Kingdon. A large number of the clergy were present at the meeting of the deanery of St. John, in St. Luke's church, on the 21st.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The mid-day Lenten services in Handel Hall were quite up to those of last year in average attendance, but the offerings fell short of expenses by about $7.

Here is the abstract of the city missionary work on Easter Day: By the Rev. J. M. Chattin, service morning and afternoon in the County Jail, and at 5 p. m. in the Home for the Friendless; by Mr. Knickerbocker, service in the County Hospital at 9 a. m., and at the Bridewell at 1:30 p. m.; by Dr. Rushton, at 3:30, in the Home for Incurables, where there was fine music with beautiful flowers, and, as usual, a large congregation which included a few visitors.

In all of the churches where such an arrangement was possible, the celebrations of the Holy Eucharist on Easter were numerous, often four in the parish, between the hours of 6 a. m. and noon, and in most parishes, by far the larger number of Communion were made at the early services.

Services of Holy Week

The season of Lent was well observed by all of our churches by services more frequent and better attended than ever before. The large number who staid for the prayers and meditations of the "Three Hours on the Cross" on Good Friday, gave indication of vastly improved appreciation of the solemnity of the season. At the cathedral, where the Bishop worshipped, the service was in charge of his secretary. At St. James', Grace, Trinity, St. Peter's, St. Mark's—indeed, in a majority of the parishes—the addresses by the respective rectors were not simply appropriate, but, in most cases, delivered with that earnest force which enlarged and ever increasing congregations seldom fail to inspire. Nor was beautiful music, well rendered by full choirs under splendid training, absent as incentive to the careful following of the Church's invitations and instructions to her children, especially during Holy Week. On Wednesday evening, Grace church was filled by those who listened to the tenth annual rendering of Gaul's Passion music; on the evening of Maundy Thursday, at Trinity, Haydn's "Passion" was given by the choir trained by Dr. Rudge; on Good Friday evening, Mercadante's "Seven Last Words," drew a large number to St. James. Similar account might be given of St. Peter's, Lake View; of St. Paul's, Kenwood, and of the Redeemer, South Park, as of the rest of our large churches.

Guild of St. Barnabas for Nurses

After several weeks of preparation, a movement took shape at Trinity parish house, on March 21st, which is calculated to be of great and general use to the trained nurses of Chicago—a branch of the Guild of St. Barnabas was organized, with a membership, at the start, of nearly 70 nurses. The rector, the Rev. Wm. C. Richardson, was made chaplain, and the guild will meet at Trinity House hereafter, regularly. It supplies a long-felt want.

A Large Offering

Easter Day was a joyful one at the church of the Redeemer, Chicago, the Rev. Percival McIntire, rector. The church was beautifully decorated with palms, Easter lilies, and spring flowers; and the four services were largely attended, many at the 11 o'clock service being unable to obtain seats. About 300 communicated at the two Celebrations. The offerings at the services made a grand total of $4,500.

Trinity's New Swedish Mission

Easter Day saw the beginning of St. Sigfrid's Swedish mission in the hall of Trinity parish house. Bishop McLaren has licensed Mr. Shontrom to officiate as lay-reader. The rector of Trinity has opened the handsome hall of the parish house and provided an altar, properly arranged, and an organ, and the altar chapter of Trinity dressed the altar for Easter, and will assist the Swedes thereafter. A goodly number of Swedes attended the services, hereafter to be held every Sunday at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M.

The seven Sunday schools of Trinity parish had a festival service in the church Easter Day, filling it with bright faces and banners and music. At Trinity, the communicants were 420.

The Cathedral

At the cathedral, the Bishop was celebrant at the chief service, assisted by the now officially announced dean, the Rev. Luther Pardee. There were nearly 200 communicants at the four services. The Bishop preached, and confirmed a class of 45. The present cathedral staff of three priests is to be supplemented by a fourth on May 1st. A monthly cathedral paper is contemplated in the immediate future, and a printing apparatus for the Boys' Club of 45.

St. James' Church on Easter Day

The healthy spirit pervading St. James', reaching of late the height of enthusiasm, is very encouraging to the rector of the mother church of the diocese. At the three Celebrations over 600 received, two thirds of them at 6 and 8 A. M. At 10:45 the congregation numbered over 1,500. At 3 P. M., the building was completely filled for the Sunday school function, admirably planned and carried out by the superintendent, Mr. Addison. With the evening congregation the number in attendance at the six services must have aggregated 5,000. An offertory of $6,000 was asked for, and over $4,000 has been already reported, contributed in the main by about 800 individuals, for there were only three contributions of $100 or more; and as nearly 20 of the more prominent families are out of town, and pledges are still coming in, there is no doubt that the amount asked for is coming; one-half of it put the parish out of debt on Easter Monday. On May 1st, the veteran trainer, Mr. Smedley, comes from New York, to resume his old position as choirmaster.

A beautiful bronze tablet was seen for the first time in St. James' on Easter Day. The inscription reads:

In loving memory of Elizabeth Hammond, widow of Edward Swan Stickney, died July 11th, 1897. And in recognition of her helpful and gracious life, and of her many gifts to this parish, this memorial is made by the congregation.

"Make them to be numbered with thy saints in glory everlasting."

Easter at Grace Church, Chicago

Here there were over 4,000 at the three services, 8 A. M., 11 A. M., and 7:30 P. M., with considerably over 600 communicants. It was a delight to those attending the first service on Easter morn to find their old rector, Dr. Clifton Locke, officiating as celebrant. An interesting event was his finding among those receiving from his hands their first Communion, one whom he had baptized, whose mother, also receiving at the time, he had baptized, prepared for Confirmation, given first Communion to, and married. The music at the High Celebration was pronounced to be the finest ever heard in Grace, long famous for its choir, now under Harrison Wild, organist and choirmaster, who has recently been appointed to succeed Mr. Tomlins as conductor of the Apollo Club. An offertory of $3,700 was asked for, and one of over $4,000 given. The Rev. John Mark Ericsson assumes, this week, his duties as assistant to the Rev. E. M. Stires, rector.

Easter at the Epiphany

Bishop Morrison, of Iowa, officiated as celebrant and preacher, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Van Ingen. The church was densely filled, the congregation according their late rector a welcome second in intensity only to that splendid reception accorded to him on entry into his new diocese. The communicants numbered about 550, and the offertory amounted to $3,000.

Enlargement Needed at St. Peter's

The record of last year was broken, the total of communicants being 569, or 30 above last Easter's number, and of these nearly 400 were at the early services. It was impossible to seat the congregation at the mid-day service, though every available nook had its chairs. An offering of $3,500 was asked for, to enable the vestry to pay off $3,000 on mortgage due Oct. 2nd. This sum is now assured, for $2,500 is already reported. An architect is being consulted as to enlargement (now become a necessity), by occupying with a side aisle the vacant space between church and guild hall on the west. Bishop Edsall is to be in the city on Thursday, and will preach on Low Sunday. The rector's father, the Bishop of Niagara, will be here on the 20th, and will stay over two Sundays. The Rev. Frank Du Moulin has moved into the house, 1697 Wellington place. He desires to say that our notice of his work in Cleveland should not be construed as a reflection on that of his predecessor, because Emmanuel had been vacant for some months before he took charge.

Easter Day at Churches on the North Side

At the Ascension, 200 received in the re-occupied church, and the offering was over $1,300.

At the church of Our Saviour, Fullerton Ave., at the early Celebration, 219 received, and 127 at noon. The offering was $1,350, that of the Sunday school, $100. A handsome memorial window has been placed to the memory of Mary Brent, by the little one's parents, the subject being Christ blessing a little child.

At St. Chrysostom's, 150 received at the early Celebrations, and 95 at noon. The offering was $2,550, of which $1,000 goes to the building fund, the rest to liquidate floating debt. Communion vessels, very rich and beautiful in design, were given and used for the first time.

In the church of the Atonement, Edgewater, the offering was $1,150, with nearly 100 communicants. In All Saints', Ravenswood, the Holy Week services were well attended, especially the "Three Hours." At the three Celebrations of Easter, 162 received, of whom only seven at the late service; offerings, $400. In St. John's, Irving Park, the Rev. J. M. Chattin officiated for the Rev. C. E. Bowles, at 7 A. M., having 57 communicants; offering, $150. At 4 P. M. Evensong, there was an attendance of 200. In St. John's mission, Clybourn ave., 44 received at 8 A. M.

Easter at the West Side Churches

At St. Andrew's the Rev. Dr. Fleetwood and Professor Hall took the services for the rector who is still confined to his bed, but is improving and may be out on Low Sunday. Two hundred and thirty received at 6 and 8 A. M.; 130 at 10:30 A. M., when Dr. Fleetwood preached. Mr. Hall delivered the sermon in the evening, and also addressed the Sunday School. There was an offering of about $1,200, in addition to that of the Sunday school.

At Calvary, 208 received, and the offering was $400.

At St. Barnabas' the communicants numbered 107 and 29 at the two Celebrations. The offering was $105; that of the Sunday school over $30. At the early service 93 received in St. Luke's, Western ave., and 9 at the later service. The offering was $200, including $40 from the Sunday school.

The Rev. F. F. Beckerman reports 8 communicants at Douglas Park mission, and 118 at the 10:30 A. M. service in the church of the Good Shepherd, Lawndale, being 6 more than ever before. The offering was $200. At St. Ann's 85 received at the early service, and 28 at the later.

South Side Churches on Easter Day

At St. Paul's, Kenwood, the Rev. C. H. Bixby was cheered by an offering of $9,800, being the result of a special appeal for the building fund of the new church, the foundations of which are laid, and which may be soon commenced.

There were 454 communicants in St. Mark's, of whom 199 received at 6:30 and 8 A. M. The offering was over $1,600. A special feature of the late service was a musical setting to processional hymn 105, composed by the choir-master, F. H. Bradley.

At St. Alban's 69 received at 7:30 A. M., and 67 at 10:45. The offering was over $400. There is a remarkable showing from Christ church, Woodlawn, where 363 received at 6 and 8 A. M., and 98 at 11 A. M. The rector was assisted by the Rev. C. C. Tate, and the offering was about $1,500, with $100 from the Sunday school. The recent effective improvements include decoration of the chancel and choir, electric lighting, and a beautiful reredos. At the Park Macor mission, with 90 children, an offering of $83 was presented. At St. Thomas' 76 received at 6:30 A. M., and 46 later; offering $120; Sunday school $7. The priest-in-charge, the Rev. Alf. Lealtad, rejoices over the gift of a beautiful white stole. Immediate efforts will be made to erect a guild room in the rear of the church.

At Holy Trinity, communicants numbered 82; the offering, $110, was the largest in years. Over 150 children were present at the afternoon Sunday school service, and 75 at the 9:30 A. M. service of Good Friday.

In the church of the Annunciation, Auburn Park, the number of communicants, 62, was the largest ever made. The offering, including that of Sunday school, was over $400. At the new mission of Holy Cross, 55th and Halsted sts., the attendance, 150, tested the capacity of the room at evening service, which was full choral. The decorations were beautiful. Offering, $20; Sunday school attendance, 117. At the 8 A. M. Celebration in the Incarnation, Fernwood, 15 received, and at Evensong the offering was $25.

St. Margaret's, Windsor Park, reports at 7 A. M., 26 communicants, and 30 at 11 A. M.; offering, $98. In the evening, Mr. Roland held service for 100 men at Whiting, which is in the diocese of Indiana. At Pullman, Dr. Rushton celebrated for 30, at 9:30 A. M., and at 11 A. M., for 45, at the church of the Mediator, Morgan Park, where the offering was over $200. He had previously administered the Holy Communion to 21 in Harvey, at 7:30 A. M. He also reports a full evening service at Pullman.

Easter in the Suburban Churches

In St. Mark's, Evanston, there were 267 at the 7 A. M. Celebration; 57 at 8:30, and 58 at 11 A. M. Of the large offering, $1,250 at the late service forms the nucleus of a fund for a rectory and parish house.

No rector has more reason to feel encouraged than Dr. Fawcett, of the Redeemer, Elgin, who while reporting 147 communicants in the parish last year, with 122 receiving at Easter, has this year 152 at the three Celebrations; offering over $800. Good Friday was a surprise, the Three Hours' Service being attended by a congregation which completely filled the church.

In Emmanuel church, Lagrange, the Communions made were 146 and 108 respectively; offering, to clear off floating debt, $4,400, for which preparations were begun in July last by getting 100 pledges of $40 each payable in eight monthly installments. Sunday school offertory, $100.

At St. Matthew's, Evanston, there were 39 communicants. In Trinity, Highland Park, there were about 120 communicants. In Christ, Winnetka, there were 47 communicants, and an offering of nearly $200. In St. Paul's, Glencoe, 35 received. In St. Paul's, Roger's Park, 75 received at the early Celebrations, and 27 at noon. The offering was $1,100.

At St. Michael's, Berwyn, there was not a vacant seat at the single service which was at 11 A.M. The communicants numbered 35, and the offering was $140, besides $17—Lenten offerings of the little Sunday school. A fine new brass altar cross had been presented on the previous day by an unknown donor.

The Holy Communion, Maywood, reports nearly 60 at the early Celebrations and 11 at the chief service, which was full choral. There were Celebrations on the four days of Holy Week, and many services on Good Friday.

In Grace church, Hinsdale, 62 received at the later of the two Celebrations; there were large congregations, with fine music, both vocal and instrumental; and an offering of $402. At the afternoon service in St. Andrew's, Downers Grove, there was also a large congregation; offering, $45.

St. John's, Naperville, being in charge of a dean, there was no Celebration. The music, largely instrumental, was excellent; the offering, $76. A pleasing episode was the recent confirmation of one who for ten years was an Evangelical missionary.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A Churchman of New York City, Mr. C. C. Jackson, has given $25,000 for the erection of a rectory for St. Saviour's church, Bar Harbor, Me.

The Woman's Auxiliary of St. Philip's church, of colored people, has just presented an Easter gift of brass altar vases to St. Cyprian's church, St. Augustine, Fla.

At the church of the Holy Trinity, Harlem, the Rev. Alexander S. Cummins, Jr., priest-in-charge, the Bishop administered the rite of Confirmation on Wednesday in Easter week.

At St. Peter's church, the Rev. Olin S. Roche, rector, a memorial window to the rector's father, the late Dr. John A. Roche, was unveiled on Easter Day, the subject being "Christ in the home at Bethany."

The general secretary of the American Church Missionary Society, the Rev. Dr. W. Dudley Powers, has just returned from a visit to Cuba, in the interests of the mission work now under way at Havana and Matanzas by this society.

Easter-tide at the church of the Holy Communion has been made a happy one by the return of the beloved rector, the Rev. Henry Mottet, D.D., who, as noted in the columns of THE LIVING CHURCH, has been absent for some time on account of illness.

This year was remarkable in the increased observance, not only of Easter, but also of Good Friday, and, to some extent, of Holy Week, by the Protestant denominations. The methods of observance were in all cases closely taken from the uses of the Anglican Church.

At the church of the Transfiguration, the Rev. Dr. Houghton, rector, the Rev. J. O. S. Huntington, of the order of the Holy Cross, conducted the Three Hours' Service on Good Friday. For Easter Day, the choir was augmented with orchestral instruments. There were three early celebrations of the Eucharist, followed by High Celebration.

A remarkable series of lectures are being delivered on the Ely foundation, at the Union Theological Seminary, by Dr. Thomas C. Hall, on "The social significance of the religious revival in England in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries." The course which began April 4th, and is open to the public, deals directly with matters affecting the Anglican Church, and discusses the Low, Broad, and High Church movements.

Gift to Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.

Friends resident in this city, of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., have presented to President Smith, D.D., LL.D., the sum of $25,000 for the science building of the college, which it is intended to begin this spring. The gift came from five individuals.

Gift of a New Floating Hospital

A new floating hospital for St. John's Guild, long contemplated, has been rendered possible by a gift of Mrs. Augustus D. Julliard, of this city, who has directed that whatever is necessary shall be supplied at her cost. The estimates exceed $80,000.

Easter Memorials

At St. Andrew's church, Harlem, the Rev. Dr. George R. Van de Water, rector, a notable feature of Easter Day was the unveiling of the new memorial window to Dr. Bottome, already described in the columns of THE LIVING CHURCH. The chancel is about to be tiled in memory of another parishioner.

The General Theological Seminary

A legacy of $5,000 comes to the seminary by the will of the late Ven. Archdeacon Cooper, D.D., who left similar bequests for Nashotah Theological Seminary and the University of the South. In each case the capital is to be kept intact, and the interest used to aid poor students in prosecuting their studies.

Fresh Air Work for Boys

The church of the Holy Cross is already moving vigorously to secure funds necessary for the summer fresh air work for working boys and their little brothers at St. Andrew's Holiday House. Last year the House gave outings to more than 200 boys, at a total cost of a little over $350. The economy, though great, is not able to meet the pressure probable in the approaching season, and enlarged funds are needed.

Passion Music

At St. James' church, the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, D.D., rector, the vested choir finely rendered Haydn's "Passion," during Passion Week, under the direction of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Walter Henry Hall. At St. Matthew's church, the Rev. Dr. Krans, rector, the choir rendered the cantata, "The Cross of Christ," on the evening of Palm Sunday. At All Souls' church, Gounod's "Daughters of Jerusalem" was rendered by the parish choir on the evening of Good Friday.

The Church Club

At the March meeting of the Church Club, just held, the new rector of the church of St. Mary the Virgin, the Rev. Geo. M. Christian, D.D., discussed "Personal religion." He was followed by the Rev. A. L. Wood, of the archdeaconry of Richmond. The speaking of the evening was closed by the Rev. Prof. J. C. Roper who considered "Personal religion and the creed." The Church Club has made a provision by which the privileges of the club rooms are extended at all times to the clergy of the Church resident in this diocese, and the neighboring dioceses of Long Island and Newark. Many of the clergy have responded heartily to this generous invitation.

Churches Opposing Railway Extension

The board of trustees of the cathedral of St. John the Divine and the managers of St. Luke's Hospital have joined in the movement started by the Rev. Dr. John P. Peters, of St. Michael's church, and which has now spread to the entire population of that portion of the city, and has been backed up by the city press, to antagonize projects of railway extension in the vicinity, which threaten to endanger life. A severe contest has been carried to the Legislature of the State, and Governor Roosevelt who is a Churchman, has taken sides on the issue, in the interest of the people. The action of the cathedral and hospital authorities has practically settled the question by withdrawing consent of property ownership to nearly 1,000 ft. on the thoroughfare involved.

Columbia University

Through the efforts of President Seth Low, LL.D., the indebtedness of the institution, rendered unavoidable by removal to the new location, and amounting to about $3,700,000, has been rearranged in a fund, saving $35,000 in interest annually. There will be a rival debate between the students of this university and those of the University of Chicago, in Chicago, on April 14th. A friend has given $150,000 for a new building in connection with the Teachers' College; this, with other sums for the same object already in hand, will enable the erection of an edifice to cost about $350,000. It will be built to the westward of the college, and will be connected with the latter by a covered passageway. The building will be a fine addition to those now surrounding the cathedral of St. John the Divine, and will be 100 by 200 ft. in size, and five stories in height.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. Allan Sheldon Woodle, rector of St. Luke's church, Altoona, is undergoing treatment for an injured knee at the Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia.

The Bishop held a visitation service on the Feast of the Annunciation, in St. Mary's church, West Philadelphia, the Rev. W. W. Steel, rector, confirming a class of 11.

The Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity church, addressed a students' meeting in Houston Hall, University of Pennsylvania, on the 29th ult. His subject was "The ministry as a life work."

In the will of George W. Lukens, of Frankford, Philadelphia, probated on the 25th ult., the larger portion of his estate, valued at $55,000, is bequeathed to the Grand Lodge of Masons for a specified purpose. If the bequest is refused, then the estate is to go to St. Mark's church, Frankford.

An Easter gift has just been sent by the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Peter's church, Germantown, the Rev. Dr. T. S. Rumney, rector, to the Rev. A. B. Clark, Rosebud Agency, S. D., containing an outfit for a native helper and his wife; also six cassocks and six cottas for the first vested choir among Indians, besides a pulpit fall; value of the box, $75.

Good Friday services were generally well attended in all our churches, especially those which observed the "Three Hours Service." In addition to the several services at St. James' church, the Rev. Dr. J. N. Blanchard, rector, there was a special one at 8 P.M., for those who were prevented by their daily work from attending at earlier hours.

Death of Col. Edwin Jefferies

Colonel Edwin Jefferies, a retired railroad superintendent and iron manufacturer, entered into life eternal on the 29th ult., in the 84th year of his age. For 25 years he was a vestryman of Christ church, Germantown, and was active both in Church and charitable work.

A Studious Indian Girl

Margaret Nason, of the Sitting Bull tribe, came to the Lincoln Institution, Philadelphia, some ten years ago, where she received an education preliminary to her being a student at the Girls' High School, and is now its only Indian girl graduate. She was a proficient student in history and languages; and during her postgraduate work, took an advanced course in English, while she imparted the Indian tongue to her instructors. She has just returned to her people in the Far West.

Reunion of Confirmees at St. Peter's

A special service for all who have been confirmed during the 25 years' rectorship of the Rev. Dr. T. S. Rumney, was held on the evening of Palm Sunday, at St. Peter's church, Germantown, when a special sermon was preached by the rector who endeavored in earnest words to strengthen the faith, and increase the zeal of those who were striving to fulfill the vows they had taken. The church was completely filled.

Palm Sunday at St. Mark's

A very large congregation was in attendance at the high celebration of the Holy Eucharist at St. Mark's church, Philadelphia, which was preceded by a solemn procession, the vested choir singing "All glory, laud, and honor." The crucifer, bearing the crucifix veiled in violet, was attended by two acolytes bearing lighted candles. The choristers, the rector, and the clergy who took part in the Celebration, carried branches of palm. The music, under the direction of Minton Pyne, organist and master of the choir, was Lloyd's Communion service in E; at the offertory, Gounod's "There is a green hill far away," was beautifully rendered. The sermon by the rector, the Rev. Dr. A. G. Mortimer, dwelt upon Christ as the Perfect Man and the Perfect God.

Sacred Music for Passion and Holy Week

On Thursday evening, 23d ult., Haydn's "Passion" was rendered in the church of Our Saviour, Jenkintown, by the choir of that church, assisted by the choir of St. Timothy's, Roxboro, under the direction of Charles T. Murphy, Jr. Stainer's cantata, "The Crucifixion," was rendered by the choir of St. Paul's church, Chestnut Hill, at Evensong, on Sunday, 26th ult. The same composition was sung on the 27th ult., in the church of the Ascension, Philadelphia, by the united choirs of St. Andrew's, West Philadelphia, and of the Ascension, consisting of 100 voices, under the direction of Howard R. O'Daniel, and was again given by the same musical talent on the 29th ult., in St. Andrew's church, West Philadelphia, in which church, also, the united choirs, on the evening of Good Friday, sang Haydn's "Passion." Dudley Buck's beautiful cantata, "The Story of the Cross," was rendered on the 28th ult., at old St. Andrew's, Philadelphia, by a quartette and a chorus of 50 voices, under the direction of Prof. W. R. Barnes, J. P. Rowland, organist. The Passion service, "The Throne of Calvary," composed by Dr. Carl Hempel Reed, was sung by the choir of St. Paul's church, Chestnut Hill, on the evening of Maundy Thursday, in that church, assisted in its rendition by a quintette of local talent.

Church Club Work Among Boys

The Church Club of Philadelphia held a meeting at the Church House on the 27th ult., and considered the offer made by the president, George C. Thomas, of land and money for a building to meet the demands of the work among the boys of Kensington. As was stated in THE LIVING CHURCH last week, the land has already been conveyed to the club, and action was taken, by the appointment of a finance committee of seven, to raise the necessary funds, and a building committee of five members. The club also agreed by resolution, that its members, as individuals, will subscribe $2,500 a year, for the term of five years, to maintain the building and work. In addition to the fund offered by Mr. Thomas ($13,000, not $12,000, as was stated last week), $5,000 has been subscribed by one donor, and $500 by another. This makes a total of $18,500. It is planned to build, at a cost of about $30,000, so that more than half the amount needed is already in sight. The plans for the structure have not yet been drafted, but the intention is to have a building with club accommodations for 1,000 boys. In the present quarters, from 300 to 350 boys are accommodated each week, and as many as 150 have gathered at a meeting. There are about 1,000 names on the roll, and it is intended to have the house large enough to meet the demands of the work fully.

St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia

The ceremonial benediction of the palms took place at 6:30 A. M., on Palm Sunday, after which pieces of palm were distributed among those present at the three celebrations of the Holy Communion at later morning hours, and also at the High Celebration at 11 A. M. In the procession preceding this service, all the priests, acolytes, and members of the choir carried great branches of palm. The music was Tours in C. Before the sermon, preached by the rector, the Rev. G. H. Moffett, a letter was read from Bishop Whitaker, dispensing the members of the parish, on account of the prevalence of sickness at this time, from the strict fast on Good Friday, and allowing them to take some food in the morning. A new set of vestments of a rich purple silk embroidered in thorns, shields, and Jerusalem crosses, was used for the first time at the High Celebration. The celebrant's chasuble has opheys of blood red silk, with the pillar in front and the Y cross on the back, and on these are shields containing designs indicative of scenes and incidents in the Passion described by St. Matthew in the Gospel for the day: the bag with the 30 pieces of silver, the chalice and consecrated wafer, the lantern, staves and sword, the ewer and bason, the pillar, cord, and scourges, the nails, hammer, and pincers, the ragged scarlet robe, crown of thorns and reed, the cross with the inscription, I. N. R. I., the coat without a seam, and the ladder, spear, and sponge. Where the arms of the cross join is an embroidered Eccce Homo, which was done in the work room of the All Saints' Sisters, Baltimore. On the ends of the stoles are five Jerusalem crosses, to typify the five wounds. This gorgeous set of vestments has just been completed by the Altar Guild of the Sodality of St. Clement.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
Robert A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor

On Sunday, March 19th, A. M., Bishop Whittle confirmed a class of 19 persons, at St. James' church, Richmond. He preached an able sermon. The Bishop also confirmed a class of 10, at All Saints' church, Richmond, in the evening.

Much interest has been manifested in the Lenten night services which have been held at Christ church, Richmond. The addresses have been made entirely by laymen.

Bishop Gibson visited Holy Trinity church, Richmond, on Sunday A. M., March 26th, preaching and confirming a class of 22 adults. Stainer's "Crucifixion" was rendered by the choir on Good Friday night.

One of the special features of the Good Friday devotional services of St. Paul's church, Richmond, was the rendering of the "Messiah" by the choir. In spite of the mixed congregations which gather at such a time, the devotional character of the service is never lost sight of.

Bishop Jaggard who, as before noted, has been in temporary charge of St. Paul's church, Richmond, during the past four months, and who expected to remain until Oct. 1st, when Dr. Carmichael's leave of absence would expire, has been obliged by physical infirmities to resign his charge at once, and leave Richmond after the services of Easter Day.

Bishop Gibson visited Epiphany church, Barton Heights, on Holy Thursday night, preaching, celebrating Holy Communion, and confirming a class of seven candidates. This is the second visitation of the Bishop to this parish during Lent.

Bishop Jaggard's Sermon to Men

A special service for men was held in St. Paul's church, Richmond, on Sunday, March 26th, under the auspices of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of that church, and Bishop Jaggard had been asked to preach a sermon on that occasional that would have special reference to the needs and aspirations of men. The church presented a sight that has been rarely witnessed in this city, a large congregation filling it to overflowing, composed almost entirely of men from every walk and calling in life. The Bishop preached a sermon of great spirituality and power, the dominant thought of which was that every truly successful and heroic life must lose itself in its endeavors for the upbuilding and blessing of others.

Lenten Services by non-Episcopal Ministers

The mid-day Lenten services for business men, conducted by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which for the last four years have been held in the downtown part of Richmond, have not this year proved the success that was hoped for. Last year the plan was tried of having non-episcopal ministers of the city make addresses at these meetings. There was then some objection to this, and when the same plan was used this year, these objections became more pronounced, especially as the Prayer Book was not made use of at such services. The city clergy have not favored it, and The Southern Churchman, speaking of it, says: "We see 'that all the denominations' will take part. Though these are services for all persons, we think it would be better that our own clergy should conduct them. They know how best to do this work. Let them do it."

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

Being convinced that the missionary work of the Church is her first and greatest work, the rector of St. Thomas' church, Detroit, the Rev. F. B. Hodgins, is pursuing the plan of preaching a missionary sermon once every month. He invites the congregation to make use of a "Cycle of prayer," which he has prepared in order to make the subject more definite. The "Cycle" is as comprehensive as possible, and if faithfully used, should deepen and quicken interest in the great work committed to the Church. There is a special topic for each day of the week.

Bishop Davies visited St. Luke's, Ypsilanti, on Passion Sunday, and preached and confirmed at the morning service. The rector, the Rev. Wm. Gardam, presented 20 for the "laying on of hands." The Bishop's sermon, on the "Peace of God," was very beautiful and profitable.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D. D., Bishop

St. John's Church, Clinton

On Tuesday of Holy Week, Bishop Morrison made the first visitation of St. John's parish, Clinton, the Rev. H. H. Morrill, rector, confirming a class of 32, making 154 Confirmations, and an equal number of Baptisms, during the present rectorate of less than three years. The new church, just completed upon the site of the old St. John's, which was torn down last summer, is a spacious edifice of stone of Gothic architecture, and with a seating capacity of about 500. The furnishings throughout are among the best in the diocese, and almost entirely memorials and special gifts, as follows: The altar and reredos to the memory of the late Mr. P. S. Toole, the recently deceased senior warden; the Bishop's chair, the gift of Mrs. George McDaid, in memory of her sister; the clergy chair, given by Mr. George Goodwin; the credence table, by Mrs. H. H. Morrill, in memory of her mother; the cruets and ciborium, the gift of Mr. Marvin Pool; the large brass receiving bason, and four collecting basons, a memorial of Mr. Samuel Cook, by his wife; the altar cross and vases, a memorial of the late Mrs. Orrin C. Eston; the altar service book, a memorial to William Graham Rice; altar book rest, to the memory of Mrs. Sarah Williams McDonald; one altar Prayer Book and Hymnal in memory of Mrs. I. P. Brewer, another, in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Risely. The altar rail of carved oak is the gift of Mrs. E. H. Thayer, in memory of her brother, Mr. J.

Osborn Payne; the choir stalls were given by the Sunday school; the brass eagle lectern, by the young ladies of St. Agnes' Guild; the lectern Bible, by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sabin, in memory of their daughter, Bessie; the brass and oak pulpit and carved oak rood-screen, by the ladies of St. John's Guild; the brass litany desk, by St. Cecilia's Guild, and the litany book, in memory of Mr. Chas. G. Roberts, by his wife. This work, now so happily completed, marks a new era in the life of the parish, ushering in what gives every promise of being the period of its greatest prosperity.

The Bishop's Visit to Muscatine

On Passion Sunday, Bishop Morrison visited this parish, it being his first visit and Confirmation outside of the see city of Davenport. The rector, the Rev. Dr. Paget, and his sister entertained the Bishop and his eldest son at the rectory, and on Saturday evening, a number of the men of the parish, and others, called informally upon the Bishop, and were delighted with his manly greeting and unaffected cordiality. The Bishop's sermons and addresses to the congregations and Sunday schools of Trinity and All Saints' won all hearts, and it is safe to prophesy that Dr. Morrison will be greeted with delight, and with overflowing congregations, at each future visit, as he was on his first. A class of 10 was confirmed in the evening.

Indiana

John Hazen White, D.D., Bishop

The Rt. Rev. John Hazen White, D.D., made his annual visitation to Howe School and St. Mark's parish, March 22d. The rector, the Rev. John Heyward McKenzie, Ph.D., officiated at Evensong, after which the Bishop laid his apostolic hands upon a class of 18—three boys and three girls from the parish, and 12 boys from the school. He made an excellent and helpful address to the class. The Bishop expressed great joy at the work accomplished, and said he was highly pleased with the school and its influence for good in the Church.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

March 22d, the local council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held a public meeting, when an eloquent address was delivered by Bishop Kinsolving, of Brazil.

On Palm Sunday, the Bishop of Washington administered Confirmation to a large number of candidates, in the morning, at the church of the Epiphany, and in the evening, at St. John's, Georgetown.

On Wednesday evening in Holy Week, "The Crucifixion" was sung at St. John's, Washington, by the vested choir, under the direction of Mr. H. H. Freeman, organist and choirmaster.

The Bishop's Anniversary

On the Feast of the Annunciation, the Bishop of Washington observed the third anniversary of his consecration, by a special service at the pro-cathedral, to which he invited the clergy and people of the diocese. The chancel and altar were beautifully decorated with palms and lilies. After the processional hymn, the Te Deum was sung, and the Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion. In an informal address, he spoke of the association of this diocese with the Feast of the Annunciation, chosen by the late beloved Presiding Bishop for the consecration of its first bishop, and also of a much earlier historical association; for on this day, the first settlers of Maryland landed on the beautiful shores of St. Mary's river, within the diocesan boundaries, and the place where they knelt—many of them of the Church of England, though the leaders were Roman Catholics—is in the churchyard of St. Mary's, one of the old parishes of this new diocese. On the afternoon of the same day, the first annual meeting of the Bishop's Guild took place at the episcopal residence. On both these occasions, the Bishop spoke of his plans and hopes for the diocese, and of the spirit in which clergy and laity should work together.

The Churchman's League

The postponed lecture was given on the evening of the 27th ult., in the church of the Epiphany. The subject was, "Cathedral work of the future in America," and the Bishop gave a comprehensive sketch of what it should be, and pictured the great national cathedral which the Churchmen of this day hope to found for the blessing of future generations.

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D.D., Bishop

The Bishop's Visit to Park River

March 19th, Bishop Edsall made his first visitation to St. Peter's mission. On Saturday evening, an informal gathering at the house of one of the parishioners, afforded the Bishop an opportunity to meet the people of the mission. On Sunday, services were held in the Baptist edifice, and the Bishop confirmed two persons. He preached both morning and evening, the later service being in the Presbyterian building. The Bishop's visit has created renewed enthusiasm in Church work in this city, and he hopes soon to secure the erection of a small mission church. For that purpose, Mrs. C. D. Lord has deeded to the Bishop two lots near the Wadge residence, and the lot adjoining has been secured by Mr. Lord for rectory purposes.

Kansas

Frank Rosebrook Millsbaugh, D.D., Bishop

The mission at Horton has been presented with an altar by Grace church, Ottawa.

A beautiful altar, presented by the Daughters of the King of Grace parish, has been given to the church at Chanute. The service of blessing by the rector, the Rev. H. M. Carr, D.D., will be held on April 7th.

The new church for Calvary mission, Yates Centre, will be consecrated by Bishop Millsbaugh on April 6th. Dean Hill will preach the sermon.

Through the efforts of the rector, the Rev. J. M. Rankin, the parish church of the Ascension, Burlington, has been repaired throughout, and was re-opened for service recently.

Bishop Millsbaugh has been making a series of visitations in the western part of Kansas, known as the short-grass-country, about 300 miles from the see city, Topeka. On account of the severe and unusual winter in the West, the Bishop says his Confirmations this year will not be as many as last year.

Memorial of Bishop Thomas

On March 9th, a memorial service was held in Grace church, Ottawa, and a beautiful oak altar placed in the church by the local chapter of the Daughters of the King, in memory of the late Diocesan of blessed memory, the Rt. Rev. Elisha S. Thomas, S.T.D., second Bishop of Kansas. The rector who preached the sermon on this occasion, drew lessons from the beautiful character of the late Bishop.

Deanery of Wichita

The convocation of this deanery met in St. Matthew's church, Newton, presided over by the Rev. Dr. Krum, the dean. All the clergy of the deanery, with two exceptions, attended. The Bishop and Mrs. Millsbaugh were present. The Rev. Dr. Beatty, the rector of the parish, added much to the success of the convocation. His excellent boy choir also assisted at each service.

St. John's Church, Wichita

The energetic rector of this parish, the Rev. J. F. von Herrlich, has announced that the parish church is freed from the debt that has burdened it for a long time, and that it will be ready for consecration at the meeting of the diocesan convention at Wichita in September next. An effort is being made to have the present chairs replaced by pews.

Southern Ohio

Thomas A. Jaggard, D.D., Bishop
Boyd Vincent, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor

A Mission in Urbana

Archdeacon Webber, of Milwaukee, has just concluded a week's Mission of marvelous power in the parish of the Epiphany, the Rev. David Wright, rector. There was a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit, great conviction of sin, comfort to the sorrowful, strengthening of the weak. The spiritual life of the Church has been revived. As a direct result of the week, a large class of candidates were on Easter Day presented to the Bishop for Confirmation. On Easter Day the parish also celebrated its 50th anniversary with appropriate services. Never has it been in a better state spiritually and materially to hold a jubilee service than at the present time, one of the causes of rejoicing being the final payment of the building debt that has rested upon the parish for many years, the last $500 of which has been raised since the first of January.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

In most of the churches of Brooklyn on Good Friday, there were three services, Morning and Evening Prayer, with addresses, and the observance of the Three Hours, and in all, the congregations were unusually large.

On Easter Day, in nearly all the churches there was one early celebration of the Holy Eucharist, and in several, two—one at sunrise, and another at 8 o'clock.

The Bishop of the diocese recently visited St. Joseph's church, Queens, and confirmed 10 persons, eight of whom were males, presented by the priest-in-charge, the Rev. G. Wharton McMullen.

For two weeks the Rev. Fr. Watson has been holding a Mission at St. Michael's church, N. 5th st., Brooklyn, the Rev. Floyd E. West, priest-in-charge. There is much interest displayed, the congregations being large, and at the evening services, the church is crowded.

At Christ church, E. D., the Rev. James H. Darlington, rector, on a recent Friday a series of Quiet Hours were held by the Rev. W. H. Barnes, at the request of the associated chapters, Daughters of the King, of the diocese.

Memorial of Dr. J. B. Elliott

At Easter, a beautiful memorial window was unveiled in the church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, the Rev. St. Claire Hester, rector. It is in memory of Dr. J. B. Elliott who was at the time of his death, in July last, junior warden, having been connected with the vestry for nearly 35 years. The window is the gift of the church, its purchase being authorized by vote of the vestry.

Legacies by Rev. E. D. Cooper, D. D.

The will of the late Archdeacon Edmund D. Cooper contains the following bequests: To the University of the South, at Sewanee, Tenn., all his theological library, and to the theological department of the university, $5,000, the interest on which is to go to the support of a divinity student, to be appointed by the rector of the church of the Redeemer, Astoria, L. I.; to the General Theological Seminary and Nashotah House, Wis., each $5,000, for the support of a divinity student, to be appointed by the same rector. The estate is valued at $30,000, and the will made some 14 years ago, has been admitted to probate.

A Growing Mission of St. Luke's, Brooklyn

The mission in charge of the Rev. Frederick P. Swezey has outgrown its present quarters, and Dr. Swentzel, rector of St. Luke's, suggests that the work be made permanent by the purchase of a lot on which to erect a building. This would contain a restaurant, rooms for lodgers, and a commodious assembly room for services, lectures, entertainments, mothers meetings, kindergarten, industrial school, and a general reading and club room. Recent costly improvements have been made on the organ at St. Luke's church, which is the largest in Brooklyn.

Confirmation in Brooklyn Churches

The Bishop of Easton who for several weeks has been officiating for Bishop Littlejohn, visited St. Peter's church, the Rev. Lindsay Parker, rector, on the evening of Palm Sunday, and confirmed a class of 52. Bishop Adams gave a very earnest, helpful charge to the class, and after the service greeted the members individually as they passed through the vestry. On the evening of March 28d, at Grace church on the Heights, the Rev. Frederick Burgess, rector, Confirmation was administered to 28 candidates, by Bishop Adams. On the following evening, at the church of the Atonement, the Rev. E. Homer Wellman, Ph.D., rector, a class of 40 was confirmed, and on the evening of Good Friday, in St. Ann's church on the Heights, the rector, the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop, presented a class of 59, ranging in age from 14 to 74 years.

Memorial to Former Rectors

In Christ church, Brooklyn, the Rev. A. B. Kinsolving, rector, a beautiful memorial window was unveiled on Ea ter morning. It is in memory of three former rectors: The Rev. John Seeley Stone, D.D., who was rector from 1841 to 1852; the Rev. Eli Hawley Canfield, D.D., from 1853 to 1869, and the Rev. Lucius Whiting Bancroft, D.D., from 1869 to 1889. The window is the gift of present and former parishioners of Christ church. The subject is St. Peter's great confession. In the foreground is a grove of cypress, the roofs of the city showing over the low wall in the background, and a yellow twilight sky above, with reddish clouds. This warm golden tone is carried up through the Gothic architectural forms that fill the upper part of the window, varied with olive, dull red, and purple. The whole window glows with color, the most vivid tones appearing in the drapery of the figures in the lower part, relieved, however, by masses of gray, dark green, and brown. The window is of Favril glass, and is the work of the Tiffany studios. The inscription is composed of the text St. Matt. xvi: 15, 16. A memorial service for the three clergymen was held in Christ church not long since. On Palm Sunday a Mission was begun, lasting through Holy Week. The Rev. Nelson P. Dame, general missionary of the Parochial Missions Society, who was the preacher throughout the week, drew large congregations. He speaks extempore, and with vigor, directness, and effectiveness.

Davis Sessums, D.D., Bishop

The Church Club Lectures

These have been exceedingly interesting. Bishop Sessums gave the initial lecture, on "The pre-Reformation period," on March 13th; Prof. Chas. L. Wells, Ph. D., of the State University of Minnesota, gave the second, "Charles the Great and the foundations of the Western Church," on March 20th, and Judge W. W. Howe, president of the Church Club, the third, "Contributions to law by some English Churchmen," on March 27th. The lectures have been greatly enjoyed, and have proven very instructive.

A New Church for St. George's, New Orleans

St. George's parish has given the contract for a new church to Mr. Julius Koch, one of the best architects and builders in New Orleans, and the contractor to whom was given the erection of the present cathedral. The parish is located in the most favorable part of New Orleans, and under the present rector, the Rev.

J. W. Moore, has been rapidly increasing in influence and importance.

Kentucky

Thomas U. Dudley, D. D., D. C. L., Bishop

Mid-day services were held during Passion Week at 454 Main st., Louisville. The services were conducted by the Rev. John K. Mason, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's church. Bishop Dudley will address the men during Holy Week.

The Rev. Wm. H. McGee, of Anchorage, has accepted an appointment as missionary to Cuba, and has departed to his field of work.

On Passion Sunday, Psalm xlii, "God is our refuge and strength," etc., music by Dudley Buck, was sung at Christ church cathedral. The vested choir was re-inforced for the occasion by a double quartette of ladies. The music was beautifully sung, under the direction of Horatio Browne, Mus. D., organist and director of music in the cathedral. A month ago Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" was sung, with even better tonal effects.

The Bishop's Anniversary

The 24th anniversary of the Bishop's consecration, on Jan. 27th, was celebrated by the usual service at the cathedral, the Bishop being celebrant, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. Craik and Grant, his assistants. In the afternoon he gave a luncheon to his clergy. There were present: the Rev. Drs. Perkins, Snively, Estill, Minnigerode, Mason, and Craik; and the Rev. Messrs. Smith, Johnston, Kirkpatrick, Chrisman, and Klenzie, of Louisville, and McGee, of Anchorage, and Marshall, of Owensboro. The Bishop entertained in his usual pleasant manner, and the lunch was very good. A cheerful smoker wound up the pleasant occasion.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

At Emmanuel church, Cleveland, Canon Hall has charge of all services till a new rector is chosen. Congregations have been large, and Lenten services well attended.

The Rev. L.W. Applegate, of Tacoma, Wash., has given valuable help in different parishes in Cleveland: at Trinity cathedral, at the church of the Holy Spirit, and at Emmanuel church.

During Passion Week, noonday services were held at Trinity cathedral, with a brief address, the Bishop of Oklahoma being the speaker on Monday and Saturday. On Good Friday the usual Three-Hour Service, beginning at 12 m. and closing at 3 p.m., was conducted by the Very Rev. Chas. D. Williams, dean of Trinity cathedral.

The class in ecclesiastical embroidery, of which Miss Neff is president, will adjourn April 17th for the summer. On Monday, March 27th, there was an exhibition at the cathedral house of the altar linen made this year for gifts to missions. Each set consists of a fair linen cloth, one corporal, one chalice veil, a credence cover, a pall, and three purificators. In all, 12 missions have been helped in this way, at different times.

Bishop Brooke visited Trinity church, Toledo, on Passion Sunday, March 19th, and confirmed a class of about 50 persons, prepared by the Rev. E. S. Barkdull.

Confirmations in Cleveland

On Palm Sunday, Bishop Brooke, of Oklahoma, visited Trinity cathedral, preached and administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of 20. On the evening of the same day he preached at St. Paul's church. A class of 12 were confirmed.

St Paul's Pro-Cathedral

A local paper of March 17th, has the following agreeable announcement: "At a meeting of the vestry of St. Paul's pro-cathedral last night, the Rev. Dr. Frederick W. Taylor was requested to withdraw from the meeting for a time, and Hon. Charles E. Hay was called to the chair. Then a resolution was passed by unanimous vote, that the Easter offering should be devoted to the personal use of the rector. This was a very happy recognition on the part of the vestry of the valuable services which Dr. Taylor has rendered the parish." Archdeacon Taylor became rector of St. Paul's, Sept. 1, 1886, so that this is his 13th Lent and Easter in the parish. The parish is free from debt. The Old Ladies' Society (we have yet to hear of another society of that name in the Church) have just voted to erect a substantial steel picket fence around the church property, which is situated in the heart of the city, only one block from the public square.

Maryland

William Paret, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop has licensed Dr. Robert Atkinson as lay-reader for the Johns Hopkins Orphan Asylum, for colored children, at Remington ave. and 31st st.

Large Confirmation Classes

Bishop Paret visited the church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, D. D., rector, on March 21st, and administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of 66 persons. Of the whole class, only 28 had been from infancy members of the Church; 21 were from the Methodists, 5 from the Presbyterians, 1 from the Reformed, 5 from the Roman Church, 3 from the Lutherans, and 3 from the Baptists; 32 members of the class were adults, among them a large proportion of men. The Bishop made an address to the candidates, after which he preached a strong sermon on Sunday observance. On Sunday, March 26th, the Bishop confirmed a class of 41 persons in the morning at Emmanuel church, the Rev. J. Houston Eccleston, D. D., rector; in the evening, 19, at the church of the Messiah, the Rev. Peregrine Wroth, rector. The Bishop also recently confirmed 12 at Ascension church, 28 at St. Barnabas', 27 at Christ, 17 at St. John the Baptist, and 14 at St. James' First African (colored).

Accident to the Rev. Dr. Brand

The Rev. William O. Brand, rector of St. Mary's church, Emmerton, Harford Co., whose portrait appeared recently on our cover page, has met with an unfortunate accident. He was visiting at the home of Miss Elizabeth Oliver, 1200 Cathedral st., Baltimore, an intimate friend, and fell down an elevator shaft from the first floor to the cellar, breaking one of his legs. He is reported to be improving. Dr. Brand is 84 years old, has been rector of St. Mary's church for over 50 years, and is the oldest clergyman in active work in the diocese.

St. Michael and All Angels', Baltimore

On Sunday, March 12th, the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, D. D., celebrated the 7th anniversary of his rectorship at this church. Before beginning his sermon, he read a pastoral letter to the congregation, and also mentioned the appeal of the vestry for $5,000 at Easter, to be used toward the liquidation of the debt, and announced that already he had received 16 responses, pledging the sum of $435. The statistics presented in the letter showed that during the past seven years there had been 248 Baptisms, 354 Confirmations, 70 marriages, and 81 burials. There are now 616 families connected with the parish. The communicants have increased from 471 to 1,110. The Sunday school numbers 418 children and 45 officers and teachers. The contributions of members of the church amounted to over $93,000. The work of the parish has grown rapidly. When the Rev. Mr. Smith took charge, one clergyman was sufficient; now three find ample work to do. Besides the Rev. Messrs. Clarence D. Frankel and Robert S. W. Wood, there are two lay-readers, and some 200 or more voluntary workers in the parish. The result is that the parish is an exceedingly live and active one. About two years ago the church established a mission near Hampden, which has an average attendance of 35 children in the Sunday school, and two services are maintained every Sunday.

Editorials and Contributions

The Ebb of Some Tides

A JEWISH preacher of Chicago recently declined a call to New York at a large advance of salary. He now repents him of his decision, and has uttered a wail loud and tearful over the non-attendance of his co-religionists at his lectures. He regards this as an insult to him, and denounces it as "a tendency toward American humbuggery." One of the daily papers says:

Dr. — has brought the high distinction of rare scholarship to the pulpit of Sinai Temple. He has impressed his strong and original personality upon the social, literary, and political life of Chicago. His name has given weight to civic movements for good government, and his voice has been lifted with rare eloquence and beauty, for every cause that was calculated to elevate the standards of citizenship, or to promote culture or stimulate learning. He is known in all the land as a deep student of current problems and a broad thinker.

There is a strong flavor of "American humbuggery" in this exaggerated praise which has been the continual refrain of the press for some years past. Two lessons may be drawn from this affair, and one is that a preacher who is the pet of the press, cannot necessarily and for that reason fill the pews, and is not the success he seems to be. The papers parade by preference whatever in religion may be sensational, grotesque, or "liberal," meaning, by that term, destructive. One of our rectors was requested by a reporter to furnish abstracts of his sermons, provided they were not too religious, and did pitch into old ideas! The other lesson is that the position which a preacher may take in the community, however it may flatter the pride of his denomination, does not fill the pews, nor does it assure him against the bitterness of a contrast between civic notoriety and the indifference of his parishioners, a fact which seems to hold true whether the sermonizing voice possess "rare eloquence" or only the strident tones of the pulpit mountebank. Dr. — says: "Your pulpit was never of the opera bouffe type; if your pulpit was of national reputation, you never recognized what you owed the men who filled it."

IN the same paper which chronicles the Rabbi's wail, we hear another from a Methodist minister who said:

The Methodist Church was face to face with a crisis, and during the twentieth century would undergo startling changes. Of course the time limit on pastorates would be removed, and the presiding eldership would be abolished, but these were trifles. Other changes were impending which threatened the very life of the Church. It might just as well be confessed that the Church was not now winning men as it had done in the past, that it was failing to meet the spirit of the age; that the preachers were no longer revered for the sake of their office, and that multitudes of its members were dropping out and identifying themselves with literary societies or with Christian Science.

He added that he knew that his particular church contained mighty little vital Christianity, that even after he got men converted it was hard to get them into the Church, and that if he got them in, it was hard to keep them from falling out. If they ever moved away it would take a whole detective agency to watch one of them, and get him to join a church in the place to which he went. The consequence was that in the Methodist churches in seven cities of over 500,000 inhabitants in this country last year, there was a net gain of only 635 members, and that in the Methodist churches of all the cities in the country last year there was a net gain of only one-half of one per cent.

These depressing views of the current situation seem to be accepted as more or less justified by the facts, and the more is the pity. But the most significant feature of this confession is that the other preachers could not divine the cause of the decline, at least none of them were in agreement. One said the "liberals" had "captured the field by proving that there was no need for any Church." Another thought "the doctrine of hell ought to be preached more." Another said "a revolution is in progress, and it is towards Christ." Another charged that the Methodists were "shedding no light on the social and economic problems of the day." Another said "the mistake was that the doctrine of the Holy Spirit was not preached." It was also contended that some new inspiration and enthusiasm must be found. The time had come "when it is the mission of every man to rediscover Christianity." "In the twentieth century there will be a tremendous reassertion of the essentials of Christianity." In all which there is much food for thought.

Christian Science

TWO utterances are before us from clergymen of the Church on the subject of "Christian Science," so-called. This system is rapidly assuming startling proportions. There are said to be four hundred regular societies of its adherents in the United States and Canada, including a membership of two hundred and fifty thousand people, and five thousand teachers and healers. No doubt a large proportion of these people have been attracted by the claim that through the principles of this sect, diseases are healed. Much, also, is said of its effects upon character. Dr. Newton, one of the clergymen referred to, speaks of "the singularly gracious influence that has been exerted, through this movement, upon the character of multitudes of men and women. Doubt has given way to faith; fear, to quietness and confidence; irritability and lack of self-control, to a sunny serenity of spirit; weak wills have been braced into strengthfulness; evil habits, of long duration, have been mastered; the sense of God has come as an unspeakable benediction into lives which had been 'without God in the world.'" We leave this sweeping claim without criticism for a moment. With the better class of minds who have been drawn into this movement, it is probable that the reaction against the crass materialism which in these days constitutes such a tremendous force in life and thought, has been a strong motive. The hungry soul, striving for something to satisfy its deepest needs, eagerly grasps at that which substitutes spirit for matter, even to the extent of denying the existence of the material altogether.

DR. NEWTON is bold enough to call "Christian Science" "the youngest child of Christianity." Subsequently, he shows himself fully conscious that it has its antecedents in the misty theosophies of the East, and in the extreme philosophic idealism of some modern teachers. He does not betray in this pamphlet any knowledge of Gnosticism, that most instructive analogue of Christian Science in the early days of the Church; and, so far from being a "child of Christianity," its most deadly foe, the worse because it assumed the name of Christian, and confused the minds of untutored men. Gnosticism took the ideas of the Eastern theosophists as its starting point, and endeavored to interpret Christ and Christianity by that "higher" light. It produced a combination wonderfully similar to this modern development. The ancient movement was not so popular as this of more recent date, inasmuch as it did not concern itself so much with physical disease and infirmity, but rather with the profounder mystery of sin. Without denying the existence of matter, it made matter the essence of evil, and asserted that the spirit of man was properly independent of matter, and consequently of the body, which is material. Among many earnest souls, Gnosticism, inducing a struggle to make this independence real, led to an ascetic standard of morality, in which those effects were seen which Dr. Newton admires in Christian Science—quietness, self-control, confidence, greater strength of will, and overcoming of evil habits. Stoicism already, through somewhat similar ideas, had produced similar results. The constancy of a stoic has become proverbial.

NOTWITHSTANDING his glowing eulogy of the type of character which Christian Science has evolved, Dr. Newton gives us in an appendix, another side. He takes note of the want of any recognition of the discipline of pain and sorrow. This discipline, with them, "has no place in that schooling of character which life is ordained to carry on." Yet Jesus was the "Man of Sorrows." He is constrained to say that "such a view of life tends to drop out of recognition the value of those heroic qualities which suffering, borne bravely, has always developed, and which man has always accounted his noblest crown of honor." He thinks this may be overcome, but how can it, if logic has its way? There can be no room for the idea of patient submission and cheerful endurance of pain, if the pain does not exist, and the patient is only, for the time, the prey of an imagination which he must repudiate and trample upon. He has noticed, also, a certain conceit, "a most ungracious" thing, an assumption of superiority. But this is airily dismissed as "incidental to all new illuminations of the soul." It has been incidental, doubtless, to the illuminations of philosophy at all times, but we deny that it is any fruit of the Gospel, or that it has shown itself as a result of the illumination of the Holy Ghost. The Gospel set itself to destroy this enemy from first to last. On the other hand, it seems a perfectly legitimate fruit of a teaching which says "you are what God is," "you are by nature a part of God." The poet Heine saw this when, in his later days, he escaped from the trammels of a proud philosophy which, as he says, had taught him that he was a god.

ANOTHER indictment which this friend of Christian Science brings against it, is the absence of sympathy for the sick and suffering. These people, according to him, "shut themselves up in a comfortable ignoring of the pains and aches around them, and go on their way as if there were no 'ills that flesh is heir to'." He tries to condone this by contrasting it with the ill-bred and inconsiderate attempts at sympathy which many well-intentioned people indulge in to the aggravation, rather than the alleviation, of suffering. But he cannot escape the logic of the system by hoping that his friends will fall back upon the ancient ways faithfully pursued always by those whose souls have been formed in the old paths of Christian discipline. He does not see what the pronounced Christian Scientist sees clearly, that to show by word or touch, or glance of the eye, "solicitude for the comfort of the invalid," is to sacrifice the ruling principle, for it is to humor the unreal imagination, and tacitly to acknowledge the "reality" or the "actuality"—it is all one—of that which is declared to have no existence.

WE deny, as Christians, the thesis upon which Dr. Newton expends much futile labor, that the healing of physical disease was meant by our Lord to occupy a leading place in His religion. On the other hand, we assert that the discipline of pain, humility and not conceit, sympathy and not indifference, are root principles of that religion. The miracles of mercy have their outcome, not in a constant gift of healing by magnetism, or any other natural force, or even miraculous powers to be possessed perpetually by Christian believers, but in the works of mercy which the Church ever inculcated, and which as soon as possible she embodied in permanent institutions. The legislation of Justinian shows how abundant these systematized works of mercy were which the Church understood to be a part of her regular mission. Already there were houses for strangers, houses for the sick, houses for widows, orphanages, houses for the rearing of foundlings or waifs, houses for the aged. The blind and beggars were cared for, and the insane were received into the monasteries. It is a strange thing that Dr. Newton should not see in this wealth of Christian institutions the true sequence of our Lord's works of mercy, rather than in the systematic exercise of that kind of power over disease, which "for a sign" was manifested by Him, and now and then by His followers, in the first age and afterwards.

WE need no other witness than Dr. Newton to prove that the "theology" of the Christian Scientists is Pantheism. It denies the personality of God. This he regards as "grave." Grave is a mild word. This is utterly destructive of religion in any sense of the word that has the least utility. Religion is based upon a relation with a person. If there is no personal God, there can be no worship, no prayer, no love, no faith. The only thing which remains is a stirring of the religious instincts and emotions, as an end in and for itself. This is what Dr. Newton seems to mean by "religion." In view of this, which is the fundamental idea of this system, can it be otherwise than amazing that a Christian priest should dare to say that in these teachings of Christian Science, now "systematized into a philosophy and formulated into a theology, and, in their practical application, vitalized into a religion," there is "nothing which is in conflict with the inner heart of Christian orthodoxy"?

WE very gladly turn to the saner utterances of Dr. William R. Huntington. First, he indicates this system of Pantheism, and shows that it is a charge which cannot be denied or evaded. The consequences are then pointed out: "By turning God into a 'principle' our conception of what it means to be spiritually minded becomes hopelessly vague, and people are deluded into thinking that they are taking an interest in things spiritual when they are merely playing in a feeble way with metaphysics. No spirituality without personality. No righteousness, that is to say, without a righteous person, no love without a loving person, no compassion without a merciful person, is a good formula of protection against error under this head." Dr. Huntington next takes up the Christian Science idea of Christ, which Dr. Newton appears to accept, and has no difficulty in showing that it was no such "idea" in which St. Paul believed or for which martyrs died. On the third head, namely, the nature of sin, Dr. Huntington contents himself with showing that the definition which he quotes is meaningless. We could wish he had gone on to shew the evil results which are liable to proceed from a teaching that sin is only a false idea connected with non-existent matter. Is it not a logical result of this that our actions, at least so far as the material body is concerned in them, have no moral character? We alluded above to an ascetic Gnosticism which has a parallel in certain developments of character which Dr. Newton admires. But there was another kind of Gnostics who considered that the doings of the body could not taint the soul. If the body is non-existent, this position is rendered stronger.

THE best that can be said of Christian Science is: first, that it has made some contribution to therapeutics, by emphasizing in a high degree the control of the soul over the body. This may, no doubt, affect the practice of medicine. In fact, with hypnotism and other such phenomena, it has done so already. But this will not lead the physician to lay aside his other methods of ministering to disease. This, as a later contribution of science, will simply take its place with previous discoveries, and be added to the sum total of those remedies which the modern physician has at his command. Secondly, this system, we are convinced, owes much of its attractiveness to many minds to a revolt against materialism in thought, and still more in practical life, which leads them to grasp at anything which professes to be spiritual. The same thing is exhibited in Theosophy, which is also gaining numerous adherents. These movements warn the Church of the direction in which her work is most needed. They constitute a call to hold up before the longing soul the glory and the beauty of the Incarnation. The Church is called upon in every age to bring forth from her treasures things both new and old to meet the needs of those to whom her Lord has sent her to minister. The truths of the Catholic religion are alone satisfying, but men may often miss their meaning for want of adequate instruction. Everything is allowed to become too external, the inner and spiritual significance escapes those who hear only conventional phrases to which they have been accustomed to attach imperfect and shallow meanings. They have not discovered the hid treasure. Thus they become a prey to those who say "Lo here!" or "Lo there!"

Father Austin and His Teachings--XIV.

BY THE RT. REV. DR. McLAREN,

FATHER AUSTIN rebuked one of the choir boys for being late at rehearsals. Perhaps he was unduly severe, for if he was usually all softness and sweetness, he could be quite impatient sometimes. The boy accepted the chiding handsomely, but was bold enough to say that he did not think it was enough of a sin to be so severely reprovied. Rebuked in his turn, the clergyman humbly begged the boy's pardon, agreed that tardiness was comparatively a minor fault, and confessed that fretfulness was another. This incident furnished the theme for the next Sunday's sermon, of which some notes were taken by a hearer.

He began by quoting some one who had said there are no little sins, because there is no little God to sin against. He thought the remark more rhetorical than theological, for certainly some sins are less aggravated than others, as the prick of a pin is less dangerous than the thrust of a dagger. Some sins are wholly bad because they are done deliberately with knowledge and foresight; others are less bad, because done in ignorance. The full strength of the will put into a wrong act is something to think of with a shudder, for it slays the soul as to its vital relation to the active favor of God. Sins that terminate the union of the baptized man with God are fitly called "deadly" or "mortal." If the harm that comes from little sins is not so great as in the instance of grave offences, they are certainly displeasing to God, and they do prevent us from securing much that is helpful and uplifting. This is, in itself, a sign that God is not pleased; but they also enfeeble the chiefest of graces, charity, and impair the fervor of the spirit in the discharge of its religious duties. But the worst effect is that they smooth the way to greater faults. He who lets them pass with little notice depresses the sensitiveness of the conscience and adjusts himself to a lower plane of behavior. A diminished power of resistance attends him as increased temptations assail him, and the inevitable finality will be his succumbing to greater sins. We have seen good men go down into depths of shame. Was it St. Augustine who said he had seen saints who stood among men like cedars of Libanus, crash into ruin and lie prone in the filthy dust? No doubt their downward progress began in heedlessness about little sins.

The preacher added that little faults are dangerous because they are little. They do not appear to demand more than trivial notice. They do not strike the conscience with terror. Annoy, they may, as the flies do, but they do not frighten us like lions. Nevertheless, it is foolish to underrate their power of mischief. We should be heroic in avoiding the little sins, and as heroic in cultivating the little virtues which are their opposites; and this is the very best way of overcoming them. We should also practice repentance for them, and pray not only for pardon, but for grace to oppose and uproot them. God is well pleased with those who fight them, and at the same time (the secret of victory!) cultivate the lesser graces and virtues of the Christian life. In that tragic picture of the last times, contained in St.

Matthew's Gospel, it is the servant who has been faithful over a few things who receives the plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant," and the reward, "I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Boston Correspondence

Professor John Fiske read an admirable paper upon the everlasting reality of religion before the Boston clergy, in February. It was an original, analytic study of religion, and was well deserving of the praise bestowed upon it. Like all such attempts outside of revelation to account for the religious belief of the individual, it may at no distant day be supplanted by some other ingenious production. It is, however, a pleasure to find this disciple of Herbert Spencer falling into line with others who admit that the supernatural is a stimulating factor in the evolution of conduct, especially when Herbert Spencer, in his "Data of Ethics" many years ago, regretted the persistent adhesion of men to the supernatural.

I was tempted a short time ago to go to a religious medley to listen to four champions of the various Christian bodies. One minister defended Congregationalism, another, the Baptist body, another, the Episcopalians, and the last speaker, the Methodist. The defence of the Church's position was far too broad. It gave the impression to the impartial observer that the absorptive rather than the adhesive power of the Church's position was very strong. I doubt very much whether we gain anything in a defence of this kind. If this Church has the properties of rubber, so that it may be stretched to suit all tastes, we are only belittling our true character. It is invariably weakening to picture the Church's position as broad. No one really feels convinced by such a representation, and very few are converted through such reasoning. We get the credit for being broad and cold and starchy. The last quality was attributed to the Church in Tremont Temple, when one defender of the Christian denominations reached this climax: The Methodist lifts the sinner out of the gutter, the Baptist washes him, the Presbyterian blues him, the Episcopalian starches him, and then he is ready for heaven!

The Rev. Dr. Lindsay has concluded to remain at St. Paul's church, where he has done effective work for over ten years. The genial doctor is popular, and like a true Virginian, understands the New England type of character, which he pleases in many ways. I think this is the secret of his growing popularity in Boston. He does not simply speak well of our historic relations, but he has the rare gift of saying at the right place just that which has the art of gratifying the conscience of Boston; for Boston has a conscience, and it likes every one to know it.

The Massachusetts Catholic Club is an able and zealous company of Churchmen who are not afraid to make it known that sin exists. Fr. Huntington has been giving effective addresses upon "The Fact of Sin," "The Consequences of Sin," and "The Remedy for Sin." I really don't know what we should do without these plain, helpful addresses upon sin. Some preachers think that we have conquered all sin here, and have graduated from a reference to it. It is really characteristic of the High Churchmen to be talking about sin during Lent, and while another kind of Churchmen are walking arm in arm with Browning and Ibsen and Matthew Arnold.

Emmanuel church, with its new structure, is a great and striking advance for the Episcopal Church in Boston, and no other Christian body except the Romanists could have enlarged its church building, without meeting great obstacles. But Emmanuel church is very prosperous and deserves to be. With Trinity not far away these two parishes show the strength of Episcopacy in this city. The Unitarians and Congregational bodies near by, are losing their quota of strength. They are declining, because there is a reaction towards the Episcopal Church. Emmanuel spreads out its feathers in its old nest, enlarged, beautified, and equipped with every modern convenience. No preacher in Boston ranks higher than Dr. Parks, and though his theology may be unattractive to not a few, yet it is a fact that the greatest theologians are often the poorest preachers, and Dr. Parks cannot claim this latter distinction.

I went to the morgue of the City Hospital a short time ago, and in the little chapel erected to hold services over the dead, I was glad to find the authorities have placed a Book of Common Prayer. This may seem a small matter. It is not. In this weird place, this dismal abode of sorrow, where many broken hearts have met and paid their last homage to the departed, it is a wise tribute to the power of the Prayer Book to place it alongside the Bible.

The serious problem is still before the Church in this city, what to do with the down-town churches, or what to do with parishes in localities where the poor are congregating. There is only one just answer to this question. Parishes that are capable of doing a missionary work in their several localities, but can no longer draw entirely their support from the worshipers, should have their resources supplemented by donations from the City Missionary Board. Any other policy, like the one attempted, of putting another church near the old parish church, is merely to impoverish it or to destroy its existence. Yet this is done without comment, even when the policy seems to be of pulling down one parish to support another. Nothing is more important to the welfare of the Church in this city, than to anchor the old churches where missionary work may be done, and keep out new ventures, when the old, if properly equipped, would be less expensive and less embarrassed with increasing difficulties.

One of the most depressing conditions in Boston is the growth of intemperance among women. The increase of saloons in the poorer districts arouses the indignation of well-meaning citizens, and rejoices the hearts of those who gain by this iniquitous traffic.

"Afternoon teas" of a new kind have established themselves in the homes of the poorest, and mothers will congregate in certain places to gossip over a cup of tea surcharged with whiskey. The consequences of these gatherings have lately demonstrated their evil, in the increase of drunkenness among women. This matter strikes at the home with terrible effect, and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children could many a tale of woe unfold.

Our latest "fad" is war against the sparrow. Poor little creature! he has arrayed against him the powers in authority in Church and in State. Several indignant protests have been made against the wholesale destruction of these birds, which is about to take place in the spring, and the society with the long name is about to criticize the clergy who advocated this warfare.

Every ardent advocate of the proper support of the clergy, should read the report of Mr. Robert Treat Paine, which has just been circulated throughout the diocese. Mr. Paine is a splendid reformer, and never undertakes any cause without first grasping its details, and then proceeding to make every one else feel the importance of the subject. He has certainly championed the cause of the clergy, and the report puts these pertinent questions to every warden: "What has your parish done within two years in the direction of providing (1) ampler salary; (2) a rectory; (3) insurance for the benefit of the minister, or his wife and children?"

At the March meeting of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts, a speaker brought out the interesting information that there were formerly two Sandemanian meeting-houses in Boston. This sect were called "Glasites," and Faraday belonged to them in England.

The Rev. Morton Stone, of Taunton, Mass., has lately written entertainingly upon ecclesiastical garments in his own parish paper, and among other good things, he says: "It is therefore simply willful individualism for a priest when on duty to discard the uniform of his vocation." As sixty-three priests out of two hundred priests in Massachusetts do this, it would seem as if his words were striking for a needed reform in this particular. He makes a mistake in this article, however, in tracing the black gown to the Puritan divines. Did it not come from the monks? BOSTONIAN.

Letters to the Editor

"OUR BOUNDEN DUTY AND SERVICE"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

With regard to the points in dispute between your contributor of March 4th and your correspondent of March 25th, I have nothing whatever to say. But in answer to your correspondent's query: "What is the voice of authority upon the subject?" I should like to say, with all deference, and subject, of course, to correction, that it seems to me that, inferentially at least, behind (or should I say before) all charges of bishops, pastoral letters, rubrics, or canons, comes the voice of the custom of the Primitive Church in the days of the Apostles, as recorded in the Book of Acts of the Apostles—Acts xx: 7—which, taken in connection with Acts ii: 42 and 46, would seem to infer a custom of, at first, daily, and then at least weekly, celebration of the Holy Communion.

This voice of authority (if such your correspondent will admit it to be), so far as I know, and your correspondent, himself being the judge, admits, has never been officially contravened by any command of the Church.

I cannot see that the rubrics referred to, in either the English or American Prayer Book, are germane to the subject at all; a provision for certain contingencies can hardly be fairly construed into evidence of a custom, or a voice of authority, any more than can a "minimum requirement."

And I do not see with your correspondent, when he so triumphantly writes, "Such is the voice of the Church," that he has even proved that the voice of the Church as thus quoted, reaches the question at all.

The statement that "monthly Communion" has been the "universal practice" of the Church of England for 350 years, and of the American Church (I suppose this is meant by "our own") for nearly 200 years, is such astounding news, that I really feel that one who has been in such dense ignorance and darkness, as it seems I have been, with regard to such an important historical fact, should refrain from making any further comment, unless it be that I must have all this time been confounding the practice of "some individual communicants" acting in accordance with their Christian liberty, with the "universal practice" of the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church in England and America.

"DO THIS IN REMEMBRANCE"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Your correspondent of the 25th, objecting to hallowing the Lord's Day with the Lord's Supper, protests and denies with more warmth than wisdom. He asks: "What is the voice of authority on this subject?" and demands the rulings of bishops, rubrics, and canons. As for bishops, the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls (I St. Peter ii: 25) is sufficient. His words are: "Do this, as oft as ye drink it" (I Cor. xi: 25, 26). There are three hundred and sixty-four days in the year when "this" may properly be "done," and to "do this," as your correspondent proposes, once in a hundred and twenty, or even once in thirty times, is certainly not often.

As to its being "done" on Sunday, the universal teaching of the Catholic Church is far higher authority than rubric and canon. Because the Lord Jesus Christ is the same God who gave the Fourth Commandment on Sinai, He both claimed and exercised the right to alter it. How He altered it can be known only through the teaching (oral and written) of that Church He has promised to guide into all truth.

Of the Primitive Church, we read that "on the first day of the week" the disciples "came together to break bread" (Acts xxv: 7). History shows that for the first fifteen hundred years of Christianity, while there were trifling disputes as to the day of the week the Lord's Day should be kept, there was never any question at all about its being kept by the Breaking of Bread. Thus the manner of the Lord's Day observance has, if anything, higher sanction than the time. Even supposing, therefore, that the "general usage" of a small part of the Church for the past two hundred years had been to neglect its plain duty, instead of glorying in such shame, it would be high time to repent and amend our doings.

Every few months we hear the wail that Sunday is being more and more desecrated, and the churches becoming more and more empty. Your correspondent will find food for reflection in the fact that these laments never come from those who teach boldly that the breaking the Fourth Commandment by turning one's back on the Lord's sacramental Presence on His Holy Day is sin. Why is this? Would it not be wiser for cavaliers to follow Gamaliel's advice: "Refrain from these men and let them alone . . . lest haply ye be found even to fight against God" (Acts v: 38, 39)?

ELLIOT WHITE.

Newark, N. J., March 28, 1899

"THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

I should, by your courtesy, like to take exception to some statements in a letter against weekly Communion, in your issue of March 25th. It seems he has lost sight entirely, perhaps unwittingly, of the spirit of the rubric which commands the faithful to make their Communion at least thrice a year. Was it not "for the hardness of our hearts" that this rubric was given to us? Was it not to set before certain lax and backsliding communicants their duty? Such was the case, for the rubric was framed for the class of people who staid away from the Lord's Table, and who neglected the Sacrament of His Body and Blood.

There is most certainly an implied censure in this rubric for those who speak against frequent Communion, and if Mr. Phelps means to say, as his language surely implies, that the ideal Christian may receive but thrice a year, it seems most plain that he cannot use this rubric to support his position, for its intention is to discourage just such a practice.

In the early life of the Church there was no need for such a command to careless people, for Christians in those days were only too glad to accept these blessed opportunities for the worship of their Risen Lord; they were only too anxious for a reception of that Living Bread for which we pray in the prayer of prayers by our Lord's own command.

I beg also, by your courtesy, to take exception to his statement: "Such is the voice of the Church" (referring to infrequent Communion). Does he consider the voice of the Church to be a voice which has spoken in some small corner of the world, and for only the last three centuries? Surely he must be making history, or purposely misstating facts. If he really finds force in the fact that what his forefathers have practiced is good enough for him, I would beg to remind him that his progenitors extended back of the Reformation. He will appreciate the fact that "the old-time religion is good enough for him," but let him remember that the religious views which he quotes as belonging to the last three centuries are extremely new-fashioned.

"LOW SUNDAY"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Why should the octave of Easter Day be termed "Low Sunday," as if any Lord's Day can be called "Low"? Among the Lutherans and Roman Catholics the 1st Sunday after Easter is named Quasimodo, and the Unitas Fratrum, or Moravians, designate it as Quasimodo geniti, being the first word or words of the Epistle for the day, which is identically the same in the former as well as in the Anglican Communion: "Whatsoever is born" (1 St. John v: 4).

SOMETIMES hear an offertory anthem, constructed on a certain musical plan more or less florid, occupying twice as much time as the office needs, which adds nothing at all to devotional impression, conveys not a single idea, lifts no soul to God, moves nobody to charity, confirms nobody's faith. Except in intention it is entirely irreligious. Standing weary through such a trial I have found myself straining my sense half the time, and yet in vain, to find out what words the choir was singing, and the other half wrestling with my spirit to let patience accomplish there her perfect work. We hear a good deal said reproachfully of going to church to "hear preaching." St. Paul, who had some respect for preaching, would tell us that it is certainly no worse than to go there to hear singing. Too much of the forum, the stage, the laboratory, and the magazine, some sermons are. What the singing may be of, is told in the advertisements of Saturday and Sunday newspapers, the printed programmes of city churches, and the flippant comments of handsomely dressed hypocrites to whom the sanctuary is a play house, sermons are a tolerated propriety, and sacraments a make believe.—Bishop Huntington.

Obituary

THOMSON.—At Lakewood, N. J., Friday, March 24, 1899, Helen E., widow of Milton H. Thomson, of Utica, N. Y.

The president and board of managers of the House of the Good Shepherd record with deepest sorrow their great loss in the death of Mrs. Milton H. Thomson, on the Eve of the Annunciation, 1899. Though the death angel came so suddenly, we who have known her cannot doubt, that like blessed Mary of old, she was able to acquiesce perfectly in the will of God concerning her. Our bereavement is indeed overwhelming. For many years our faithful and efficient president, and since her resignation of that office, one of our most active and devoted managers, Mrs. Thomson has labored steadily to promote the best interests of the House of the Good Shepherd. Her kindly heart, which ever went out in truest tenderness to helpless little children, inspired her continual activity in our most worthy charity; while her almost unerring judgment and sterling common sense, rendered her on all occasions an invaluable counsellor. Courage, loyalty, patience, faithfulness—qualities which are such marked characteristics of the chastened and matured Christian character—were hers to an unusual extent. The remembrance of the perfect womanliness and delicate refinement which caused Mrs. Thomson to shrink from publicity and ostentation, deter us from saying all we would like to say of her generous benefactions and constant acts of kindness, in her connection with our home for destitute children, as well as in the Church and in the city which has been for so many years her home.

Her hosts of friends will sadly miss the quiet dignity and charm of her presence, and the rich privilege of her friendship, but while we sorrow that we shall see her face no more in this present world, we rejoice in our membership in the blest communion whose fellowship is unbroken by death, and which reaches up through the courts of Paradise to the Eternal Throne. In that "fellowship divine," we are able to praise God for this noble life, and to re-echo the prayer of the early Christian Church for those who have fallen asleep: "Eternal rest grant unto her, O Lord! and may light perpetual shine upon her!"

Not Dead, but Risen

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY

She wore her life, as violets wear
Their rich, deep coloring and bloom,
In some sequestered, mossy place,
But cannot hide their dainty grace;
Diffusing round them everywhere
The scented breath of their perfume.

She bore the cross we all must bear
To our own Calvarys, alone,
With sweetness, giving joy to all,
With meekness, waiting for His call,
His steadfast earnestness to share,
With patience, like the Master's own.

She took her blessings, day by day,
With reverent heart and humble praise,
As some sweet gift, divinely wrought
With care for her, by love's own thought;
A something she must give away,
Dispense again, in lowly ways.

She gave her ministry of love
Where'er had led her Master's feet,
"A cup of water" to a child,
A hand to Magdalens defiled,
A sympathy, their needs above,
A helpfulness and solace sweet.

Her heart encompassed every land;
For every human need and wrong,
Its quick responsiveness was sure,
Each thought and impulse were so pure;
She gave humanity her hand,
And voiced its suffering in her song.

The measure of her good flows on
To deeper music, sweeter strains,
Her memory lives enshrined apart
In many a warm and loving heart;
The stone that blocked the door is gone,
And but the empty tomb remains.

Life holds its own for future store;
It only bursts its fragile shell
After the cruel thorny crown,
After the burden is laid down;
The angel opens wide the door,
And the soul answers, "All is well."

We see transfigured through our tears,
What the beloved Apostle saw,
We feel what they have felt before—
That love and truth forever more
Have triumphed over death and fears,
That God is King, and love is law.

MR. JOHN M. COOK who died in London on March 3d, was the inventor of the irrepressible and omnipresent Cook's tourist, and the head of the house that for half a century has promoted the peregrinations of inquisitive travelers. Since the days of Peter the Hermit, there has been no man whose incitements have been so potent as Mr. Cook's, to induce folks to leave comfortable homes and wander over the face of Europe. It is interesting to read that he finally came to what must be regarded as a fitting and glorious end. He had lived by the tourist; he finally died by him. A reputation based on a record of extraordinary efficiency in the care and transportation of willful nomads, finally brought him the opportunity of conducting the Emperor of Germany from Berlin to Jerusalem. He took the job, after some haggling, on his own terms, and accomplished it. It was the greatest undertaking of the sort ever handled, and brought Mr. Cook the applause of mankind, and the order of the Golden Crown of Prussia. But it was his crowning achievement. The twenty-seven pashas, with seventy-nine attendants, who unexpectedly hooked on to the imperial party at Constantinople, necessitated feats of provision and management which, though successfully performed, proved too great a strain on powers impaired by age. The Emperor made his trip, changed his plans every day, and got safely back to Berlin. Mr. Cook received his congratulations and sat down to rest. But it seems that his strength did not return. We are told that he never went to his office after the conclusion of the Emperor's tour, and a month ago he formally retired from business. His fame, however, is secure, and the future historian may discuss whether, after all, it wasn't a bigger job to carry the German imperialities and the twenty-seven supplementary pashas to Jerusalem, than to steer 25,000 able-bodied soldiers across the desert to Khartum.—Harper's Weekly.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

A CORRESPONDENT sends another curious epitaph to add to the list recently given in our columns. It is to be found in Illinois:

"Thou'rt gone, my husband, to the better land.
Vainly I look for another in thy place to stand."

A MEMORIAL to Jane Austen is planned, in the form of a window to be placed in Winchester (England) cathedral. The designer is to be Mr. Rempe who has lately done important and successful work of this sort in Lichfield cathedral. American contributions to the fund are being gathered in Boston.

A GENTLEMAN in a rural district drew down upon his head a storm of adverse criticism by marrying a second wife shortly after the demise of his first. Two of those good ladies who look generally upon the surface of things, and who are over-ready with condemnation, were discussing the disgraceful affair. "Why, my dear, there's his poor wife hardly cold in her grave, and he goes and marries another." "Dreadful!" declared the other, "I never heard of such a thing." "I should think not, indeed," went on number one angrily, "marrying wife after wife like that—why the man's a regular polyglot!"—Cornhill Magazine.

FATHER DOHERTY, of the congregation of St. Paul, who has just returned from the Philippines, says, in his second lecture on those islands, that there are twenty different dialects existing there to-day, and, roughly speaking, five hundred variations of these. "It is the duty of every friar who goes into the interior," he says, "to learn at least two dialects. The splitting up of the language into so many dialects may account for the apparent absence of a native literature, but the people are not illiterate. A writer in The Independent asserts that only seventeen per cent. of the population are unable to read and write, which, strange to say, corresponds with the figures in the United States brought out by a recent census."

A CINCINNATI evening paper states that the average consumption of liquor for each man, woman, and child, is 16.42 gallons, of which the average value is about 20 cents. That means that as much is spent on liquor as would pay taxes on a comfortable home for every family of five persons in this broad land.

THE liquor traffic pays a big part of the taxes: 183 millions a year. What would we do without that sum? In the first place, some of that tax is on property, and would be paid if the property were used for making shoes, or anything else. In the second place, the laws requiring a special tax are based on the fact that the liquor traffic makes expense for the State. The experience in Kansas and elsewhere shows that the loss of liquor revenue is followed immediately by a loss of expenses in jails and almshouses. In the third place, this money comes mostly from the people who can ill afford it. It is a good deal like robbing a man of fifty dollars, and claiming credit for giving back five, when caught at it. Gladstone said: "Give me a temperate nation and I will take care of the revenue."

MOST people would not think of taking the Chinese as models to be imitated, except perhaps in the matter of filial reverence. Here is an instance cited by Lord Charles Beresford in his recent visit to this country, which may suggest points in which we could take lessons from the "heathen Chinese." Other travelers have recently borne like testimony to their honesty and fidelity to their engagements. Lord Beresford says:

I went to all the bankers, bankers of all sorts and kinds. I went to the merchants of your country, and to the Russians, and the French, and to all of them, and asked each for his opinion of the Chinese. I got but one reply: "They are scrupulously honest traders. A Chinese merchant's word is as good as his bond. One gentleman who trades in silk said: 'I will tell you my case. I ordered £25,000 worth of silk at six months' order. Between the time of delivery and the time of my order, without any documentary evidence, the Chinese never put his hand to a note, but between the time of the order and the time of delivery there was a tax put on, and there were other circumstances that happened that made the Chinaman lose on his contract, yet he never said one word, but his delivery was to the very day.'"

JOSEPHINE

When winds were blowing and the sky was gray,
And when the moon shone cold before the day,
I woke to pray.

"Dear Lord, good Lord, his life is not half done,
And his best work, thou know'st is but begun.
Thou Christ, his weak heart strengthen,
Do Thou the brave life lengthen."

But on that day
I quite forgot to pray
For little Josephine.

And later, when the sun was bright and fair,
Though chilled with ice and snow the wintry air,
Uprose my prayer.

"Good work he's done, dear Lord, and bravely striven;
Good friends and kindly folk to us has given.

O pity, Christ, the mother,
The sisters and the brother!"

But on that day
I did not really pray
For little Josephine.

Then full of care and work when noon was high,
In gusts the snow clouds blew across the sky,

I prayed, "He must not die!
The soldier boys, the captains out at sea,
The children, too, will miss him wofully."

Thou, Christ, the sick canst strengthen.
 Dear Lord, this dear life lengthen."
 Oh, why that day,
 Did I not also pray
 For little Josephine?

And when, with drifting snow, came down the night,
 And blotting out the sun shut off the light,
 "Lord, brave has been the fight
 For life. O Lord, now let him live.
Te Deums gladly will the people give."
 He'll stay with us yet longer,
 His breath is growing stronger,
 So glad that day;
 Still thought I not to pray
 For little Josephine.

But when at morn again the sun shone red,
 Dear little Josephine upon her bed
 Was lying dead,

Without one touch of her dear father's hand:
 That hour her mother near her might not stand;
 And now I find I'm crying,
 For when the child was dying,
 That very day,
 Alas! I did not pray,
 For little Josephine.

Reminiscences of Bishop Williams

BY AN OLD BERKELIAN

WHEN Bishop Williams, one of the grandest patriarchs and prophets who have ever adorned the Church of God in any age, was called to a rest from his labors, every Berkeley divinity student was in his heart exclaiming to all the others, as well as to the brother bishop upon whom his mantle fell, "Knowest thou that the Lord hath taken away thy master from thy head to-day!" Elijah had not been more devoted to his labor of love in training the young men of Bethel for their duties in the prophetic office, than was the late Bishop of Connecticut to the same (or similar) kind of preparation in behalf of the students of the Berkeley Divinity School. Probably no one ever has been drawn more closely into sympathy with the feelings of Elisha, lonely and sad after the departure of his master, and almost overcome with the sense of his responsibilities as the bearer of his master's mantle of office, than he who, having read the concluding words of the burial service at the grave of the revered Bishop of Connecticut, went forth his successor in office, in toil, in responsibility.

It was impossible that any class of men should know Bishop Williams as the students at Berkeley knew him. To them he was not more really a father in God than a father in his constant, patient, pains-taking interest in, and provision for, their material needs. Only the students themselves knew all that he did for their comfort and happiness. He aided them with that delicate, refined quietness of love which distinguishes the Christian gentleman when providing for his own family. And, indeed, in his mind and heart we were a real part of his family.

I entered the Berkeley Divinity School shortly after the close of the Civil War. Having passed my entire life in the far South, rarely out of sight of fields of cotton or sugar cane, having never been farther North than the southern part of Tennessee; having never seen a person whose home was north of the Ohio river, my first experience in arriving in Middletown was that of a feeling of loneliness and homesickness as despairingly intense as that of a ten-year-old girl off for the first time at a boarding school.

The dear old Bishop seemed to realize my suffering by an intuition born of a gentle, vining, sympathetic heart. Only one other Southerner was in the school, and we were room-mates. Bishop Williams soon made us feel that we were in a home where the influence of his sympathizing nature pervaded the entire institution. Almost every night found the Bishop in our room, and the sound of his cheerful tones and hearty laughter was all that was necessary to call in a room full of students; it was just his genial method of making the "young rebels" (his favorite name for us) feel entirely at home with all the other members of the family. Ah! what Berkelian can ever forget the familiar picture of the dear Bishop wearing dressing gown and slippers, and with the inevitable candle to light his way! And he seemed never happier than when surrounded with students, for he appeared to have become a boy again, and in his heart he really was a young student all over again. And how we loved him! What a faculty he had of being all things to all men, and of condescending to men of low estate! Only those who knew the utter simplicity of his character can appreciate its true greatness.

If all those who knew him as a profound theologian, eloquent orator, majestic power in the House of Bishops, and able administrator of his diocese, could also have known the greatness of his unconsciousness of his greatness! To fully realize this, one needs only to see the Bishop as being one of the many young students who gathered round him in the room to which he jokingly gave the name, "The nest of secession!"

Bishop Williams, as is well known, had an almost exhaustless fund of humor; and his humor sometimes had a practical point to serve. Every student who then roomed on our floor (among them one of the present bishops of Ohio) will remember the occasion on which each one of us, on arriving in our rooms one morning after chapel service, found a pair of common felt slippers! How the Bishop managed to get the slippers in the rooms without our knowledge, we never discovered, but there was afterwards less noise on that floor!

His love of humor once was the indirect means of leading me into a mistake which gave the Bishop much subsequent amusement. He had appointed me as lay-reader for one of the suburban villages, and took much pains in giving me necessary instruction about the duties which were entirely new in my experience. He was standing in the door-way of the Washington street entrance of our building as I started on my first missionary journey. He knew that I had served in the Southern army, and also that during the war (just ended) there was in the South an ecclesiastical organization called "The Protestant Episcopal Church in the Confederate States of America." As I was about to drive off, he came to me and said: "Now, you young rebel, don't make any blunder when you come to the prayer for the President; remember, you are now in Connecticut."

During my drive out to the village, my mind became impressed with the reflection that a misuse of that prayer would be rather bad. This so completely took possession of me, that I was anxious and unhappy during all the preceding parts of the service; and the nearer I came to the prayer above-mentioned, the more I nerved myself to read it as it was written. The result was that I paralyzed that loyal congregation by praying for a blessing upon "Thy servant, the President of the Confederate States, and all others in authority!" No harm was done, save to my own feelings; and on my return to Middletown I made haste to go to the Bishop to unburden my mortified feelings. He laughed the laugh of the keenest amusement, and said: "Never mind, don't worry about it, they are all Democrats out there."

One Fourth of July, as I was returning from breakfast, I was surprised to see an immense American flag waving from the main street window of our room. If all the flags on that block had been sewed together, their combined size would not have been nearly so great as that of the flag that floated from my bedchamber window, reaching nearly, or quite, to the library on the floor underneath our room. I hurried upstairs to try to discover what had given my roommate such a sudden impulse of loyalty. Entering the room, I found it apparently unoccupied, although the door was wide open. I stood there in the middle of the room for a moment, lost in perplexity, and then left the room on a tour of inquiry; as I passed through the door I heard a little laugh, and looking through the crack of the open door, was rewarded by the sight of dear Bishop Williams, with all the merriment of a school boy, looking at me with his laughing eyes and thoroughly amused countenance! Then he came out from his hiding place, and told me how he had watched for his opportunity to place the flag in the window, and actually had stood behind the door for nearly an hour to note my surprised entrance.

The Bishop once gave me a demonstration of his capacity for sudden and rapid action. An old Southern friend made us a visit, and I gave him my bed, and accepted the Bishop's kind offer to share his bed that night. In those days it was as hard for me to wake early in the morning as it now is to do anything else. So I had a small alarm clock set to explode (that describes its tone) at 6 o'clock. I placed this alarming mechanism on a marble-slab table at the head of the Bishop's bed, and thus very near his own head. In the winter season six o'clock comes in darkness. I was in bed when the Bishop came in with his candle, and too nearly asleep to think of explaining the presence and purpose, and probable disturbance, of the alarm clock. The next thing of which I was (very!) distinctly conscious, was a combination of sounds—the clanging whirr of the alarm, the bouncing out of bed of the Bishop, an opening of the window, and the crash of broken machinery in the quadrangle below, and a voice, "What is it?" He lighted the candle, and it is simply impossible to describe the mingled look of dazed astonishment and righteous resentment on the Bishop's face! My explanation and apologies proved satisfactory, and we lay there laughing over the event till it was time for us to prepare for chapel service. Before noon a new alarm clock was sent to my room, with a request that I keep it there. It seems that the awful whirr of the alarm on the marble slab roused the Bishop from a sound sleep, and his first thought was to get it out of the window; which he did.

No one could be long in his company without discovering that Bishop Williams was one of the wittiest of men; that his wit was of the quick-as-a-flash kind; seldom satirical, never sarcastic, always under the control of his characteristic gentleness. It was my privilege to go often with him on his visitations to parishes within driving distance of Middletown, and if my memory were retent-ive of all his puns and witty sayings, I could fill a book with them. One Sunday morning we were journeying to Middle Haddam, and as we were passing through Portland (of brown-stone fame), our progress was stopped by a lot of men who were standing in the road violently quarreling. I remarked that it was strange to find people behaving that way so early Sunday morning. The Bishop replied, as he forced the horse past the angry crowd, "Not a bit strange, this is quarry-le-some place; and they always begin work early."

I never saw the Bishop laugh more heartily than when one of the students (now a bishop) told him of how a number of students were entertained by being the witnesses of a young woman's delight on the arrival of her new spring bonnet!

Bishop Williams was the equal of President Lincoln in his readiness to tell an anecdote to fit the present occasion. It is related of him that he once was accosted by a Congregational clergyman, on the subject of the Church's teaching about Apostolical Succession. This clergyman asked the Bishop if he did not think that God's blessing upon a man's work was all that was necessary to prove that he was divinely set apart as a minister of God's Church? If the man's pastorate accomplished good results, was not that enough to verify his claims of being a regularly ordained minister of the Gospel, as being a sign that God recognized him as such? The Bishop gave his reply by this story: A selfish, worldly, careless young woman was riding a spirited horse along a narrow path through a forest. Suddenly a small (and not always welcome) animal ran across the path in front of the horse, causing him to run away madly; the young woman was seriously hurt and placed in jeopardy of her life. On her bed of sickness she resolved that if her life were spared she would lead a Christian life; which she did from the moment of her restoration to health. "Now," said the Bishop, "that small animal was the blessed means of the girl's true conversion. Shall we argue the point whether that proved the animal to be a regularly ordained minister of the Gospel?" Verbum sap, etc.

I presume every Berkelian of the late classes has heard of the very pointed and pithy reply the Bishop is said to have given a man who came to him for information of what it would be necessary for him to believe in order to become a communicant of the Church. The Bishop repeated the Creed, explaining the several Articles of the Faith as he went along. The man, in the impulsiveness of hopeless disappointment, jumped to his feet and exclaimed: "I'll be damned if I can believe all that." Quick as lightning came the reply: "You will be damned if you don't believe it!"

And now he has gone from us. Only his form is gone. The impress of his work and his character is permanently fixed upon the entire American Church. Throughout this broad land, from the California coast to the Gulf of Mexico, from the North-eastern shores of the Atlantic ocean to the South-western boundary lines of ocean and gulf, the sons of that prophet—bishops, priests, and deacons, are performing the duties and exercising the functions for which his learning and his love prepared them. He will never die out of the revering and grateful hearts of Berkeley divinity students.

The last time I saw the Bishop was in 1875, a quarter century ago. But to me, as to every alumnus of the institution which he founded, and to which he gave the services of his life, the memory of Bishop Williams will be always fresh. To each one of us he will always be bishop, father, friend, elder brother. None of us will ever attain the high position of usefulness to which his love, his work, his prayers in our behalf, would gladly elevate us; perhaps some of us have far fallen below the mark of his hopes of our consecration to the Master to whom he sought to lead us. Yet all will love him. And it is the comfort of our love to feel whatever, whoever, has been touched by the power of his example as being steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, will in some degree, at least, demonstrate that "his labor was not in vain in the Lord."

Letters of Robert Browning and Elizabeth Barrett, 1845-1846. With portraits and facsimiles. In two volumes. New York: Harper & Bros.

More than four generations ago, there was said of a certain distinguished man and the devoted wife whose love followed him even to the scaffold: "One of the most charming sights in the world is this of a married pair, united by a true affection, based on congeniality of sentiment and principle"—such a union was that of Elizabeth Barrett and Robert Browning. The records of their life and love are contained in the two volumes of letters now given to the world by their son. That the latter has done well to reveal to the world what their own reticence withheld in life, many will question. But to Mr. Barrett Browning himself may be left the settlement of that score. Readers may better spend their time in making use of the opportunity here offered, of reading what is equivalent to an old-fashioned novel of the letter-writing sort, only infinitely more thrilling because it is all true. This account of a love between two poets of such high rank, is unique in the annals of literature. Of how the invalid poet, Elizabeth Barrett, feared to accept the great gift that came to her; of how the whole world changed to her because of that gift, is known from the impassioned Portuguese Sonnets which have been accepted as her real feeling, slightly disguised. In the first letter, dated Jan. 10, 1845, Browning tells Miss Barrett, with the most delightful directness imaginable, how he loves her verses with all his heart, and loves her, too, for writing such "great, living poetry," which "took root and grew" in him. Miss Barrett promptly "thanks dear Mr. Browning" for the pleasure given her by his letter of sympathy—"the quintessence of sympathy"—she calls it, coming from such a poet. It is amusing to reflect, in reading this letter, that, at this time, it is likely that Miss Barrett herself was almost the only one in Europe, with the possible exception of Mr. Hugh Boyd, who did not consider her the greater poet. At the time of their marriage, Mr. Browning was referred to as "the poet who had married Miss Barrett." The unusual circumstance of this marriage, the world has long known. It took place in Marylebone church, on Sept. 12, 1846, without the knowledge of Miss Barrett's family. This was unfortunately rendered necessary by the peculiar hostility shown by Mr. Barrett to marriage, as an institution for other people. One week later Mr. and Mrs. Browning departed for Italy. There is no record here of those years of perfect union—the life and work together in Italy; for after marriage husband and wife were never separated. The last letter is dated Sept. 19, 1846—not two years after the first, and is mainly devoted to the settlement of details relating to their journey. It shows strong agitation and a woman's fear, tempered with the trust of a loving heart. "By this time to-morrow," writes Mrs. Browning, "I shall have you only to love me. You only! As if one said God only! And we shall have Him beside, I pray of Him!" American readers will feel a pang of unavoidable regret at the revelation of Mrs. Browning's lack of faith in the ability of their countrymen, though no one can resent an opinion given in confidence to a fellow-poet, and certainly not intended by one of the kindest and gentlest of women to reach the ears of those whom such utterance would hurt. She says of Poe: "There is poetry in the man though now and then, seen between the great gaps of bathos. . . . The 'Raven' made me laugh, though with something in it which accounts for the hold it took upon people, such as Mr. N. P. Willis and his peers." Referring to Lowell's kindness in writing to her, she comments upon him as "poetical, if not a poet," and generalizes upon the state of poetry in America, most poets being, she avers, "shadows of the true, as flat as a shadow, as colorless as a shadow, as lifeless, and as transitory." But that will not spoil for any honest American reader this valuable record of the life and love of two poets, for whose honest work and noble lives he must cherish affection and reverence.

Military Europe. By Nelson A. Miles. With fifty-six illustrations. New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. Price, $1.50.

This is a narrative of personal observation and experience by the major-general commanding United States armies during the Greco-Turkish war in 1897. It is a handsome volume, the illustrations being very numerous and excellent. Gen. Miles had an opportunity to witness the great Jubilee ceremonies in London, of which he gives a fine description in the chapter entitled, "The Military and Naval Glory of England." This is especially noteworthy as given by an eye witness so expert and capable, who from his position enjoyed unusual opportunities for observation. Gen. Miles was also fortunate in being able to witness the autumn manœuvres in Russia, Germany, and France. He received everywhere such courtesies as were due to his rank, and made such use of his fine opportunities as will doubtless be of value to our own military progress, as well as enabling him to make a very interesting book.

Aspirations of the Devout Soul Expressed in the Psalter. With Preface by the Rev. H. C. Pollock, Canon of Rochester. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 164. Price, $1.

The purpose of this book is to arrange the Psalms topically, grouping scattered passages in such a way as to illuminate the great themes with which the Psalter deals. The author has arranged them under thirty heads which include the whole wide range of devotion. This plan is well executed, and has in itself certain merits. Yet we cannot but think that the Psalms are more useful for devotional purposes in the form in which they were originally given to the world. Interesting as it is to see how their separate passages group themselves about important subjects, yet they have a disjointed appearance when so treated, which is not altogether agreeable. The book is a model of typographical excellence.

The Book of the Ocean. By Ernest Ingersoll. Illustrated. New York: The Century Company. Price, $1.50.

This is one of the holiday books which was overlooked in our notices at that time, but its interest is as great at one time as another. The mystery of the sea and the struggles of man in mastering it, never lose their interest. We have in this book descriptions of the ocean in all of its divisions and conditions; information about ships and navigation; narratives of great voyages and explorations; Arctic adventures; accounts of war ships and naval battles, of merchant vessels, and pirates and yachts, and dangers of the deep, and fishing, and sea plants, and other animal life of the sea. There is an index of illustrations and a general index. It is an attractive and valuable book.

Puerto Rico and Its Resources. By Frederick A. Ober. With Maps and Illustrations. New York: D. Appleton & Co. Price, $1.50.

What with war correspondents and magazine articles, and books galore, the reading appetite has been pretty much cloyed, as far as anything about "our new possessions" is concerned. Here is, however, a very good and useful book, written by a well-known writer, Frederick Ober, who is quite familiar with his subject. The book is a compilation of everything one wants to know about the island—its climate, its resources, its manners and customs, its future. There is not much about its religion, but as Father Sherman says it has none, not much could be said. December, January, and February would seem to be delightful months there, and some smart Yankee will, beyond a doubt, be soon putting up hotels, and crowds will be flocking there to avoid the grippe. There is no literary merit in the book, but it had no such aim. It is to instruct, not to entertain.

The Wire Cutters. By M. E. M. Davis. New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.50.

The name "Wire Cutters" gives little, in fact, no clue, to the thrilling contents of this well-written novel. The plot is weird and sad, dealing with strange physiological possibilities, and it violates the traditional termination of most stories of life, which usually mete out punishment to the bad, and reward to the virtuous. In this respect, however, it is more like the sad reality of things as they are. The characters in this clever novel seem actual people, and the scenes depicted are well drawn and colored; in it you have glimpses of Southern life, a lurid outlook over some incidents in the War of the Rebellion, and most truthful delineations of life in Texas. Begin the book, and you will have no rest until you finish it.

The Golfer's Alphabet. Illustrations by A. B. Frost. Rhymes by W. G. Van T. Sutphen. New York: Harper & Bros. Price, $1.50.

The time is at hand for the golfer to fare afield, and if they would see themselves as others see them, and have a little fun before they go out to make fun for others, they should get this comical book with its droll verses and its funny sketches. One does not need, indeed, to be a golfer in order to enjoy the book. Even the children will laugh over it, if they do not cry for it.

Wherein? Malachi's Message to the Men of To-day. By the Rev. J. Campbell Morgan. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 75 cents.

These studies in the Book of Malachi were delivered in the Moody institute first of all. There are some excellent points in them. One of them deserves special attention, that in which the writer deals at length with the thought why God's glory should be uppermost in our thoughts, and his conclusions are very satisfactory. There are some other thoughts which the reader of the book will find useful.

Periodicals

The Nineteenth Century for March (The Leonard Scott Pub. Co.) is giving the other side of the Church controversy. Last month two leading High Churchmen presented their views, and now the Rev. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, a prominent Nonconformist, contributes a trenchant article on "The Nation and the Ritualists," and the well-known Liberal, Mr. R. Bosworth Smith, writes on "The Crisis in the Church." The former assails the fact of the "establishment" of the Church, and the latter has much to say against auricular confession. Prince Kropotkin has a valuable paper on "Recent Science." Another article, "The Menelik Myth," by the Vicomte de Poncius, is very instructive, as it tells us much at first hand concerning Abyssinia and its ruler.

So much interest attaches even to the name of the "Oregon" since her achievements at the time of the Spanish-American War, that the well-written description of the testing of the great vessel, given by the president of the Trial Board, in Harper's Monthly for April, will attract many readers. It is really a fascinating account, and the pictures of the ship are very beautiful. Arthur Symons, in his "Aspects of Rome," analyzes keenly the attractiveness of the Eternal City, and compares its effect upon the traveler with that of London and Paris. His way of handling the subject is fresh and readable. He makes interesting distinction, also, as to the beauty of the women of Rome and those of Venice and Naples. Russell Sturgis continues his paper on "The Equipment of the Modern City House."

The first chapter of a new serial by Amelia E. Barr is the leading feature of the April St. Nicholas. It is a story for girls, written in Mrs. Barr's most attractive manner, and bearing the pleasant and suggestive title, "Trinity Bells." The scene is laid in New York, and when the tale opens, "a young man named Napoleon Bonaparte is making the French behave themselves." "'Prince' in the Battle of Santiago" and "The True Story of the 'Christobal Colon'" are stories of a dog and cat who were in the war. "Lost in Russia" is a good story of a boy's adventures while canoeing on the German-Russian border, by Poulney Bigelow. The popular serials of Mr. Henty, Miss Carolyn Wells, and Mr. House are continued, and as usual the magazine abounds in pictures and verse.

Scribner's Magazine for April is an Easter number, with a special colored cover, designed by Maxfield Parrish. It contains a poem for Good Friday, by Mrs. Dorr, with decorations by Henry McCarter; "Easter in Town," a poem with a picture by W. Glackens, and a story with a great deal of religious feeling in it, by Henry van Dyke, entitled "A Lover of Music." A literary feature beginning in this number is the first serial story in an American magazine by Quiller-Couch, with the poetic title, "The Ship of Stars." It is a tale full of the delightful fancy and exquisite writing which has made "Q," in the opinion of many, the successor to Stevenson as the master of a certain style. Colonel Roosevelt reaches the climax of his narrative of the Rough Riders, in the description given in this number of the battle of San Juan Hill. William James, the eminent psychologist, writes an essay entitled, "The Gospel of Relaxation"; it is a special plea for a more intelligent use of energy. The eminent artist and critic, John La Farge, writes of "The Limits of the Theatre."

The Century Magazine for April contains an account, by the American director of the School at Athens, of recent American discoveries at Corinth, and an entertaining description of Jerusalem and its environments, by the distinguished French artist, J. James Tissot. Prof. Peckham's article on "Absolute Zero," gives with scientific authority an account of recent inventions for the production of liquid air. A striking literary feature of this number is a new poem, "Cities of Hell," by the young English poet, Stephen Phillips, author of "Christ in Hades." One of Mrs. Wilcox's most serious poems is "Recrimination," a series of three sonnets. Lovers of art will be specially interested in Cole's "Stable Interior," exquisitely engraved after George Moreland, which is the frontispiece of the number; Gilbert Stuart's portrait of Mrs. Rawle, and Julia Weir's "Green Bodice," both engraved on wood by Henry Wolf.

The Fortnightly Review for March contains a notable article on "Vatican and Quirinal," by Wilfrid Ward. It reviews the relations of these two powers with one another during the past thirty years, in a temperate spirit, and with an evident desire to deal justly with the whole subject. It is certain that some modus vivendi must be found, and that now, after much patient endurance on the part of the Vatican, the period of three decades has brought it into a very strong position, while the government of King Humbert is greatly weakened, and is in dire need of the support of the Vatican's adherents to save it from the revolutionists and social anarchists. Few Americans have received more unqualified praise than that accorded our military governor of Santiago de Cuba, by Henry Harrison Lewis in his article, "General Wood at Santiago." This number contains also a delightful appreciation of "Jean Ingelow" and her poetry, by Mabel C. Birchenough.

Opinions of the Press

The Advance

DEATH CONQUERED.—The assurance of immortality which rays forth like a glorious aura from the Person of Christ, is more convincing than any argument, however perfect it might be logically. There was in Him such fullness and power of life that an unprejudiced mind can hardly avoid the conclusion that in Him there was persistence of life which death could not touch. The mind is drawn towards such a conclusion as gravitation draws matter towards its centre of attraction. Peter, on the Day of Pentecost, told his polyglot audience that though by wicked hands Christ had been crucified and slain, God had raised Him up, "having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that He should be holden of it." He submitted to death voluntarily, but the Prince of Life could not long be holden by the power of death. Nay, this Glorious Being, in whom all fullness dwells, will at last drown death, not, as some one has expressed it, "in his own dark lake," but drown death in a sea of life, swallowing him up in complete victory.

The Congregationalist

THE RESURRECTION.—The Resurrection was necessary to complete the revelation of Christian truth. Christ came to teach not merely repentance, forgiveness, and salvation, but also immortality. What need of any other lesson upon the subject! His victory over the grave is the victory, as He declared, of every believer. Because He rose, we shall rise, too. Because He lives forever we shall live forever, and but for His Resurrection the world never would have been convinced of the solemn and glorious truth of immortality, as it now is. The Resurrection, also, was essential to inspire the Church, and in respect to not merely its faith, but also its aggressiveness. It was no longer a conquered and despondent, but a victorious, hopeful body of believers which encircled our Lord. It was not yet as triumphant or as assured of the prevalence of the Gospel among men as it afterwards became. It was not without forewarnings of the terrible trials surely to be undergone, which by scattering the seed of truth throughout the world, should stimulate, instead of hindering, its advance. Yet it was a Church uplifted and encouraged, assured that its faith rested upon solid foundations, knowing as it had not known before in Whom it had believed, and therefore inspired for faith, service, and endurance as it could not have been otherwise. Truly, the Resurrection was the crown of Christ's career.

The Household

Our Church Neighbors

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY

She was only just across the aisle,

Like a June wild rose, as fresh and fair,
The bluest eyes and the sweetest smile,
And the sunny drift of her golden hair:
And free as an angel is from guile.

And I watched her kneel in the Lenten days,
With a shy rose flush on her lifted face,
And I heard her voice in the hymn of praise,
And I marveled still at her winsome grace.
Then she flitted away in the city's ways.

But I never thought I could speak a word,
Till I missed her awhile, and the rector said,
With a manner and voice that were strangely stirred,
"O yes, I know, and the girl is dead,
Is it very strange that you have not heard?"

"She was so alone, and her tender heart
Just pined for love in this atmosphere.
With the selfish souls that were all apart
From the world of sympathy, to her dear:
A Lenten thought, it is well to start."

"And the young man, too? Oh, yes;" a pause—
"You know he was handsome, brave, and strong:
Well, he is not coming here now, because
'We were all so cold,' he is going wrong,
And another circle tempts, and draws.

"He was used to the friendly country ways,
Familiar friends, and their seeming care:
We are to blame that he went astray.
We did not give, and they gave elsewhere,
The tempter found him an easy prey."

"Do you think if Christ were in church again,
He would carelessly pass his neighbor by,
With never a look at his fellow-men,
Nor a clasping hand, nor a beaming eye;
He would go his way to his people there?"

"O recreant Church, in these latter years,
The spirit of Christ is in you yet,
But the love of self, and of Mammon sears,
We are so weak, and we do forget!"
And the rector's eyes were filled with tears.

These needs and sins are upon your head
And mine; with their human wants they came,
We gave them stones, when they asked for bread:
They sought Christ love at our altar flame,
We turned away from His own instead.

CHAPTER VII.

GRIFFITH UNDERHILL, sitting alone in his chamber, after a somewhat lengthy visit from his custodian, was feeling slightly chagrined. The two had had a long polemical argument, and Griffith was surprised to find himself unable to cope with the older man, and miserably worsted before the keen and satirical tongue of his adversary. From musing in this not altogether agreeable strain, he turned with a sigh of relief to the book which lay on the table beside him. Distasteful as its tenor might be, at any rate it was a silent counselor.

Hardly had he begun to read, however, when he heard a step upon the stair. Could his grim visitor, only welcome as a break to the monotony of a solitary day, be coming back? The ascending tread seemed now to be accompanied by the clanking of a short sword, a new accoutrement, but anything was to be expected in the conduct of that strange man.

The door opened, and an erect military-looking figure entered—certainly not his guardian, and yet not altogether a stranger. In fact, it was he who had solately held command at their own fort.

"Well, friend," began the commandant, as Griffith still called him, though he refused that designation by a wave of his hand, "are you ready to leave your somewhat cheerless quarters, and accompany me on an hasty march towards the Queen's Glebe?"

Griffith would a short time ago have answered impulsively. Now he scanned his visitor before replying. The captain, he saw, was no longer dressed in the uniform of the British service, but in a civilian garb, which, nevertheless, wore a military air, and that he carried short arms.

"On what conditions?" he questioned, hesitatingly.

"Conditions? Is the boy mad? The conditions of an open door, a stout pair of legs, and a good horse!"

"Do you mean that I am liberated before—"

"I mean that your protracted and painful incarceration is at an end," replied the ex-officer.

Griffith, in his new joy, ignored the sarcasm. "And you are my liberator?" he asked.

"'Tis as good a name as another for the factor! I would advise you to take advantage of the fact, before your aimable jailer recants his consent, which I have not wrung from him of his own good will. He talked of a better bargain he could make for you, but I told him that freedom now and unconditional would be quite satisfying."

As Griffith made his few preparations for departure, the captain watched him narrowly. It seemed as though he were trying to reconcile the young man's free and gracious bearing with some preconceived opinion.

"And how came you to be my rescuer?" asked Griffith further, his eyes flashing at the recollection of his wrongs.

"I will tell you," responded McKaye dryly, as we go. "We shall have to hasten, young sir, and a horse for you is at the door. Do you take your book?"

"No, no," replied Griffith, abhorrently, "'tis heresy."

The captain smiled.

Griffith grew to understand better the strange story of his capture and detention, as well as the folly of much of his own idle talk, during the horseback tete-a-tetes of the next few days. Doubtless the scheme had originated in the fanatical brain of Enoch Mott, his late jailer, who had so recently returned from the valley with his mind full of rumors of the papistical and royalist sympathies of the Underhill family. Of course he had had abettors. The plan was just such as would appeal to the whimsical mind of Sandy Cairnewas, and though Direk Myndert would be harder to persuade to such a lawless proceeding, he was capable of almost infinite implacability and stubbornness when once engaged in it. These men and Veeder, the smith, had doubtless arranged the details of the journey under escort of the traders.

The captain, indeed, was inclined to be annoyingly nonchalant over the whole affair. It had been a most unreasonable and abortive attempt, and could serve for naught but an indication of a restless and embittered temper. Though what did it matter, he asked, when the patriots were all arming, from Maine to Virginia, if a few royalists should talk more or less indiscreetly? Of what avail could it be thought among rational men, to waste time and custodians on a young man whose only desire was to escape from the scene of conflict? The broad ocean would prove a more effectual barrier than any four walls in Boston town.

One thing more the captain spoke of to the listener who rather winced under his observations, and this was that he himself had pledged his word for Griffith that no steps should be taken for the prosecution of the young man's captors. "I shall have hard work to persuade Mr. Underhill to this," said McKaye, "but I think he will not willingly cause me to forfeit my word, and a bargain is a bargain." To which Griffith as-

IN your experience with White Lead have you ever been troubled with cracked, pulled or alligatored surfaces, or have you ever heard of such trouble in the use of White Lead?

Never; and these conditions were never known until the introduction of zinc white, "combination lead," and ready-mixed paints, the two last composed largely of zinc, barytes, whiting, etc., very little lead, if any.

sented with an almost unlooked-for eagerness.

That was indeed a joyous reunion which was announced by the leaping of the delighted dogs upon two wayfarers at the Glebe one night. Captain McKaye turned away from the sight of so much happiness with a most unselfish reverence for its sacred rights. If any temptation came upon him to amplify Griffith's own account of himself, he was able to stifle it, and if he carried away with him the memory of Evelyn's head, silhouetted against the lighted casement, as the one most cherished reward of all his efforts, there was none the wiser.

And so again Griffith's departure was imminent, but this time Evelyn was buoyed up by a new hope, for had he not spoken of his affection? and had not her guardians gladly given their sanction and blessing?

"I know," said Evelyn, on the last day before the parting, "that our Griffith will come back safe. Such a precious instrument for the Lord's work here will not be cast aside." But her eyes shone with pathetic appeal as she spoke.

"No man is necessary to the Lord's cause," replied Mr. Underhill, sadly, and when He shall work, who shall let it? But I mean not to croak, and we will trust our dear one in the hands of Him who hath called him to His vineyard."

Evelyn raised her head to smile at Griffith standing there, hopeful, radiant, handsome. No tears were in her eyes now, yet her pillow that night could have told a contrary tale.

Mr. Underhill accompanied his son to New York, and left the young man even under the protection of a royal governor who had found the new world somewhat distasteful of late.

And so the good ship had sailed, and after Mr. Underhill's return, the months passed on as before, their dreary monotony only broken by thickening rumors of war. The colonies seemed now shaking as with the muffled roar which precedes some calamitous upheaval. "Watchman, what of the night? what of the night?" was the cry in the hearts of all.

And then at last came tidings of Griffith, good news of his safe arrival, and of his welcome among the friends to whom he had been commended, accompanied by assurances of the good-will of the mother Church toward her daughter in the colonies. There was also a special missive for Evelyn, fastened with a seal of two turtle doves, beginning: "To my own most Deare and Honoured Sweethearte," and signed, "From your always Faithfull and Enamoured Griffithh."

Scattering "Deeds of Kindness"

"THAT'S a Canadian dime. I can't take that," said the post-office clerk. The child looked at the rejected coin, and then at her unstamped letter perplexedly.

"Here's a dime—I'll change with you," said a young woman standing by.

"Oh, thank you!" said the little one gratefully, "I ran all the way to get mamma's mail in in time—and it would have been too late if I had had to go back."

"How thoughtful that was," I said to myself. "How few people, comparatively, would have bothered to do that for a child; and yet how little it costs—and how much it often means."

A little later in the day, it so chanced that

I met again the young woman of whom I have spoken. It was at a restaurant at the noon-hour, in a hurried, crowded throng.

"Dear me, isn't it warm!" sighed a flushed nervous looking girl near me, to her companion.

"Won't you take this fan?" said a sweet voice. I looked, and lo, the speaker was the angel of the stamp! I was very much interested in the young woman by this time, and ensconcing myself comfortably in my corner took more time to my meal than was necessary, in order to observe her. I did not have long to wait to see another proof of her kindness and consideration.

"This is the last order of Indian pudding," said one of the waiters to a pale, poorly dressed girl, as she set down a steaming plate before her neighbor, the young woman whom I was observing.

"Oh, dear!" murmured the girl, disappointedly.

"Won't you take this? I would exactly as soon have something else for dessert." Quick as a flash a dish of pudding was transferred.

"That young woman is worth her weight in gold," I said to myself as I rose to go. "I wonder when I shall ever see her again."

It was months before I did see her again. This time it was at a reception. I wondered whether she would be able to do any kindly act in such a formal gathering, and observed her closely. It was not ten minutes before I saw her talking to a shy, unattractive looking girl in a corner, and introducing her to her friends. Nor was this all I noted. As I left I heard her saying something to the soloist of the afternoon, to which the reply was: "You tell me that you have enjoyed my singing. I want to tell you how much I appreciate your telling me so." The sparkling eyes and animated face attested the appreciation.

These three brief occasions were all upon which I ever saw "the angel of the stamp," and yet how fraught they were with acts of friendliness and consideration! At the end of such a life how manifold must be the good deeds placed to the account.

The giving of ourselves because we can no more help giving than the flower can help unfolding its petals, or the rose exhaling its fragrance, that is Christliness, indeed; it is the most potent of all levers for bringing about that blessed day, "to which the whole creation moves."—Eleanor Root in The Standard.

Tricks of the Tongue

“MAINLY about people” has collected the following curious slips of the tongue:

A fashionable congregation was once startled by hearing the reverend gentleman announce that they were about to sing “Hymn No. 358—From Iceland’s Greasy Mountains.” After this they listened with equanimity, when they were reminded that they should not covet their neighbor’s house, “nor his ’oss, nor his axe.” Preaching before a varsity congregation on the queen’s diamond jubilee, he remarked, impressively: “Now, my brethren, you have a queer dean, a very queer dean, a very queer dean indeed.” As it was widely known that he had recently a serious difficulty with the dean of his college, the slip was intensely enjoyed.

The same reverend gentleman once assured his hearers that they all knew what it was to have “a half-warmed fish” within them. “A half-formed wish” he meant. On another occasion he referred to “Ben the Japtist.” Feeling dimly that there was something wrong, he tried to correct matters: “No, no; I mean the Japtist Bon!”

Another dear old college gentleman had occasion to reprimand an undergraduate who had wasted two consecutive terms in youthful follies. After lecturing the delinquent severely in his queerly high-pitched voice, the dean finished by saying: “I am sorry to have to speak so severely to you, but I am credibly informed that you have broken many rules of the college; you have been incorrigibly lazy, and, to cap it all, you have deliberately tasted two worms!”

“Are you fond of music, Mr. —?” “Yes,” was the divine’s answer, “but I don’t know very much about it. I don’t think I have a very good ear; in fact, the only two tunes I really know well are ‘God Save the Weasel,’ and ‘Pop Goes the Queen!’”

And this reminds one of a dinner tale. The stage was dessert. Hostess—What will you have Mr. Jones? There are nuts, or angels, figs. Mr. Jones—Pigs, fleas!

At the licensing session held in a certain west-country town recently, the chairman, dealing with the statutory limit for bona fide travelers and getting his expressions a little mixed, referred to it as being “three miles as the ‘fo cries.’” A limb of the law who was engaged in the case ventured to correct his worship. With a deferential smile, this exponent tried to amend the phrase: “Your worship means as the ‘fly crows’—or rather,” he added hastily, “as the ‘cry flows!’” No one was sufficiently rash to make a further attempt.

It would not be fair to mention the name of the modern Mrs. Malaprop, who recently made the quaintest faux pas. The conversation turned on a forthcoming fancy-dress ball, to which all the house party was going. She was asked what dress she proposed to wear. “I’m having a dress copied from an old French print. It’s the period of the revolution. The picture is one of Marat being murdered in his bath by Charlotte Brontë!” It would have been most impolite to correct her, and no one ever knew whether it was mere ignorance, confusion of ideas, or absence of mind.

FROM PENNSYLVANIA: “This is merely a business letter, yet I would like to add a word of gratitude for the strong, true guidance which your paper gives to Churchmen, and for its staunch upholding of our Church’s teaching.”

Loving Service

A LADY was walking homeward from a shopping excursion, carrying two or three packages in her hand, while by her side walked her little boy. The child was weary; the little feet began to lag, and soon a wailing cry arose.

“I’m too tired. I want somebody to let me wide home!”

The mother looked about her, but there was no street car going in her direction. She took one of the parcels and gave it to the child.

“Mamma is tired, too, and Willie must help her to get home. She is glad that she has such a brave little man to take care of her, and help her to carry the bundles.”

Instantly the little fellow straightened, his step quickened, and he reached for the proffered parcel, saying stoutly:

It was only the old, old lesson that our Father is always teaching us: “Is the homeward way weary? Try to lighten another’s burden, and the loving service shall smooth thine own path.”—Lutheran Observer.

TWO STOMACHS.

The Upper for the Proteids and the Lower for the Greater Part of the Food.

It is an interesting study to observe how the digestion of food is accomplished. The greater part of vegetable food is starch, and this is never digested in the stomach proper, nor is it effected by the pepsin in the upper stomach.

Starch (a Carbo-hydrate) is passed out of the stomach into the duodenum or second stomach, and there treated by the pancreatic juices, when, in time, a microscopic fungi is grown from a part of the grain, if that has been eaten, and these elements, with moisture, heat, and time, transform the starch into grape-sugar, which is the first act of digestion.

The processes are duplicated in an artificial or mechanical way in the manufacture of Grape-Nuts, the new breakfast food made by the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., of Battle Creek, Mich.

In this food one finds the delicate, sweet taste of grape sugar, and when eaten it will be found to quickly digest and fatten and strengthen the entire body.

Its especial mission is to nourish and rebuild the brain and nerve centres.

A certain definite feeling of strength and stamina comes to the individual after a few days’ use of Grape-Nuts at breakfast.

Being a condensed food, one does not require more than 3 to 5 teaspoonfuls at a meal, which is worth considering from an economical standpoint.

Children's Hour

Easter at Nuremburg

BY EMMA PLAYER SEABURY

Away in the ancient city
Of Nuremburg long ago,
The little lads and the lasses
Shut in by the winter's snow,
With great high walls around the place,
And ponderous gates that hung
Open wide through the winter day,
And at night together swung—
Looked longingly out to the stretch of plain,
Where the river swept along,
When the springtime to the far-off hills
Brought blossoms and bursts of song.

There were gentianellas and star flowers there,
And violet banks abloom.
And butterflies fluttered without a care,
And lapsed in the sweet perfume.
And at Eastertide, a festival day
For the children was, in the town:
They formed a procession and marched away,
The winter to bury or drown.
The gay streets blossomed with dear little girls,
From the burgomaster's own,
To the baker's, barber's, and butcher's child,
Who fitted abroad alone.

They had wealth of braids like a golden crown,
And velvet bodice of blue.
And skirts of embroidery, quaint and rare,
And buckles on every shoe.
And they tripped to the burgomaster's house,
Where the door stood open wide,
And the gracious mistress with loving care,
Made ready the flock inside.

There were coins of gold in her netted cap.
She wore ruffles of costly lace,
And a chain of gold on her velvet gown,
And a smile on her handsome face.

Then the best woodcarver of all his craft,
Who wrought with quaint device,
Brought in a casket, all richly carved,
And fit for a jewel's price.
And they placed a doll that was dressed as fine
As a lady within, they say,
And two little maids took the casket up,
And merrily led the way;

Two and two, through the streets of the town,
Through Nuremburg quaint and gray,
Out to the sunshine, out to the spring,
They carried the winter away.

Every one came to the windows to look,
Or stood on the balconies high,
Or waited and leaned on the fountain of stone,
To see them all pass by.
And they sang as they walked, those Nuremburg maids,
"We have chased the death away,
And brought in the summer so gay and glad,
The summer and month of May."
"We bring sweet flowers, many a one,
We bring the spring and its dawn;
We bring the rays of the golden sun,
For Death and the winter is gone."

Twice the river that flows through the town,
The feet of the maidens crossed,
Over the bridges of stone looked down
Where the waters raged and tossed.
Then came again to another bridge,
And swinging it over the pier,
They flung the casket into the stream,
Drowned winter with never a tear.

Then back to the burgomaster's house,
To the banqueting hall they sped,
And with cakes and jellies, and meats and tarts,
And dainties, they all were fed.

And a blind old fiddler came and played
The merriest, gladdest tune,
And weaving around in an endless chain,
They danced in May and June.
And Easter Day was a festive day;
How Nuremburg used to ring,
When the maidens buried the winter in glee,
And danced to the tune of spring!

An Open Question

BY CHARLOTTE WHITCOMB

TWO little girls, Joyce Bennett and Effie Marten, had been sent after school on an errand to a distant neighbor's and were now returning, when, passing a vacant house, they espied a large cat darting across the yard.

"That is Mrs. Fairchild's cat," exclaimed Joyce.

"A maltese with a white breast, a white spot on her forehead, and one white foot. Yes, it is," said Effie. "Come, kittie! kittie! kittie!"

Kittie stopped a second, but on the approach of the little girls set off on a run.

Both girls ran after it, but it constantly escaped them; it hid in fence corners, it crept under a brush pile, and seemed ever more terrified as the girls grew more in earnest for its capture. When they got their hands upon it, it fought for liberty, and gave each child more than one vicious scratch.

"Oh dear!" sighed Effie, "we never can catch it, and I'm so tired."

"Let's try once more, Effie; I think if we get a good hold of her we can fasten her paws down, and then it will be easy carrying her. There! she has put her head in that hen coop. Now—" and with a masterly movement resolute little Joyce caught the big cat and held her while Effie tied a knitted neck scarf over the pretty cat's head and paws. The little girls were both tired, and would have been glad to rest, but they were still a long walk from home, and so they trudged bravely on, carrying their burden, which presently lay still and warm in their arms.

The cat, two days before, had strayed away from Mrs. Fairchild, to whom it had recently been presented, and that very morning the lady had called at the school-house and offered a reward of twenty-five cents to whoever should bring the pet home. The money seemed a good deal to our little friends, and they were already planning what they could do with it, when Effie exclaimed:

"Oh, I hope she's not being smothered!"

"I'm most afraid she is," said Joyce, "she doesn't move. Let's sit down on this barn door-sill and rest while we look at her."

The big doors were closed, but the sill was broad and high enough to afford a comfortable seat, and with many misgivings as to the condition of pussy, the little girls seated themselves, and, little by little, undid the wrappings.

No sooner were the cat's head and fore-paws released, than with a wild "mieu" she leaped from Joyce's arms, Effie meanwhile holding on to the neck scarf; the latter came off in the struggle, and pussy jumped through a hole under the door-sill and was lost to sight under the barn.

The children called, "kittie!" over and over, and poked as far as they could reach with sticks and poles, but all to no purpose; and, as it was growing dusk, they sorrowfully gave up the hunt and went home.

Invalids

Many people think that Mellin's Food is for infants only. There are many persons who, while not invalids but having digestive troubles or for other reasons have needed a nourishing and satisfactory food, have taken Mellin's Food with the very best results. Mellin's Food is easy of digestion and very nourishing, just the thing for a delicate stomach.

Mellin's Food

I have derived great benefit from the use of Mellin's Food. The food has agreed with me beyond my most sanguine expectations, and supplies a bland and nourishing element which I had heretofore failed to find. I am only surprised that, after having prescribed it in my practice for many years, the idea never before occurred to me to utilize it for my own peculiar needs. J. E. Comfort, M. "Too bad!" exclaimed Effie, "when we had got her almost there!"

They would have stopped and told Mrs. Fairchild of their adventure, but seeing a carriage at her door, they were sure she would be engaged with callers, and so they passed on.

Effie went into Mrs. Bennett's with Joyce, where they found Willie Tait, one of the school boys, and he heard the narrative of their adventure with the cat while Mrs. Bennett bound up their injured fingers and soothed their injured feelings with the statement that probably kittie could be lured from her hiding place the next day with some food.

An hour later, when Willie went home, the moon had risen, and as he passed Mrs. Fairchild's house he heard the "mieu" of a cat. He entered the yard and saw puss sitting on the porch. He rang, and a maid opened the door, the cat at the same instant darting in.

Said Willie: "This is your cat, isn't it?"

"Yes," was the reply; "Mrs. Fairchild is engaged just now. Who shall I tell her brought it?"

The boy hesitated a moment, and then answered, "Willie Tait."

The next day was Saturday, and when Willie went into dinner his mother handed him a silver quarter, saying: "Mrs. Fairchild left this for you, with the message that she is very grateful to you for bringing home her cat."

Willie laughed, as he answered: "I gave the girl at Mrs. Fairchild's my name, but I do not deserve the money. The cat knew it had got home, and was only waiting for some one to open the door, when it was glad enough to go in. Effie Martin and Joyce Bennett earned the reward, and they must have it."

Willie's brother said: "The reward was offered to the one who should deliver the cat at the house, and you did that; so the money is yours fairly enough."

Monday morning the little girls came to him, saying: "We are so glad Mrs. Fairchild has her kittie, and that it did not stay under that barn all Friday evening and night when it was so nearly starved. Did you find it on the way home?"

"No," said Willie, "I found it on Mrs. Fairchild's front porch, and all I did was to ring the door bell. The money belongs to you, and I won't touch a cent of it."

But the little girls argued that if he had not seen the cat and let her indoors she might have strayed away again and died of starvation, and they proposed that he should keep one-third of the money. This he refused to do, and the matter was laid before the teacher. The teacher made it the subject of a debate by the school, and it was found to be a question of such general interest that it lasted two whole afternoons.

The entire neighborhood of grown folks turned out, so that the school-room was filled to overflowing.

The friends of the little girls argued that they had brought the cat so nearly home that she knew her whereabouts, and went the rest of the way of her own accord, and would have got into the house very soon, even if Willie had not happened along. Also, that the girls had earned the money by the work of carrying the cat and suffering her scratches, and the wounds were shown in evidence.

Willie's friends declared that the girls virtually abandoned the chase when they left the half-starved and frightened cat under the barn. Also, that Willie had, by his opportune arrival at Mrs. Fairchild's, prevented further wanderings, and probable death, of the cat, and that he had fulfilled Mrs. Fairchild's requirements by delivering the cat to her.

The money had been restored to Mrs. Fairchild to await the decisions of the judges, but this only complicated matters, for the judges decided that, though from the weight of argument, the question should be decided in the affirmative, still, judging from the merits of the question, it should be decided in the negative.

"But who is going to get the money?" demanded the children, and as nobody seemed to know, it was left to Mrs. Fairchild to decide.

That lady would only say that she thought Joyce, Effie, and Willie three very unselfish, fair-minded children, and she invited them and their schoolmates to her house for a frolic party, to be followed by cake and ice cream. You may be sure that they all went and had a delightful time, and as it transpired afterward, Willie, Effie, and Joyce each received a quarter of a dollar; but to which party the reward rightfully belonged was not decided, and it still remains an open question.

What do the young readers of this story think?

Why Women are Nervous

[British Medical News]

The frequent cases of nervous prostration, or utter collapse of the nervous system, under which women "go all to pieces," as the saying is, have caused much thought and investigation on the part of physicians.

Certain inorganic substances are well known to cause various forms of nervous diseases which are readily traced to the poisons producing them. Further research leads to the belief that alum is a prevailing cause of so-called nervous prostration, for the symptoms it produces on the nervous system after its absorption into the blood are very remarkable indeed. Experiments physiologically made upon animals by Orfila, Professors Hans, Mayer, Paul Seim, and others, show that alum frequently produces no visible symptoms for many days after its introduction into the body. Then follow loss of appetite and other alimentary disturbances, and finally a serious prostration of the whole nervous system. The most prominent physicians now believe that "nervous prostration" and many affections of the nerves from which both men and women suffer are, caused by the continued absorption of alum into the system.

It is probable that many medical men are unaware of the extent to which salts of alumina may be introduced into the body, being under the impression that the use of alum in bread is prohibited. Alum, however, is still used surreptitiously to some extent to whiten bread, and very largely in making cheap kinds of baking powder. In families where baking powder is generally used great care should be exercised to procure only those brands made from cream of tartar. The alum powders may generally be distinguished by the lower price at which they are sold.

Finance and Commerce

At the moment there seems to be a pause in the growth of the demand for many leading industrial commodities. The buying rush has received a check. Prices for many articles are regarded as high enough, and there is a more general disposition on the part of buyers to purchase for the time being as their needs require.

This is manifestly true in many departments of the iron trade, and in the boot and shoe trade, and elsewhere. Consumption as a whole is no doubt still at a maximum, but distributors are more disposed to eliminate somewhat the element of speculating in future higher prices in determining the quantities of stocks on hand. This is a good sign, inasmuch as it is not accompanied by any pessimistic views of the future. There are no reactionary signs in business, and nothing in our domestic affairs on which such apprehension could be based. Our experiments in foreign relations, while drastic, in a sense, so far, seem to cause no feelings of uneasiness in business affairs, either at home or abroad. Dunn's weekly review of trade shows the total liabilities in failures during the first quarter of 1899, to be only 26 million dollars, against 31 millions last year, and 48 millions in 1897. Bank clearings were 68.5 per cent. greater than last year, and railway earnings for the first three weeks in March were 4.1 per cent. larger than 1898, and 9.8 per cent. more than in 1892.

Generally speaking, there is a hardening tone to the money markets. Rates are higher. In New York the ruling rate to borrowers on stocks has been 5 and 6 per cent., but higher rates have at times obtained. The country is using more money to transact its growing volume of exchanges, and currency is being drawn from city banks for that purpose. In fact, currency is scarce at the banks, and the government treasury finds it difficult to force specie, either gold or silver, into circulation, and under existing laws there seems no way to expand the currency to meet ordinary demands. The New York bank statement was again unfavorable, in that the legal resources were again reduced more than $3,000,000, and are now less than 2 per cent. above legal requirements. Speculation in stocks keeps up at a surprising rate, but is now more confined to specialties, industrials, street railways, etc. The conservative element of investors is leaving the market, and much of the buying the past week is the rankest speculation. Railway shares, particularly the grangers, which at the moment are slightly oppressed by backward cash conditions, have responded feebly to the advance in the others.

Wheat scored a sharp rise. The incentive was the continued unfavorable appearance of the growing crop, and the prospects of a late seeding of the spring-wheat lands in the Northwest.

Complaints of severe damage to winter wheat have been numerous, and the localities claiming it have bought freely on this theory. On the other hand, standard authorities almost uniformly hold that while conditions have been unfavorable, yet it is too early to tell. Even if the plant has life and vitality, we have had no weather to demonstrate it. This is the view largely taken by professional traders, and experience with crop damage reports year after year in the early spring seems to justify their conservatism.

Corn showed a sympathetic strength early last week, but later lost a good part of the advance.

Provisions continue dull, and prices do not recover in a very encouraging manner. Receipts of hogs continue beyond all precedent, although perhaps not larger than had been generally expected, but the market lacks good speculation support.

The Samoan Situation

The people, productions, and commercial and strategic importance of the Samoan Islands, are discussed in the current number of the monthly summary of commerce and finance just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. The islands are located about 2,000 miles south, and 300 miles west of the Hawaiian Islands, and 14 degrees south of the equator. They lie in an almost direct line between San Francisco and Australia, and slightly south of the direct steamship line connecting the Philippines with the proposed Panama or Nicaraguan inter-oceanic canals. Their special importance, therefore, lies more in their position as coaling and repair stations on these great highways of commerce, rather than in their direct commercial value, their population being small, and their imports and exports of comparatively little importance.

The group consists of ten inhabited and two uninhabited islands, with an area of 1,700 square miles, and an aggregate population, according to latest estimates, of 36,000 people, of which something over 200 are British subjects, 125 Germans, 25 Americans, 25 French, and 25 of other nationalities, while the remainder are natives, of the Polynesian race. The bulk of the population is located in the three islands of Upolu, Savaii, and Tutuila; the number in Upolu being 16,600; in Savaii, 12,500, and in Tutuila, 3,700. The islands are of volcanic origin, but fertile, producing coconuts, cotton, sugar, and coffee; the most important, however, being coconuts, from which the "copra" of commerce is obtained by drying the kernel of the coconut, the "copra," which is exported to Europe and the United States, being used in the manufacture of coconut oil. The exportation of copra from the islands in 1896 amounted to 12,565,909 pounds, valued at $231,372. A considerable proportion of this was exported to the United States; a larger proportion, however, to Germany whose citizens control its commerce through a trading company which has long been established there. The coconut and copra production, however, varies greatly from year to year, owing to the fact that many of the coconut trees have been destroyed in recent wars between native factions, a single individual being able, by cutting out the crown of the tree, to permanently destroy in two minutes' time the fruit-bearing qualities of trees which require several years for their growth.

The government of the Samoan Islands had been from time immemorial under the two royal houses of Malietoa and Tupea, except on the Island of Tutuila, which was governed by native chiefs. In 1873, at the suggestion of foreign residents, a house of nobles and a house of representatives were established, with Malietoa Laupepa, and the chief of the royal house of Tupea, as joint kings. Subsequently Malietoa became sole king. In 1887 he was deposed by the German government, upon the claim of unjust treatment of German subjects who formed the bulk of the population on the island, and was deported, first to German New Guinea, and then to the Cameroons, in Africa, and finally, in 1888, to Hamburg, Tamasese, a native chief being meantime proclaimed by the Germans as king, though against the protest of the British and American consuls at Samoa. Mataafa, a near relative of Malietoa, made war upon Tamasese, and succeeded to the kingship.

A Worn-Out Fad.

'Spring Medicines,' 'Blood Purifiers,' and 'Tonics,' an Old-Fashioned Idea.

Pure blood, strong nerves and muscles, firm, healthy flesh, can only come from wholesome food well digested. "Blood purifiers," and "nerve tonics" do not reach the cause of the mischief. The stomach is the point to be looked after. The safest and surest way to cure any form of indigestion is to take after each meal some harmless preparation of this kind composed of vegetable essences, pure pepsin, golden seal, and fruit salts, sold by druggists under name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; and these tablets, taken after meals, assist digestion wonderfully, because they will digest the food promptly before it has time to ferment and sour, and the weak stomach, relieved and assisted in this way soon becomes strong and vigorous again.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are superior to any secret patent medicines, because you know what you are taking into your stomach.

They are sold by druggists everywhere at 50c. per package. Write F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich., for book on stomach diseases, mailed free.

Piano Decoration

How to make a piano an ornamental, as well as a useful, article of furniture has been a serious problem to people who wish to have the instrument in their drawing-room, for, in itself, the piano is a cumbersome piece of furniture, and the rule is that any piece of bric-a-brac placed upon it interferes seriously with the tone thereof. However, pianos are necessary—absolutely necessary—and so all that can be done is to make them look as attractive as possible.

The upright piano is more generally used in the ordinary drawing-room than the square or the grand. The square piano, indeed, is very rarely seen, and the grand piano is limited to the music-room, or to a very large drawing-room. For a grand piano, the finest kinds of Indian embroidery, pieces of rare old tapestry that are laid on velvet of some color which will either harmonize or contrast with the colors used in the decorations of the room. This rule does not apply to pianos that are made to match the furniture in the room or its wood work. Large photograph frames do not look badly on a grand piano, and a pretty idea is to have a large three-leaved frame holding photographs of the great composers. It is most inappropriate and in very bad taste to have a variety of cheap pictures, even though they may be in handsome frames.

Very much depends upon the position of the piano in the room, and it is really very amusing to see at what different angles people manage to dispose of it, for it is the exception now to see it pushed back against the wall. A piano should be set well out into the room, at right angles, so that the light from the windows will fall upon the keys. To conceal the back of an upright piano, the Eastern embroideries again come into play, and tapestry is also used, or oddly-colored brocades. Often the most conspicuous thing in the room will be this drapery. On the top of the piano may be placed small articles of bric-a-brac, and an excellent effect is obtained by a plant, a palm—not a large one—or a rubber-plant, with some bright bow, or set in a dark Indian-red flower pot. When the room is so constructed that it is impossible to get a good light from the window without blocking the room with the piano, it must be turned so that only the back is visible. This, of course, shows the drapery to great advantage. Another clever way is to place it in the corner of the room, standing out from the wall, and just behind it have a high stand with a plant, while near the piano one may use a tall and imposing lamp with a beautiful shade.

A very odd fashion, but one which seems to gain in favor in very many New York houses, is to place the piano so that the back comes nearly across the door, and the drapery is the first thing which one sees on entering the drawing-room. Here, again, it is well to have a plant on the piano. The drapery is, of course, very much more effective when the expensive materials are used, but a great deal depends upon the colorings. In figured brocades and tapestries, there are many effective designs to be found in short lengths that will drape very well, whereas the plain colors, plushes, and velvets are not at all satisfactory.—Harper's Bazar.

Bishop of Washington. 12mo, crown 8vo, $1.50.

The aim of this book is to show that Baptism, the Eucharist, the Visible Church, the Christian Priesthood, and other Church principles are set forth in the New Testament as inseparably connected with Christ's Resurrection and Ascension; that both Romanism and Protestantism, by stopping at the Crucifixion and losing the true meaning of the Resurrection and Ascension, have failed to realize the relationship of the Glorified Christ to His Church, and have thus fallen below the level of New Testament Churchmanship.

WOMEN ARE COMING TO THE fore in politics, at least in certain sections, as demonstrated in recent elections. At Chattanooga, Tenn., a proposition was before the city council to repeal the ordinance requiring the early closing of saloons. There was a probability of its passage, but the women put a quietus on the matter by marching to the council chamber, where a prayer meeting was held, and aldermen were besought to vote against the repeal. The saloonkeepers were routed. At the city election in Beattie, a Kansas village with a population of 628, there were two tickets in the field, one composed of women, the other of men. The former, profiting by the example of politicians, worked assiduously on election day, and brought out almost the entire feminine vote, which, by aid of the disloyal masculine element, resulted in the election of a mayoress, five alderwomen, and a clerk of the gentle sex. The men elected one alderman who, however, is not expected to have much voice or influence, or be of much consequence in the conduct of municipal affairs during the coming year. In Rio Township, Illinois, Mr. James Mansfield was the Republican, and Mrs. James Mansfield, the Democratic candidate for school trustee. The ladies rallied to the support of Mrs. Mansfield who defeated her husband by a good majority. The campaign was an exciting but good-natured one.

THE FINANCIAL REPORT OF THE UGANDA Railway Company, which has recently been made public, calls attention to an African enterprise, regarding which little has been written, and which has an important bearing upon African development. Great Britain is building a railroad, 660 miles long, to connect Uganda with the east coast of Africa, and the road, when finished, will be used largely for the transportation of beads and ivory. At least, ivory is about the only present commercial product of Uganda, and beads make up the largest part of the imports. The Uganda railroad was surveyed in 1892. It runs from Mombasa, on the east coast of British East Africa, to Unyoro, the capital of the Uganda protectorate, on the north shore of Lake Victoria Nyanza. The survey indicated a feasible route, and in 1895 the British government appropriated $15,000,000 for the construction of the road. In December, the chief engineer and a large number of laborers from India arrived at Mombasa, and work began. By September, 1898, fully 200 miles of the Uganda railroad had been completed, and work has progressed steadily ever since. It is expected the road will be completed early in 1900. Eventually, the road already running from Cairo to Khartum will be extended to a juncture with the Uganda railroad.

THE DECISION OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT, that it would be impracticable to float the Spanish armored cruisers, Cristobal Colon, Vizcaya, and Almirante Oquendo, sunk by the United States fleet, has been vindicated by an investigation made by the Neptune Wrecking Company, of Sweden, with a view to determining whether it would be profitable for the company to undertake to raise these vessels on a contingent contract with the United States. The company sent an engineer and divers to examine the wrecks, and the result of its investigation has been made known to the Navy Department in a report from the general manager of the company. The Oquendo was found to be beyond hope of saving. The Vizcaya, the manager says, can be floated, but would be of practically no use as a warship. As for the Cristobal Colon, which Hobson was confident he could raise, saying he would appeal to the country for funds to do the work if the government would not undertake it, the Swedish company will agree to attempt to save her only on condition that the United States guarantee its expenses if the attempt should fail. As there is no appropriation for this work, the Navy Department will not accept the proposition. If any wrecking concern is willing to undertake the floating of any of these ships, it will be permitted to do so at its own expense, the government guaranteeing salvage, in the event of success.

RUSSIANS FULLY APPRECIATE THE fact that if their influence is to predominate at the court of the Shah they must make him commercially dependent on them. According to the Frankfort Zeitung, the Railway Department of the Russian ministry has under consideration a project for connecting Russia and Persia by rail. The line from the Alexandropol station of the Kars railway to the border station of Nakhichevan, offers few difficulties to the engineer, and can be built immediately. The continuation of the track on Persian territory to the custom-house at Julfa, presents serious difficulties, however, on account of the mountainous nature of the country, so that further surveys are necessary before the work can be begun. At the same time, a plan has been outlined to run a branch line from the Transcasian railway to Karadagh, and preliminary work has been begun. The present commerce between Russia and North Persia, which embraces articles of great value, is carried on mostly by means of camels—a system that is slow and expensive.

MINISTER CONGER SENDS FROM PEKIN a printed translation of an edict issued by the Dowager Empress of China, and posted in all provinces of the empire. Following extracts will be of interest: "The people do not understand that the preaching of Christianity by Westerners is permitted by and stipulated for in the treaties with foreign nations. The missionaries of the different nations come here and preach to our people what is in their books, and though each has a distinct doctrine, the common aim of all is to induce people to begood and do good. All evil and crime are not only prohibited by our laws, but are also prohibited by the Christian religion. For instance, the would-be rebellion in Kiangsi which Yang Kungchen tried to raise, was found out and reported to us by a man belonging to the Christian religion. Thus it will be seen that a good man, whether he is a Christian or not, will obey the principles of being honest and true to others. We, therefore, immediately rewarded the said Christian, Lin Tsai-to, in order to show our impartiality to all. Hereafter, I desire that all people will treat foreigners as their own countrymen, and avoid all misunderstandings with them. I explain this fully now, and command all Viceroy and officials in provinces to emphasize my sincerity by exerting themselves to suppress all agitation among the people before any anti-Christian prejudice is displayed."

THE UNITED STATES DELEGATES TO the Disarmament Congress, which will meet at The Hague in the latter part of May, will be Andrew D. White, United States Ambassador at Berlin; Mr. Newell, United States Minister to the Netherlands; President Seth Low, of the Columbia University, New York; Captain Crozier, Ordnance Department, U. S. A., and Captain A. T. Mahan, retired, U. S. N. Mr. Frederick Holls, of New York, will be secretary of the delegation. The American commission, as a whole, is regarded as an exceptionally strong body, being made up of men well known not only in public and political life, but in the world of letters and international affairs. They are all men of scholarship, fine linguists, and those attainments helpful in a congress representing the nations of the world, conducted under the diplomatic usage which makes French the accepted language.

FRANCE IS PASSING THROUGH A RE-newal of excitement attending the Dreyfus case. The Figaro, an influential daily newspaper, has made some startling revelations which, if true, prove conclusively that the conviction of the famous prisoner was the grossest parody on justice in the annals of the French nation. The conviction of Dreyfus was based on a secret dossier, the documents comprising which neither the accused nor his counsel were permitted to see. Men high in civil and military life declared the prisoner to be guilty, and he was accordingly condemned. The Figaro, by some means, has obtained copies of these secret documents, which have been so zealously guarded, and has made them public. Further revelations are to follow. The outcome is problematical, for although much of the evidence of the dossier, it is believed, can be proven to be false, revision would mean the indictment of men of such prominence, that even the scandal attending the Panama revelations would be outdone.

A CORRESPONDENT OF THE NORTH China News gives some remarkable information regarding Russian progress in Manchuria. Russians in Manchuria are acquiring land as they please, and are already working mines. The railroad, too, is obviously a military one, and he asserts that there are 30,000 Russian troops at Port Arthur, 3,000 at Talien Wan, 2,000 at Kin Chou, 200 at Luchow, 200 at Wafanglien, 200 at New Chwang, 200 at Haicheng, 200 at Liao Yang, 300 at Kirin, 20,000 at Haipion, north of Kirin, and, in fact, Russian soldiers are all over Manchuria. In Haicheng the Russians have taken a shop, and fortified it by mounting guns. At Liao Yang, they have a site 200 yards square, where they are building barracks. At Kirin the Russians have possession of the Chinese barracks, and 300 soldiers, with 20 officers and mining engineers, are quartered there.

ADVICES FROM CAIRO STATE THAT Emperor Menelek, of Abyssinia, has unexpectedly refused requests to both Russia and France. To France he has refused to promulgate a decree that all exports from Abyssinia shall pass through the French port of Jibuti, the Red Sea gateway to the only bit of French territory in East Africa. To Russia he has refused a proposal to reorganize the Abyssinian army, and place it under control of Russian officers. Russian activity in Abyssinia has puzzled those diplomats who are students in possible reconstruction of European, African, and Asiatic maps. For three years, the Czar has been profuse in presenting gifts to Menelek, recent ones being rifles, cartridges, and rapid fire guns. Some Englishmen see a purpose in the Abyssinian situation, believing that the far seeing Czar is preparing trouble for England in Egypt, should England attempt to forcibly interfere with Russian designs in the Orient. This, however, is pure speculation.

Conference of Theological Seminaries

THE sixth Conference of Theological Seminaries was held at the General Theological Seminary, New York, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday in Easter week. The following seminaries were represented: General Theological Seminary—Dean Hoffman, Professors Cady, Hall, Richey, Jewett, Body, Riley, and Roper; Theological Seminary of Virginia—Professor Angus Crawford; Berkeley Divinity School—Professor Johnson; Philadelphia Divinity School—Professor James; Cambridge Episcopal Divinity School—Dean Hodges, Professor Drowne; Nashotah House—President Webb; Western Theological Seminary—Rev. Dr. Gold, warden; King Hall, Washington—Warden Tunnell.

The conference proceedings began with a paper upon the present position and methods of the study of liturgics, by Dr. Gold. The literature of this important subject was carefully reviewed, its increasing value in view of present needs emphasized, and helpful suggestions made for its treatment in the seminary course. The next subject taken up was that of "Beneficiary aid to divinity students." Papers were read by Dr. Hodges and Prof. Johnson, ably reviewing this difficult subject from different standpoints. After a full and careful discussion, the following recommendations received unanimous approval:

That it is desirable to remove, as far as possible, from the question of aid to students, any eleemosynary character.

That the normal method of giving aid to students who stand in need of it, should be by the requirement of a high grade of previous academical attainment, to be ascertained by a special scholarship examination, or otherwise, at entrance to the seminary, and the maintenance of a correspondingly high grade through the seminary course.

In cases where the preceding method is inapplicable, high character and the promise of special pastoral ability, may be taken into account.

That to remedy any cases of hardship which may result from such examination standard, as well as to meet in certain cases the evils of excessive strain arising from unwise attempts to earn money at the expense of health and time for study and devotion, the system of supplementary loans of smaller additional amounts with due precautions as to security and repayment in a reasonable time, seems worthy of consideration.

The subject of Honorary Degrees in Divinity, came before the conference in the report of a special committee appointed last year. The following recommendations, which are to be regarded as supplementary to those accepted by the conference last year on the subject of Divinity Degrees in course, were unanimously adopted:

That under no circumstances should the Degree of B. D. be given honoris causa.

That it is inexpedient that the Degree of D. D. should be given honoris causa, save in two clearly marked and exceptional cases: (a) where it is desirable to mark the Church's recognition of position of special ecclesiastical dignity. That the only persons of this class upon whom the Degree of D. D. should be conferred honoris causa are Bishops of the Church and Professors of Incorporated Seminaries; (b) where it is desirable to reward a really strong and important contribution to theological science, although the author's training has not made him eligible for the Degree in course. That whereas the present requirements for the Degree of D. D., approved at the last Conference, correspond generally in the Faculty of Theology to those usually required in general educational work by American universities for the Degree of Ph. D., the Conference is of opinion that this degree sufficiently covers the ground, and that it is undesirable that the degree of Doctor in Sacred Philosophy should be conferred by our seminaries.

One of the most useful features of the meeting was the earnest discussion of methods of aiding and maintaining missionary interest, and of promoting the systematic study of missions among the students. The general opinion was expressed that much could be done in this direction by increased library facilities, by the co-operation of the faculties in the organization and direction of classes for special study, and where practicable, by lectures on Comparative Religions in the seminary course.

The last morning was devoted to the subject of the spiritual preparation of candidates for Holy Orders. A suggestive paper was read by Professor Crawford, explaining the method of "faculty meetings" of a devotional character, which had been found so helpful at the Seminary of Virginia.

The conference accepted the invitation of Dean Hodges to meet at Cambridge next year. The executive committee of the conference, (to whom the general details of arrangement are entrusted) consists of Dean Hodges, and Professors Clark and Drowne. Special committees were appointed to report next year on the following subjects: "Is the ministry over supplied?" chairman, Prof. Body; "Summer schools for clergy or for Church workers," chairman, Dean Hodges. It was referred to the executive committee to arrange for the presentation of the subject of "The duty of the clergy in relation to social movements and problems of the day."

The Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, traveling secretary of the Church Students' Missionary Association, was introduced at the close of the conference, and requested the aid of the faculties in promoting the Association's work. The chairman assured him of the interest of the conference, and explained the steps which had already been taken in the matter.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

At St. Ansgarius', Chicago, there is beginning on Wednesday of this week, a conference of the Swedish priests of the Church from the various States, with the rector presiding. The Bishop will confirm there on Sunday.

The Western Theological Seminary has received a valuable collection of old Church papers and other religious literature, from the library of the late Rev. Henry G. Perry, of Chicago. This gift is due to the kindness of Mr. Perry's surviving brother and sister.

At the monthly meeting of the Clerics on Monday, about 25 members were entertained at 6451 Woodlawn ave., by Mrs. Williams, wife of the rector of Christ church, and Mrs. Dunham, widow of the late rector, and founder of the church of the Redeemer.

The Rev. W. C. DeWitt was able to be out, and to preach on Sunday morning last; also the Rev. D. S. Smith, of St. Luke's, South Evanston, who was assisted by the Rev. A. T. Perkins.

The Rev. H. C. Goodman, who has for a year been temporarily in charge of St. John's mission, Clybourne ave., has been appointed by Bishop Morrison to supply St. John's, Dubuque, Iowa, during the vacancy of that parish.

A beautiful brass book-rest for the altar in Christ church, Winnetka, has lately been presented by Mr. W. H. Martin and Mrs. Martin, in memory of their son David, who fell asleep January, 1898; and a pair of brass altar vases by Miss Mary Wakem, as a memorial of her mother. Both these memorials were solemnly blessed by the Rev. H. G. Moore, at Evensong, on Easter Even.

The Rev. Dr. Stone will deliver on the 20th, a lecture on "Some doubts and difficulties of the day," in St. Philip's church, Toronto, in which, his first rectorate, he ministered for four years, nearly 20 years ago. On the 21st, he will be principal speaker at the annual banquet in Hamilton, of the St. George's Benevolent Society, and preach the annual sermon in the same city on the morning of St. George's Day, Sunday, April 23d, leaving the same afternoon for Philadelphia, to speak at the annual banquet of the St. George's Society in that city on Monday evening.

Gifts to Church of the Transfiguration

A valuable organ (Lyon & Healy, two manuals) has been presented to this parish by Mrs. Beatrice Champlin Pulsifer. It bears the inscription of her father and brother's names: "In memoriam, George W. Champlin and William Raymond Champlin." This organ was first used during the Easter service, and proved an admirable addition to the voices of the large vested choir. A carillon was presented to the parish by the choir.

Confirmation Classes Presented

On Low Sunday the Bishop visited St. Chrysostom's in the morning, and laid hands upon a class of 20; in the evening he confirmed in the church of the Ascension. Bishop Seymour confirmed for him in the Atonement, Edgewater, a class of eight, presented by the Rev. J. M. D. Davidson, and one of five from St. Luke's, South Evanston; there was an offering of $21 for the Bishop's Students Fund.

Bishop Edsall's Visit

On Low Sunday the Bishop of North Dakota addressed his old congregation of St. Peter's, and after congratulating the vestry and people upon the choice of his successor, gave many interesting facts and incidents of his new work. He made a similar address at St. Chrysostom's in the afternoon, and assisted in the service at St. Peter's in the evening. He returns in a week to his work.

Woman's Auxiliary

At the usual monthly meeting in the Church Club rooms last Thursday, the 6th, there was a fine attendance to hear Miss Carruther's paper on "The Junior Auxiliary," and another very interesting one by Sister Margaret Clare, Superior of the order at Kenosha, on mission work, with emphatic reference to work of the Sisters of St. Mary for children at that place.

Girls' Friendly Society

The annual meeting of the Chicago diocesan organization of the G. F. S. was held at All Saints' church, Ravenswood, on Tuesday of this week, preceded by a celebration of the Holy Communion and a sermon by Bishop McLaren. After lunch, served by the ladies of the parish, the election of officers was held, and a conference of associates.

The New Rector of Epiphany

The Rev. J. Henry Hopkins entered upon his work by officiating on Friday evening, the 7th, in the chapel, which was filled, meeting the parochial chapter of the Brotherhood afterwards. On Sunday morning last a large congregation heard his first sermon to his new charge. The rectory, 260 Ashland ave., being too large for Mr. Hopkins and his wife, the vestry have rented it, and leased a smaller place, 348 Ashland ave., into which the new incumbent has moved.

Presentation to the Rev. W. R. Cross

On the evening of the 6th, at a reception for the parishioners of Grace church, Hinsdale, the rector, the Rev. W. R. Cross, and his wife were made the recipients of a set of Limoge china and a very handsome sideboard, with $55 intended for application on a summer vacation trip.

The Church of the Redeemer, Elgin

The parishioners, in vestry meeting assembled, on Easter Monday, after listening to the very favorable reports—for instance, that the Easter communicants exceeded, by three percent, the total number in the parish returned to the last convention—made a substantial increase to Dr. Fawcett's salary. On the following day, the rector united in marriage the Rev. A. G. Musson, of St. Paul's, Pekin, Ill., and Mrs. Ida S. Richards, the service concluding with a celebration of the Holy Eucharist.

Easter in Suburban Churches

Grace church, Oak Park, the Rev. C. P. Anderson, rector, had 208 at the early Celebration, and 110 at the later, with an offering of $3,880. In St. Paul's, Riverside, the Rev. G. Davis Adams, had 121 communicants, and an offering of $450; and used a newly furnished solid silver Communion set, the donor of which is not named. Emmanuel, Rockford, is recovering slowly from the effects of commercial depression. The Rev. N. B. Clinch reports 100 communions at Easter, and an offering of nearly $300. In Grace church, Freeport, gradually being built up again by the Rev. F. W. Keator, 52 communed at Easter.

At St. George's, Grand Crossing, the Rev. T. J. O'Curran reports, communicants, 44 and 30; offering, $61, and from Sunday school, $20; three adults and six infants were baptized on Easter Eve. In St. Luke's, Dixon, there were 66 at the early Communion, and many at the late; large attendance at the Maundy Thursday preparation service, on Good Friday at the Three Hours' Service, and on Easter, the offering being sufficient to meet all obligations. At the Holy Communion, Maywood, nearly all of the actual communicants, i. e., 65, relieved at the early services, only five at the High Celebration which was full choral. At Trinity, Highland Park, the offering was over $400.

Christ Church, Joliet

One of the surprises of Easter was that coming to the Rev. W. Bohlen Walker, where the communicants numbered 79 at 6:30 A. M., and 110 at 11 A. M. There was an offering of $2,004, which includes a cheque for $1,000 from one parishioner, and this against previous Easter offerings ranging from $100 to $250. The ladies of the parish have recently furnished exquisitely one of the rooms in the rectory, and sent the entire furnishing for the guest chamber in the rectory of St. John's, Lake Benton, Minn.

St. Bartholomew's, Englewood

On Good Friday there were large congregations at 10 A. M., from 12 to 3 P. M., and at 7:30 P. M. On Easter, at sunrise, the church was well filled; service, full choral, 146 receiving, and 35 at 8:30. At 11 A. M., 149 communicated. At the children's service, at 3:30, four infants were baptized. Offerings for the day were a little over $2,000. The music, rendered by Mr. Chas. Kirk and his choir of 75 faithful men and boys, was exceptionally good. A special note of rejoicing was a telegram from the rector, the Rev. B. F. Matrau, now in Florida, read by his locum tenens, the Rev. G. D. Wright, conveying the gratifying intelligence of improved health, and intention to return early in May.

Easter at St. Paul's, Kankakee

A congregation of 1,200 filled the church at 11 A. M. Dean Phillips reports 97 at the early Celebration, and 106 at the later, a larger total than ever before in one day. The offering, including $70 from the Sunday school, was $503. In the evening, the very last service in the old church was held, and it partook largely of the character of an agape. Addresses were made by Messrs. Emery Cobb, senior warden, Hon. S. R. Moore, one of the founders, Clark, and Rogers; all highly extolling the work of the Rev. Duane S. Phillips who has been rector for nearly 32 years. On Low Sunday, the services were held in the public library room, seating barely 160, pending the erection of the new and larger St. Paul's, on the recently purchased site.

Increase in Easter Offerings

The offering of Christ church, Woodlawn, has to be supplemented by $100 from a kind anonymous donor, who signs himself "A Friend." The offering of St. Mark's, Evanston, is now $1,500. St. Paul's, Kenwood, had 415 communicants at the three services. Additions to the offerings received at Calvary on Easter, made the total $560, and at the Good Shepherd $280, besides $73 at Douglas Park mission. Emmanuel, La Grange, the total has risen to $4,670, and on Monday of this week every cent of floating debt was cancelled. Communicants at Our Saviour numbered 354. At the Transfiguration the new organ was used. At St. Ann's the offerings aggregated over $219, including $42 from the Sunday school.

By way of summary it might be stated that the Easter communions of the diocese were nearly 10,000, and the offerings aggregated about $70,000, the two figures fairly indicating the glorious Easter of 1899.

New YorkHenry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The rector of St. John's church, Yonkers, the Rev. A. B. Carver, D.D., has been suffering for some time from malaria.

At St. James' church, the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, D.D., the Easter offering amounted to $3,000. It is contemplated completing the tower of the church.

The archdeacon of Westchester, the Ven. Dr. Van Kleeck who has been absent in Europe in search of health, is so far restored that his return at the end of this month is looked for.

At St. Andrew's church, the Rev. George R. Van De Water, D.D., a new window has been placed in position as a memorial of the late Irene Clifford Baily. The subject is the Angel of Faith. The window adjoins the door leading to the tower.

At the General Theological Seminary, the Very Rev. Dean Hoffman, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., was celebrant at the Easter Eucharist at the chapel of the Good Shepherd. At sunrise the students sang Easter carols from the summit of the chapel tower.

On Saturday in Easter week, the choir of St. Peter's church, Port Chester, consisting of about 50 men and boys, was entertained in New York by Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Palmer, given an afternoon outing, and a dinner in the evening. The rector, the Rev. Chas. Edward Brugler, was with the party.

Easter at St. George's

At the early celebration of the Holy Eucharist on Easter Day, there were 1,380 communicants. Important repairs are contemplated in the sacred edifice, at an estimated cost of $33,000. The Easter offering was for this object.

Easter offering at Grace Church

An enlargement of the chancel and other improvements of the sacred edifice are contemplated, including increased light and ventilation—the cost being estimated at $50,000. Towards this sum, $18,000 was presented on the altar on Easter Day.

Site for a New Church

A site has been secured on Longwood av. for the building of a new edifice for St. Margaret's church, which is under the general supervision of the Ven. Archdeacon Tiffany, D.D. St. Agnes' chapel has been co-operating earnestly with this congregation, both through its clergy staff and its lay forces.

Heroism of a Nurse

At the last meeting of the trustees of St. Luke's Hospital, a resolution was passed commending one of the trained nurses of St. Luke's Training School, Miss Frances C. Troop, for her heroism at the disastrous Windsor Hotel fire. Miss Troop who was in attendance on a sick person in the hotel, risked danger by remaining at her post, and finally succeeded in rescuing her patient and in herself escaping.

St. Agnes' Chapel of Trinity Parish

The new vicar, the Rev. Chas. T. Olmsted, assumed his duties on Low Sunday. During Lent, the Rev. Prof. R. H. Starr, of the University of the South, has been officiating. On Easter Day, the first of a series of new stained glass windows was unveiled. The window contains figures of SS. Jerome, Ambrose, Augustine, and Gregory, Fathers of the Church.

St. Bartholomew's Church

The offering on Easter Day reached nearly $13,000. Part of this will be used for work in Cuba, and $2,000 will be added to the capital of the loan bureau of the parish. The rector, the Rev. David H. Greer, D.D., whose mother died shortly since in California, has started for a visit to his father in that State. During his absence, his place will be partially supplied by Bishop Kinsolving, of Brazil, and the Rev. James H. McIlvaine, D.D., lately of the Brick (Presbyterian) church.

Easter Memorials

At the church of the Transfiguration, the Rev. Geo. C. Houghton, D.D., rector, a feature of Easter Day was the unveiling of several small stained glass windows in the baptistry, as memorials of the founder of the parish, and first rector, the Rev. Geo. H. Houghton, D.D. At the church of St. John the Evangelist, a memorial window was unveiled in honor of the late Sarah Fuller Minch, from designs by Mr. R. Geissler. It represents Charity protecting a child. In the lower section of the window is an ornamental medallion with annunciation lilies. At Christ church, the Rev. Jacob S. Shipman, D.D., D.C.L., was used for the first time on Easter Day, a handsome new marble pulpit, as a memorial of Lucie Hitchings Hall.

Memorial to Dr. Chas. F. Hoffman

At the church of All Angels, the Rev. S. De Lancey, Townsend, Ph. D., rector, the Easter music was arranged by Mr. Lacey Baker, of St. James' church, Philadelphia, the new organist, who will not, however, enter into residence until the end of the present month. The church choir was augmented for the occasion by orchestral pieces. Bishop Potter was the preacher, and celebrated the Holy Eucharist. In closing his sermon, the Bishop took occasion to refer to the project for a memorial to the late rector of the parish, the Rev. Dr. Chas. F. Hoffman. The memorial is to be an altar, reredos, and mural decorations, and subscriptions of $10,000 are being sought to meet the expense. Besides his long service as rector of the parish, Dr. Hoffman was a benefactor to the extent of many thousands of dollars, having practically created the present parish plant out of his own pocket.

Cathedral of St. John the Divine

Bishop Potter, aided by several women of the diocese, is busily engaged in planning a method for Sunday transportation of the poor people of the pro-cathedral mission in Stanton st., to the cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Cathedral Heights. The Bishop is anxious to have the poor, as well as the rich, consider the new cathedral as a home in which all have equal rights, and a certain number of the poor will be freely taken on Sunday from the more squalid parts of the city to get acquainted with the new headquarters of the ecclesiastical life of the diocese. The grounds around the cathedral are to be arranged as a park, open at all times to the public. The plan includes the arrangement of playgrounds for children located near by, and open on week days. The first Easter in the cathedral was observed this year. The Ven. Archdeacon Tiffany, D.D., was celebrant at the Holy Eucharist in the morning, and Bishop Potter the preacher in the afternoon.

PennsylvaniaOzi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

George W. Jacobs, treasurer of the Lenten and Easter offerings of the Sunday schools of the diocese, reports that already 21 schools have sent in the sum of $1,176 03. In almost every case there has been an increase.

The Rev. J. J. Joyce Moore, rector of the church of the Covenant, Philadelphia, was united in holy matrimony on Thursday, 6th inst., to Miss Grace Browning. The marriage was solemnized at the church of Zion and St. Timothy, New York city, by the rector, the Rev. Henry Lybeck, LL.D., D.C.L.

An Easter Donation

The 590 boys and 530 girls—pupils in the A. D. Bache primary school, Philadelphia—on Thursday, 30th ult., brought to the school large quantities of canned goods, eggs, fruit, and delicacies, as Easter gifts for the sick, which were distributed among the following institutions: The House of St. Michael and All Angels' for Crippled Colored Children, the North-west Sick Diet Kitchen of the City Mission, and the children's ward of the (unsectarian) Hahnemann Hospital.

Calvary Church, Conshohocken

The Good Friday services were unusually helpful and impressive. At the Three Hours' Service, the rector, the Rev. Herbert J. Cook, gave a new series of addresses upon "The Words from the Cross." In the evening the Rev. Addison Atkins Lamb preached. The Easter services, three in number, were well attended. New altar linen and ante pendium, recent gifts to the parish, were used for the first time. After the children's carol service at 7 P.M., the customary tokens were awarded for regular attendance at church and Sunday school.

Easter Services in Philadelphia

With an orchestra of brass and stringed instruments supplementing the organ, the well-trained vested choir of St. James', under the direction of Lacey Baker, rendered a wealth of harmony. A field of lilies in front of the chancel, yellow tulips on either side of the white, and gold-draped altar, and a profusion of azaleas and palms, made an exquisite picture. At Holy Trinity, a great cross of greens studded with lilies and azaleas, overhung the choir. The musical part of the service was rendered by the chancel vested choir and a volunteer choir in the organ loft. At the fifth celebration of the Holy Eucharist at St. Clement's church, the vested choir, under the direction of W. A. Goodwin, organist and choirmaster, sang "O Filii et Filie," the Communion service being Horatio W. Parker's in E. At the fifth celebration of the Holy Eucharist at St. Mark's church, the Rev. Dr. A. G. Mortimer, rector, the vested choir, under the direction of Minton Pyne, rendered Gounod's "St. Cecilia" in C, and at the offertory, Spohr's "All glory to the Lamb."

At the midnight hour before Easter Day, 14 members of the parish chapter Brotherhood of St. Andrew, sang from the belfry tower of the church of the Saviour, West Philadelphia. The choir during the day was augmented by a number of voices and accompanied by a full orchestra. In the afternoon, the 66 classes of the Sunday school decorated with flowers a large cross set up in the chancel. A long list of children received gifts for good attendance; one young girl, especially favored, had not missed one Sunday in ten years. In the evening, the choir observed its 31st festival, under direction of the Rev. J. G. Bierck, rendering Bruce Steane's service in Eb, with the anthem, "The trumpet shall sound," Handel.

Death of the Rev. G. C. Bird

The Rev. Gustavus C. Bird, who was until recently rector of St. Martin's church, Marcus Hook, entered into rest eternal on the 5th inst. About the beginning of March he was prostrated from anxiety concerning parish affairs, and resigned the rectorship which he had held for 27 years. He went to a sanitarium for treatment, his family removing to Philadelphia. Mr. Bird's condition was considerably improved under the treatment until Easter, when he suffered a relapse which proved fatal. He was born at West River, Md., in 1839, was a graduate of Dickinson College, Pa., and of the Alexandria, Va. Theological Seminary. His first pastoral charge was at Centreville, Md., which he left to become rector of Grace church, Honesdale, Pa. Subsequently he was rector's assistant at Emmanuel church, Baltimore, Md., and in 1872, accepted the rectorship of St. Martin's, an old colonial church at Marcus Hook, Pa. The funeral services were held at the church of the Resurrection, Philadelphia, on the 8th inst., and the interment was at Chester rural cemetery, Chester, Pa.

Parish House for St. Peter's, Germantown

On Tuesday in Easter week, the parish building on the grounds of this church was formally opened. It is a gift of Mrs. H. H. Houston, in commemoration of the 25 years' rectorship of the Rev. Dr. T. S. Rumney, and the existence of the parish. Bishop Whitaker presided, assisted by Dr. Rumney and the curate, the Rev. J. M. Hayman. Mr. Samuel F. Houston presented the building on behalf of his mother, and the gift was accepted in behalf of the vestry and parish by Dr. Rumney. Addresses were made by Bishop Whitaker and the Rev. R. W. Forsyth. Special music was rendered by the vested choir of the church. The new building is of the Gothic style of architecture, and is built of Holmsburg granite, with Indiana limestone trimmings. The first floor will be used by the kindergarten school attached to the parish, and contains also a sewing-room and a ladies' parlor. The whole of the second story is arranged as a lecture-room. The basement contains a kitchen, also a gymnasium for the boys and young men of the parish. A handsome tower, 14 ft. square and 60 ft. high, is the most imposing feature of the building, and through this is the main entrance. Over the doorway, in a niche to the right, is a figure representing St. Peter, and in another niche on the left is a figure of St. Christopher—both carved in Indiana limestone. Over the hallway in the tower is a room which will be used as the rector's library and meeting room for the vestry. The top of the tower is battlemented, and is an attractive piece of architecture. The windows in the building are all of handsome design, particularly the bay-window in the tower; all are filled with colored glass. The wood work is of yellow pine. The ceiling in the lecture room is in open work. The building cost about $20,000. The old parish house, which is connected with the new building by a covered cloister, will be used for Sunday school purposes.

New Pulpit at the South Memorial

At the G. W. South memorial church of the Advocate, Philadelphia, on Easter Day, just prior to Matins, the rector, the Rev. Dr. W. W. Silvester, standing in front of the new pulpit, read a special prayer, which was artistically wrought upon a tablet held in the hands of the Rev. R. E. Brestell, one of the curates. This was followed by the rendering of Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" from the "Messiah," by the vested choir of 50 voices, under the direction of Paul P. Kirchner, organist. The dedicatory sermon was preached by the rector who paid a glowing tribute to the one who built this massive and costly church. The pulpit, which cost $2,500, is a thank offering from the trustees and congregation, to Mrs. Harriet South Moore, in commemoration of the part taken by her in the founding of the parish and completion of the buildings. In addition to the brief notice given in THE LIVING CHURCH of the 25th ult., it may be stated, that in shape the pulpit is an octagon of nearly five feet in diameter. The body is placed on a large, round, central shaft, with eight small columns in an outer periphery, all resting on a large base, and each column surmounted by an elaborately carved ornamental cap. The stairway of six steps leading to the pulpit, is in a graceful curve, and is surmounted by a massive balustrade of solid stone. Carved figures enrich the stairway and pulpit, and give the work a striking character. On the newel post is a full length figure of an angel with face upturned, and bearing in the right hand a palm branch. The balustrade is divided into four elliptical panels, with carved figures: "Truth," bearing a burning lamp in either hand; "Faith," with her arms folded across her breast; "Hope," holding in one hand an anchor, the other at her brow, looking into the future; "Charity," with the dress caught up in the left hand, indicating the holding of gifts, her right hand open and empty. At the angles of the pulpit are figures of ecclesiastical significance, symbolical of the growth and periods in the Christian Church.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop

A public reception was given to Bishop Morrison at Library Hall, Davenport, April 5th. The hall was handsomely decorated, and an orchestra, stationed in the alcove, played throughout the evening. Bishop and Mrs. Morrison were assisted in receiving by the Rev. Messrs. S. R. J. Hoyt and C. H. Weaver, and their wives. Bishop Morrison was greeted by several hundred residents from all walks of life. There was an especially representative attendance of the local clergy, including the Very Rev. James Davis, vicar-general of the Roman Catholic diocese of Davenport, several Roman Catholic priests, and the pastors of the First Presbyterian, St. Paul's, Lutheran, Edwards Congregational, Calvary Baptist, United Presbyterian and the Methodist churches.

Debt Cleared at Cedar Rapids

Easter Day at Grace church was in many respects the most marked day in the history of the parish. A well-kept Lent and a devout Holy Week issued in a bright and joyous festival. The service sung by the choir of eighty voices, was superb; the number of communicants the largest in the succession of Easters. And the crown of the day was what the people did in response to the request of their rector, the Rev. Dr. Thos. E. Green. On Palm Sunday morning the congregation were informed that the rector had obtained gifts from those to whom parish indebtedness of $15,600 was due, making it possible to discharge the whole for $12,000 in cash. Dr. Green announced that he proposed to raise this sum during the one week before Easter Day. When the offering was counted it amounted to $12,241.09.

Grace Church, Cresco

Congregations on Easter Day were very large, especially in the morning. The music, under the leadership of Mrs. Marshall, organist, was well rendered. At the Celebration many communicated, more than for many years in this parish at any one time. At the hour for Sunday school the sacrament of Baptism was administered to five persons—one infant, two children, and two adults. Easter eggs in various colors were distributed to the scholars who were instructed upon the validity of Baptism and the vows assumed in that sacrament, by the priest-in-charge, the Rev. A. W. Gorrell, whose services the people hope to retain.

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. John B. Skilton, assistant minister of St. Paul's church, Cleveland, has tendered his resignation, to take effect April 15th, and will become principal of Cheltenham Military Academy, at Ogontz, Pa., succeeding its principal, Mr. J. C. Rice, who died last January. Mr. Skilton has been assistant at St. Paul's since 1892, with the exception of one year which he spent abroad.

A joyful Easter was kept in all the Cleveland churches, in spite of the fact that winter held supreme sway outside. Large numbers of communicants at both the early and later Celebrations, proved that the people had not merely gone to see and hear.

Trinity Cathedral

The services were conducted by Dean Williams, assisted by the curate, the Rev. H. L. Gaylord. The music given by the choir of men and boys, supplemented by a number of fine soprano voices, under the charge of Mr. Joseph B. Hopley, organist and choirmaster, was elaborate and beautifully rendered. The number that came to the Holy Communion at the three services, was the largest in the history of the parish.

The children of both Sunday schools attended choral Evensong at the cathedral in a body.

Emmanuel Church, Cleveland

The very beautiful musical service was rendered by the vested choir, under the leadership of Dr. Frederic Rogers, organist and musical director. All of the flowers about the altar were memorial gifts. The service was conducted by the Rev. Francis M. Hall, minister-in-charge, who was the celebrant at the 7:30, and also at the 10:30 Communion. At the festival of the Sunday school a large floral cross was constructed by each class, bringing with its offering of money in a white silk bag, a beautiful bouquet of flowers to place upon the cross. The Easter offering of the school for diocesan and general missions was $82 50.

St. Mark's Church, Cleveland

A set of very tasteful dossal hangings was given as an Easter gift, and a litany desk, given by friends of the parish, and designed by a member of the vestry, was used for the first time at the Easter services. New choir stalls have been added, and the choir now numbers 40 voices. At the six o'clock Celebration, 70 communed, an event unprecedented in the history of this parish, the Rev. Frederic E. J. Lloyd, rector.

Nebraska

George Worthington, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Matthias, Omaha, organized as a Parish

On the evening of Maundy Thursday, Bishop Worthington visited this mission and confirmed 22 persons, one of the largest classes ever confirmed in it. On Monday in Easter week a large and enthusiastic meeting of the congregation was held for the purpose of incorporating as a parish, adopting a constitution, and electing a vestry and wardens, St. Matthias having been a mission ever since its organization. A vestry of representative men was elected, and parish life begins with promise of great success. During the past winter the number of people attending the services has doubled, and all the work and services of the Church are well sustained. Dr. J. E. Reilly who has been priest-in-charge of the mission, becomes rector of the new organization, greatly beloved by a loyal and united people, and St. Matthias' church takes its place among the strong, self-supporting parishes of Omaha.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

Easter Sunday ushered in a period of bright, pleasant weather. Large congregations were the rule at all the churches. The Easter offerings show a gratifying increase in most instances. In many churches special offerings were made, and memorials unveiled.

St. Thomas' Church, New Haven

The Easter offering, which is believed to be the largest ever given on that day during the parish's more than half century of organized existence, amounted to $1,062. The rector had asked for $600, and the response was beyond measure surprising.

Christ Church, New Haven

Easter was a joyous day. At the morning service the beautiful house of God was still further enriched by two massive memorial tablets, the gifts of parishioners. The tablets are of brass, with black and red letters, and excepting a richly chased border, are perfectly plain. The tablet in the nave is inscribed as follows:

Ad Majoram Dei Gloriam

In gratitude to Mrs. Lucy Hall Boardman whose munificence in the day of adversity made possible the erection of this church unincumbered by debt, and who further enriched and completed it by the gifts of its east window and tower, this tablet is placed here by the parishioners of Christ church, Easter Day, A. D., MDCCCXCIX.

Give her the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates.

The chancel tablet inscription is:

Ad Majoram Dei Gloriam

In gratitude to Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Ives whose munificence made possible the beginning of this church by the erection of its chancel, this tablet is placed by the parishioners of Christ church. Easter Day, A. D., MDCCCXCIX.

God is not unrighteous that He will forget your works and labor that proceedeth of love.

Another gift this Easter is a beautifully carved credence table, the gift of the Sunday school. It is of oak, to match the woodwork of the chancel, and is richly carved with a border of the symbolical vine about the top, and the linen fold on the front panels. The table will be placed in the little morning chapel.

St. John's Church, New Haven

Over $1,000 was the amount of the Easter offering. The vestrymen of the church during the preceding three weeks had raised about $9,000. The funded debt of the church is about $12,000. When the announcement was first made that an attempt would be made to pay off that amount by Easter, few anticipated such success. At the Easter services it was announced that nearly $10,000 of the $12,000 had been collected or pledged. Of that amount, $3,000 was contributed by Trinity church, and $2,500 and $500 by two individual members of St. John's, who did not wish their names made public. Other contributions ranged from one dollar up. The rector, the Rev. Stewart L. Means, and the parishioners hope to be able by the first Sunday in May to announce that the whole $12,000 has been collected.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The officers of the South Side Clericus, are the Rev. J. C. Stephenson, president, the Rev. Geo. D. Sparks, vice-president, the Rev. William Wiley, secretary and treasurer.

The auxiliary societies of St. Ann's church on the Heights united through Lent, and at its close sent to missionaries boxes amounting in value to $365.12.

The Rev. S. R. Bailey, rector of the church of the Holy Comforter, Brooklyn, has recovered from a very severe attack of pneumonia.

The repairs on the organ at All Saints' church, Bayside, the Rev. Geo. W. Eccles, rector, have been completed, and services are again being held in the church. Since the accident which rendered the organ useless, services have been held in Literary Hall.

The treasurer of St. Luke's church, Sea Cliff, reports that during the year, the receipts from all sources, were $4,488 45, and total expenditures, $3,542.40, leaving a balance in hand of $946.05.

A valuable window will soon be placed in St. George's church, Flushing. It is being made by Henry Holliday, of London, and will be placed in the north aisle of the church. the subject is the Nativity.

Funds for a New Church

An association has been formed by the young men of St. Matthew's church, Brooklyn, the Rev. A. A. Morrison, rector, to be known as the Young Men's Association of St. Matthew's church. The primary object is the obtaining of funds for a new church to cost not more than $50,000, and the secondary, to create a more social feeling in the congregation.

Central Pennsylvania

Ethelbert Talbot, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Debt Lifted at Marietta

The parishioners of St. John's church are rejoicing over their release from a debt of $200, which has been a burden on the parish for several years. Up to the present it seemed almost impossible to meet the interest, but at the beginning of Lent, the rector, the Rev. Bert Foster, D.D., pleaded for the lifting of the whole debt, and suggested a simple plan by which he thought it could be obtained. This was nothing more than for each society and every parishioner to make a willing offering as the result of special Lenten work and self-denial. God so blessed the efforts of the people, that at evening service on Easter Day the rector was enabled to announce that not only $200, but $810.98 had been handed in that day, and now the parish is on safe ground. In addition to this large sum, the children increased their missionary offering from $22 in 1898 to $42 this year. A handsome electric-light fixture has just been placed in the chancel as a memorial by one of the parishioners.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The 31st annual convention of the diocese will meet in Christ church, Oswego, Tuesday, June 13th, at 4:30 P. M., by order of the Bishop.

At the April meeting of the Utica Clerical Union, held in Grace church parish house on the 10th inst., the secretary, the Rev. J. E. Ramsdell, read an essay on, "How better to instruct the children of the Church."

Appointments

APRIL

14. A. M., Greene; evening, Good Shepherd, Binghamton.
17. Evening, Windsor.
18. Harpersville, commemoration and conference.
19. A. M., Guilford.
22. Evening, New Hartford.
23. A. M., Clinton; P. M., Chadwicks, Clark's Mills.

Reception to the Rev. Dr. Olmsted

A farewell reception was given Dr. and Mrs. Olmsted by the parish of Grace church, Utica, on the evening of Easter Monday. A large company gathered to say regretful adieu to him who had served faithfully as rector for 15 years, and his charming wife, before they removed to St. Agnes' vicarage, New York. The sentiment of the parish was expressed in formal resolutions of the vestry, read at the reception.

Easter Offering at St. Paul's, Syracuse

Easter Day was wintry in aspect throughout Central New York. The festival was joyfully celebrated, however, with Holy Eucharists and worthy offerings of praise to the Risen King. In St. Paul's, Syracuse, the Dr. H. R. Lockwood, rector, a feature of the day was the offering of $1,700 for current expenses. At the evening service the children of the Sunday school joined in the processional with the vested choir, and occupied seats in the nave.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Queen of Festivals was observed in all the churches with services as full of beauty and brightness as each could offer. There were large numbers of communicants at the early Celebrations, as well as crowded congregations at the later hour.

Easter Day Services

In the morning, the Bishop preached and administered Confirmation in Christ church, Georgetown, the Rev. Dr. Stuart, rector, and in the evening he officiated at the mission chapel of the Good Shepherd, now vacant by the transfer of the Rev. H. S. Smith to be rector of St. Margaret's church. On Easter Even, the Bishop confirmed a class at Grace church, South Washington, presented by the rector, the Rev. Mr. Sontag. At St. Paul's, there were three early Celebrations; and at 11 o'clock, choral Matins and Celebration. A memorial gift of a handsomely carved prayer desk of oak, for the Bishop's chair, was placed in the sanctuary; and the tiling of the choir and baptistry, lately completed, were also Easter offerings. At the children's festival service, Bishop Kinsolving, of Brazil, interested them with stories of his far-off field of labor. Prizes were bestowed for punctual attendance. A joyous choral Evensong closed the glad day, when the rector took occasion to express his appreciation of the work of the choir, not only at this festival, but at all times.

The Bishop's Guild

On Easter Monday, the members of the Bishop's Guild met at the pro cathedral for their annual corporate Communion. The Bishop referred to the first service of this kind, a year ago, when they gathered at St. Alban's, under the shadow of coming war. That occasion, he said, became historic, for out of it grew the idea of the Peace Cross. As those present left the church, they were given copies of "The Peace Cross Book," a little volume quaintly and beautifully gotten up, in which are collected various accounts of the unveiling of the cross, and other incidents connected with the cathedral site, with illustrations.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Easter in Detroit

The weather was cold and blustry on Easter Day, but warm and bright services succeeded a well-kept Lent. The Church services were distinguished throughout the city by richly decorated chancels, fine music, and very large congregations. There were two Celebrations in almost every parish, and three in the larger ones. Bishop Davies was with St. Thomas' congregation, and administered Confirmation there. The children's services in the afternoon were a marked feature. The congregation of St. Andrew's parish contributed $1,800 toward the building of their Bishop Harris memorial church, which is now in course of erection. The day was specially observed by nearly all the religious bodies in the city.

Easter Music at St. John's, Detroit

The music on Easter Day was marked by that excellence and worshipful spirit which has always characterized it. Besides the customary festive features of chant and song, "The trumpet shall sound," from "The Messiah," finely declaimed by Mr. Krolik, the baritone, followed by the "Hallelujah Chorus," was given as an offertory anthem, and during Holy Communion, Gounod's Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in Excelsis were admirably rendered. Subdued music, admirably played by Mr. Fruttchey, the painstaking organist of the church, and accompanied by a harp, added much beauty and solemnity to the office. The Rev. Dr. Prall preached at the 10:30 A. M. service, and was assisted throughout the day by the Rev. Messrs. F. S. White and W. Warne Wilson.

St. Luke's, Ypsilanti

Beginning with a six o'clock Celebration and address, Easter Day in St. Luke's was very blessed. About 200 received at the two Celebrations, and in the neighborhood of 2,000 worshippers must have attended the four services at 6 A. M., 10:30 A. M., 4 P. M., and 7:30 P. M. The music, under Prof. Whittaker, was most effective. The offerings amounted to $998.

West Missouri

E. R. Atwill, D.D., Bishop

Christ Church, St. Joseph

On Tuesday in Holy Week the Bishop visited the parish and confirmed a class of 38, half of them adults, and 16 being men and youths, presented by the rector, the Rev. John Henry Hopkins. On Easter Day there were 305 Communions (186 receiving at the early Celebration). The Easter offering for the rectory debt and other indebtedness was nearly $3,400, the largest in the history of the parish. The children's Lenten savings for domestic and foreign missions were ten dollars more than last year, reaching $159.03. The local commanderies of Knights Templar attended at choral Evensong. This was the last Sunday of the present rectorate, which has lasted nearly four years. A large reception was given for the Rev. and Mrs. Hopkins on the evening of Tuesday in Easter week, in the guild rooms of the church, when resolutions of regret were read by the vestry, and a large chest of silver tableware was presented to the retiring rector by the men of the parish. The Rev. George Heathcote Hills, the new rector, is expected to take charge on the 2d Sunday after Easter. The parish is in a strong condition, numbering about 700 confirmed persons and with only a very small indebtedness remaining from the $8,000 debt of four years ago.

The Rev. Mr. Hopkins assumed charge of the church of the Epiphany, Chicago, on Low Sunday.

Maine

Rev. Henry Adams Neely, D. D., Bishop

At Grace church, Bath, on Easter Day, there were appropriate and forcible addresses by the rector, the Rev. W. C. Stewart, and delightful music rendered by the mixed vested choir, under the direction of the talented conductor and composer, Arthur S. Hyde. The attendance at both Morning and Evening Prayer was large, while the number out to the early Celebration was very fair. The Good Friday services, consisting of the litany and stations of the Cross in the morning, and Evening Prayer and sermon in the evening, were also well attended. One of the joys of this Eastertide is the paying off of a long-standing debt of $500, through the efforts of senior warden T. Klippel.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

The Easter term at St. Mary's Hall, Faribault, begins Thursday, April 13th. The Rev. Chas. D. Andrews, of Christ church, St. Paul, gave the Three Hours' Meditation at St. Mary's, Good Friday. Bishop and Mrs. Whipple sent Easter greetings from New York on Saturday, as they were leaving for England.

On the afternoon of Easter Day, Bishop Gilbert visited the State's prison, Stillwater, according to his annual custom, and left a word of hope for the unfortunate prisoners. In the evening, he visited the parish church of the Ascension, and confirmed a class of 20. A handsome font was presented to the church by Mrs. Helen M. Toribus, and dedicated with appropriate ceremonies.

Holy Week and Easter in St. Paul

On Good Friday, the Three Hours' Meditation was held in a number of churches, the attendance was very large. Bishop Gilbert conducted the service at Christ church. Vincent's Passion Service was rendered at St. Paul's church before a large congregation, by the vested choir of 50 voices. During Holy Week, Bishop Gilbert visited St. Stephen's, St. James', St. Mary's, the Messiah, and St. Peter's parishes, confirming large classes.

Easter Day, the Holy Eucharist was celebrated in almost every parish, very large numbers receiving. Bishop Gilbert confirmed a class of 20 candidates at Christ church.

Minneapolis Churches

On Palm Sunday, Bishop Gilbert confirmed a class of 42 candidates at Gethsemane; amongst them were six colored people and the Rev. A. Bruce, late pastor of the African M. E. Church. He has applied for orders, and while preparing, will have charge of the St. Thomas' mission, recently started amongst the people. The Easter Day services in Minneapolis were similar to those in St. Paul. The parish vestry meetings revealed substantial progress, increased membership, and finances in a healthy condition. At Gethsemane parish meeting, $1,000 of the rector's salary, voluntarily surrendered by the rector last year, on account of financial depression, was unanimously restored. The meeting was very harmonious throughout.

Holy Trinity out of Debt

Provision has been made for the payment of the $5,000 mortgage on July 1st. The entire $5,000 has been pledged. It was a joyous Easter to the parish and its rector, the Rev. S. B. Purves. The satisfaction of this mortgage will set the church well on its feet again, and it will be able to continue its work from now on with renewed vigor. The parish has done remarkably well in caring for this indebtedness. Seven weeks ago the possibility of such a thing had not even been thought of, but about that time Bishop Gilbert, in his address one evening to the congregation, mentioned, among other things, that it would be a glorious thing if the church could be freed from the burden by the beginning of the year 1900. On the morning of the day following the Bishop's visit, one of the parishioners called upon the rector and offered to give $1,000, if the other $4,000 for the satisfaction of the mortgage could be secured by pledges payable on or before July 1st, by Easter Day. The offer was discussed in the vestry, and on the following Sunday was told to the members of the church. A committee was appointed, which has been at work ever since, and the full amount has been secured. When the rector announced the success of the work, the members of the congregation rose to their feet and enthusiastically joined in singing the Doxology. The church has just received a handsome white marble font, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Heath as a memorial to their daughter, Alice V. Heath, who passed away a day or two before last Christmas. The font was dedicated Saturday afternoon at the annual Easter Eve baptismal service.

- [7. Lake Waccamaw.

The Church people of St. Paul's, Clinton, are rejoicing in the consecration of their church building. Before this service took place, the pews were repainted and grained, a new carpet put down, and the old organ exchanged for a new one.

Newark

Thomas Alfred Starkey, D.D., Bishop

Memorial to Rev. O. Valentine

A special service was held in St. John's church, Bayonne, N. J., on Easter Day, at 4 P. M., at which time a beautiful memorial window to the late rector, the Rev. O. Valentine, was unveiled and blessed. The rector, the Rev. E. L. Jenner, preceded by crucifer and attendants, banner-bearer and acolytes, went to the window which is on the north side of the church, and pulling aside the curtain which veiled it, read appropriate prayers. The return of the procession to the chancel was to the music of "Blest are the departed," Spohr. Festal Evensong was then sung, the music being well rendered by the efficient choir of men and boys. Following Evensong, there was a procession of choir and clergy through the aisles of the church, during which the hymns; "The strife is o'er," and "Jesus lives," were sung. The design of the window is a large and beautiful figure of St. John the Divine, with a rich and effective canopied background. The lower part is in panels, the centre one bearing the appropriate inscription. Among the subscribers to the window were Bishops Seymour, Talbot, and Coleman, also many friends of the deceased priest among the clergy and laity. The window was made by Archibald D. Sawyer, successor to E. J. V. Stent, New York city.

Funeral of Mrs. Martha B. Stevens

The burial service of Mrs. Martha B. Stevens, of Castle Point, was held Tuesday in Easter Week, in the church of the Holy Innocents, Hoboken, which she founded in memory of her daughter. There were two early celebrations of the Holy Eucharist, and at 9:30 A. M., a third, at which only members of the Stevens family were present. At 11 A. M., the church was crowded, and nearly 3,000 people, many of whom remembered Mrs. Stevens for her charities, packed the adjoining streets which intersect the poor portion of the city. Bishop Starkey officiated, assisted by the Rev. Ernest Magill, rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. George C.

Houghton, long the rector of the Stevens family parish, Hoboken; the Rev. James Clayton Mitchell, and the Ven. Archdeacon Jenney. The choir of the church of the Holy Innocents was augmented for the occasion by the choir of the church of the Transfiguration, New York, under the direction of Prof. Dod, with orchestral accompaniment. The president and faculty of Stevens Institute of Technology, one of the philanthropic foundations of the Stevens family, attended in a body. The pall bearers were old male servants of the family.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

A new lecturn has been placed in the chapel of the Church Home, South Boston. It bears this inscription: "In memory of Martha Dexter."

A solid silver chalice and paten, costing $200, were recently stolen from St. Luke's church, Chelsea. The wafer-box, valued at $15, was also taken.

Easter in Boston Churches

Easter Day called together large congregations in all the churches. The music and floral decorations at Trinity were unusually good. Emmanuel church, with its improvements, renovations, and decorations, presented a picture of beauty. The church of the Advent was obliged to close the door upon the crowds that flocked there. The Rev. Pelham Williams, D.D., preached the sermon. At St. Paul's church, a throng of worshippers not only filled the pews, but stood during the service in the three aisles. Old Christ church is always a centre of attraction on Easter Day and was well filled. The parishioners of St. John's, East Boston, welcomed the return of the rector, the Rev. L. D. Roberts, who has been ill. The large oak lecturn was used for the first time. It is a memorial of the Rev. J. H. Waterbury, who was a former rector of this parish.

Christ Church, Hyde Park, and Its Rector

The Rev. Samuel G. Babcock has just completed the seventh year of service here. The debt upon the organ, $1,000, was cancelled at Easter: There were over 200 communicants on this feast day. During his rectorship, the list of communicants has doubled, a new church has been built, and the community has been visibly influenced, to a large extent, by the worship and teachings of the Church.

St. Matthew's, South Boston

Easter Day was one long to be remembered in this parish. There were over 300 communicants at both Celebrations. The rector, the Rev. A. E. George, has been here nearly 12 years. In that time, 606 have been baptized, 480 confirmed, and 672 buried.

Confirmations in Boston

Bishop Lawrence recently confirmed 20 candidates in the church of the Advent, 25 in St. Paul's, 25 in All Saints', 25 in St. Matthew's, and 13 in Grace church.

Death of a Faithful Churchman

Mr. Thomas Mair, who recently died, was for 20 years either a warden or vestryman in All Saints', Dorchester, and was one of the early supporters of this parish. He was a faithful worker, and labored in his community with zeal and consecration to teach the Church's ways, and was no inferior champion of her history and claims. He was a frequent contributor to the columns of THE LIVING CHURCH.

Grace Church, New Bedford

The departure of the Rev. E. S. Rousmaniere from the rectorship, has called forth many expressions of great respect from the parishioners and citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Rousmaniere, with the assistance of the Rev. F. L. Whittemore, have presented to the parish a sedilia, organ screen, and lecturn. An anonymous giver has presented a brass baptismal font.

On Feb. 21st, at St. Andrew's church, Milwaukee, the Bishop gave an interesting lecture based on personal experience, and illustrated by stereopticon views, on the noted Passion play, which is held every ten years at Ober Ammergau, in Bavaria. The receipts were for the benefit of the building fund of this new and prosperous church. He repeated the lecture for the benefit of St. Stephen's, Milwaukee, on March 23d.

The Bishop addressed the students of the Milwaukee-Downer College, on the morning of March 7th.

Holy Week and Easter at the Cathedral

The many services at All Saints' cathedral, Milwaukee, during Holy Week and Easter-tide, were especially impressive and devotional in character this year, and attended by larger congregations than heretofore. On Palm Sunday there was the usual solemn procession with palms before the High Celebration. Portions of the blessed palms were distributed to all the people. On Maundy Thursday at the High Celebration, at 10:30 A. M., the Bishop, as has been his wonted custom, consecrated the holy oil for use in the diocese during the coming year for the unction of the sick and dying. He also preached the sermon. In the evening a large class was confirmed, several being converts to the Church from the Roman and Protestant bodies. On Good Friday, nearly every hour of which was taken up with services, meditations, and sermons, the Reproaches were chanted at 11:45 A. M., followed by the devotion of the Three Hours, beautifully and effectively preached by the Bishop. The sacred edifice was well filled during this entire service with a devout and earnest body of worshippers, most of whom remained throughout. On Easter Day there were Low Celebrations at 6, 7, and 8 A. M., at which the bulk of the congregation made their Communion; at 9:30 a high Celebration for the children, preceded by a procession with banners; at 11 o'clock a solemn procession and High Celebration with a sermon by the Bishop. The money offerings amounted to over $900. After the evening service a solemn Te Deum was sung. Amongst the Easter gifts to the cathedral may be mentioned six stained glass memorial windows, made by Lavers and Westlake, of London, Eng., and three wrought brass sanctuary lamps (the first instalment of a set of seven) patterned after those in St. Mark's, Venice.

St. Matthias' Church, Waukesha

This parish is rejoicing over the hearty and inspiring services held on Easter Day, under the guidance of the Rev. John Brann, rector. A very pleasant and helpful part of the service was the dedication of a new dosel, given by Mrs. Jackson; a pair of magnificent brass candlesticks, presented by the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Ball. Never before had the choir sung so well. They seemed to feel that Christ hath risen. The whole day was one of rejoicing and thankfulness to our risen Lord and Saviour; 75 received at the 7:30 A. M. Celebration, nine at the Sunday school Celebration at 9 A. M., and 65 at the 10:30 A. M. service. With those at the Celebrations Monday and Tuesday, and some private Celebrations, it is certain that, with the exception of two or three individuals, every confirmed person in the parish has received during this Easter-tide. About $160 was received as an Easter offering, and at a very pleasant parish meeting Monday P. M., a good vestry was elected, the mayor of the city becoming senior warden.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. J. B. Funsten, rector of Trinity church, Portsmouth, has reconsidered his decision, and has accepted the bishopric of Boise.

The English evangelist, Mr. John R. Matthews, has been holding a series of services in St. John's church, Houston, which have resulted in much good to the Church and community. The rector, the Rev. J. G. Shackelford, has been aiding Mr. Matthews.

Bishop Randolph visited Christ church, Amelia Court House, on March 14th, preached and confirmed a class of four persons.

On Sunday morning, March 19th, Bishop Randolph visited Trinity church, Portsmouth, preaching an eloquent sermon and administering the rite of Confirmation to a class of 20 persons. At night the Bishop preached at St. Peter's church, Norfolk, and confirmed a class of 18.

In old St. Paul's church, Norfolk, on Good Friday night, the Bishop preached an eloquent sermon, afterwards confirming a class of 11 men and women.

On the night of March 30th, Bishop Randolph visited St. John's church, Portsmouth, preaching and confirming a class of 19 candidates. The Bishop's sermon on "The Cross" closely held the interest of his hearers. He was assisted by the rector of St. John's, the Rev. Z. S. Farland, and the Rev. J. B. Funsten.

Easter in Lynchburg

Elaborate music and beautiful floral decorations were an important feature. Large congregations were present at St. Paul's and Grace churches, where special offerings were taken up. At St. Paul's, the sum reached $2,450, while at Grace church, which has a much smaller membership, it amounted to $300. An attractive part of the children's service at St. Paul's was the erection in the chancel of a tall floral lighthouse, each of the classes contributing a section of the structure which was built during the service, and when completed, was surmounted by a floral cross, beneath which beamed an electric light.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The 62nd annual council of the diocese will be held in Trinity church, Geneva, beginning Tuesday, May 16th.

Lenten Services

The noon day Lenten services held in St. Paul's church, Buffalo, were attended by larger congregations than in any previous year, the interest being maintained up to the last day of Holy Week. In this connection, it is matter for grateful recognition that the comment of the daily press on these services was both dignified and sympathetic. In Rochester the change this year from two services a week at noon, as in former years, to a daily service at St. Luke's, was a marked success, as testified by the increased attendance.

Offerings and Gifts

St. Mary's church, Buffalo, made an offering on Easter Day of $6,000.

Five thousand dollars have been contributed by a devoted Churchwoman for the erection of a parish house for St. Peter's church, Geneva, as a memorial to the late rector, the Rev. J. Rankine, D.D.

A brass eagle lecturn of massive proportions has recently been presented to St. James' church, Batavia, a memorial to a deceased parishioner.

The Later Papal Policy

THE works of a German professor, of the Roman Catholic Church, have recently been condemned by the Pope. The strange mutations which accompany human affairs are illustrated in this action, when we reflect that the positions criticised are not very different from those once ventilated by the present Pope when he was simply Archbishop of Perugia. The professor maintained the possibility and expediency of some better understanding between the Church and modern society. But more than usual significance attaches to his condemnation, inasmuch as he quoted in support of his position the writings of certain American prelates, including Archbishop Ireland. The censure of his book is, therefore, regarded in line with the recent papal letter on "Americanism," as another indirect blow at these American prelates. The discipline so far has been of a rather gentle character, though two bishops from America, Keane and O'Connell, are even now retained in honorable retirement at Rome, a fate which it is not impossible may yet overtake the frank and irrepressible Ireland himself. At present, to outward seeming, the chances are evenly balanced between that result of his labors and a cardinal's hat.

BUT while the Vatican is pursuing a careful policy in this country, there is little question that in general a radical change has come over the relations of the venerable pontiff to the questions of most pressing importance which the Church has to encounter in the modern world. Professor Flamingo, in The Contemporary for February, traces the history of this change from the large and conciliatory spirit of the earlier period of Pope Leo's pontificate, to that shown at the present time. That earlier policy, which aroused the interest if not the hopes of the Christian world, has given place, it would seem, to an undisguised reactionary tendency. Professor Flamingo dates the change from the time when on the death of Cardinal Jacobini, Cardinal Rampolla succeeded him as papal secretary of State. There is certainly, on the surface, a broad contrast between the earliest of the numerous encyclicals on the unity of Christendom, and that on Anglican Orders two or three years ago. In the former, there was a marked avoidance of "every subject or allusion that could in any way have offended the prejudices or the amour propre of non-Catholics." But in the latter, there is a return to the old stereotyped position of the Papacy of the past. The arguments of the popes of the sixteenth century are reaffirmed, and where they failed, an entirely new argument is brought forward and elaborated. Anything must be resorted to rather than admit that the orders of the English Church are even possibly valid. That utterance has settled the question of the reunion of Christendom, so far as Rome is concerned, for many a long year to come. No platitudes from that source on that subject are likely to be received in future as having any serious significance.

A SIMILAR change is observed in the Pope's attitude on the subject of Christian democracy. He began in his famous encyclical, "Rerum Novarum," and in various allocutions to workingmen's pilgrimages, by warmly encouraging the democracy. He ends by silence, or by censure, upon any particular development in this direction. The theories of the "Rerum Novarum" appear to have been virtually disowned, and the Papacy now for a long time has sought alliances with emperors and governments, rather than with the people. If Professor Flamingo is right, the first noble enthusiasm for humanity has given place to a narrow political policy. The promise of this pontificate to introduce a new era in the history of the Papacy is fast being extinguished, and greater causes are lost sight of in the one aim of recovering the temporal power. "In short," says Professor Flamingo, "we must arrive at this surprising conclusion; namely, that the holy see, instead of giving its attention to the spiritual needs of humanity, instead of dedicating itself to the progress of civilization, and to the comfort and welfare of the poor, is devoting all its energies and all its attention to regaining possession of a few square kilometres of land, or, in other words, of the temporal power!"

Shall We Drift?

CHRISTIAN Unity is much talked about, but we confess we see very few signs of its coming. The Presbyterians, after one achievement in that line years ago, have been unable to go one step further in the direction of healing the breaches among them. Multitudinous varieties of Methodists continue to exist. Even the geographical distinction of North and South still remains. As to Lutheranism, its very genius tends to subdivision. And so of all the other most notable sectarian names. We hear of no establishment of organic relations between those which, in origin and theological tenets are most closely allied. Sectarian jealousy, though it assumes new forms, is, in its essence, as rife as ever. With a curious obliquity of logical vision, ministers exchange pulpits with those of other denominations with a tacit agreement to suppress their peculiar convictions. They fail apparently to see that this is an admission that the peculiar principles of their sects are, after all, of no vital consequence, and that, therefore, such sects have no right to exist. But, on the other hand, let the Presbyterians or Congregationalists set on foot a "Christian Endeavor" society, and proclaim it as loudly as possible "non-sectarian," or "undenominational," the Methodists, instead of hailing such a universal solvent, and, in fact, implying that the profession of neutrality is not true, make haste to establish an "Epworth League." The Baptists in like manner organize a Young People's Union. Each is determined to preserve its own people from the malign influences of the other. We fail to see, when the facts are squarely faced, any real friendliness to the idea of organic unity.

YET, without doubt, there are movements going on, and movements of importance, which, we are told, show, in a larger and more general way, a marked trend toward an ultimate unity of Christians, at least here in America. We have lately read such words as these: "Foremost among these trends of thought is reaction against an excessively metaphysical theology, which erected speculations into systems that left outside the pale all who could not assent to them as final. To-day the aspiration everywhere is less for an ultimate Christian metaphysic than for a fuller Christian life." Again: "The readjustment of ideas, the new definitions necessary to save the supernatural while making just acknowledgment of the humane element, are bringing Churches once widely separated closer together, through a common effort to meet a common emergency." That "the excessively metaphysical theology which erected speculations into systems," includes the theology of the Catholic Creeds and the doctrinal decisions of the Ecumenical Councils seems plain from the writer's allusion to the "great speculative discussion of the patristic period into which the Church was forced in her controversy with error," which "issued in dogmas which saved the divinity of our Lord, but almost hid from men His real and tender humanity"; and to the necessity of returning "from metaphysical speculations."

NOW we fully acknowledge the necessity of returning from metaphysical speculations in theology, or speculations of any sort, as terms of communion. Such speculations have been erected into dogmas in modern times by John Calvin, and many other founders of sects. It is a mark of the period that those dogmas are losing their hold upon men just in proportion as they come to see that they are of merely human origin. This is very well. But the trouble is that, divesting themselves of these dogmas, they are substituting nothing for them. It is very clear, from popular literature, that Calvinism is commonly confounded with the Christianity of the ancient Church. The only refuge then is the "Bible only," but the discussions of the day have shaken confidence in the Bible, and there is nothing left to fall back upon except this vague prattle about "a fuller Christian life." But the fuller Christian life is not a growing feature of our times. Any one of the slightest observation or experience must be aware that the lives of a large proportion of the people who bear the Christian name, are not exhibiting any marked increase of fullness, at least in a religious sense.

THE implications of the article from which we have quoted, seem to us very serious, and as they are clearly enough the starting point of much of the reunion sentiment among ourselves, they are worth careful attention. In the first place, the American Church appears to be counted as one among the Protestant sects of the land. It owes its theology, like them, to metaphysical speculation. Like them, it must readjust its ideas and frame new definitions. Especially must it return from the patristic speculations about the Deity of Christ, and have a "fresh and vivid vision of His humanity." We deny these implications. As part of the one Holy Catholic, Apostolic, and Historic Church, this Church refuses to be classed with the sects, whether of ancient or modern origin. To recede here would be to stultify ourselves, and give up the claims which furnish our excuse for being. It is also contrary to the position of the Church to represent her theology, expressed in the Catholic Creeds and the Councils which the Church has universally accepted, as the outcome of metaphysical speculation, and thus merely a product of fallible human thought.

THE really instructive and illuminating fact is to observe to what a remarkable degree the Church of the patristic period in the formal definitions of the Councils, refused to indulge in speculations, and contented herself with stating the great facts of revelation. If men through metaphysical speculation denied the Deity of the Eternal Son, the Church asserted it. If in reaction from this, they denied the true humanity, again she asserted that. The great Council of Chalcedon places these two great truths side by side. Precisely what the Church does not do is to attempt to explain the unexplainable. The mystery of the Incarnation admits of statement, very clear and explicit statement, but it does not admit of explanation. The union of the divine and human in One Divine Person is a mystery which it is not possible to comprehend in its profoundest aspects. It is one of those great foundation facts which present to faith a double truth. These two elements, the heavenly and earthly, may be separately apprehended, but the problem of their combination cannot be solved by the human intellect. It has recently been alleged as a defect in the early Church, that she failed to solve this mighty problem, that even in the decrees of Chalcedon this solution is not effected. In fact, the Church did not attempt any such solution. Her office was, through the great Councils, to state the two truths, the truth of the Divinity, and the counter-truth of the Humanity, and to guard the integrity of each by expressing a certain necessary relation. Beyond this she could not and would not go. But when it is indicated that in her zeal to vindicate the Divine, she neglected or obscured the truth of the human in Christ, we reply that the history of monophysitism, and afterwards of the monothelite controversy, prove the contrary.

DOUBTLESS many things which men have held, speculations which controversialists and individual theologians have insisted upon as true, and to which they have tried to give a place in the realm of dogmatic theology, may have to be given up or readjusted, but this is not the case with the Catholic Creeds, the doctrinal statements of the Ecumenical Councils, or any of the things which, as involved in the Faith once delivered to the saints, have from the beginning been universally held as part of the sacred deposit. These things the Church holds, not from man, but under the guidance of the Holy Ghost. As to the unity of Christendom, it will not be promoted by proving to the world that we hold our Christian Faith subject to change, according to the demands of human thought or whim in every age. The Church is always able to minister to the needs of human nature, and for that purpose to bring forth out of her treasures things new and old, new adaptations, old and unchangeable truths. Nothing is to be gained by evaporating the strong statements of a divinely authorized dogmatic system into a thin and intangible mist, nor yet by turning from the positive Faith to aspirations after a fuller Christian life, as if the latter had no need of the former. If there is ever to be any renewal of a Christian Unity worth the having in this land, at present so distressfully torn by religious division, it will be through a common attraction to a centre which has something in it that is firm and unshaken. Such a movement can never have any satisfactory result through the way of compromise. The greatest influence in bringing about a true Catholic unity, will be a body which shows itself ever confident of a divine mission, which has the courage of intense conviction, and the consciousness of a divine life. It is to a "kingdom which cannot be moved," that men will finally come when the things in which they have trusted begin to fail.

Father Austin and His Teachings.-XV.

BY THE RT. REV. DR. McLAREN,

FATHER AUSTIN often urged his people to ask him questions, a privilege which some of them did not fail to embrace. These questions ranged "from grave to gay, from lively to severe." Some of them were answered according to their folly, but with the good intent to make wisdom more attractive. He was ever prompt and ready to reply, and could not have done better had he enjoyed hours in which to prepare an answer.

A young lady from his own State of Connecticut who was teaching in the high school had an inquiring mind, and was much impressed by an Advent Sunday sermon, in which he advised every one to choose a spiritual motto for the year ecclesiastical, upon which they were that day entering; but she neglected to do so, through having been much occupied with the examinations of her pupils. Not long after the Feast of the Epiphany she met her rector at the door of the church, and said she was trying to fasten upon a motto for the year.

"Well, my child," replied Father Austin, "at this speed the year will run out before you get your motto. What procrastination!"

The smile with which he said it robbed the rebuke of its smart, and forestalled the irritation of a temper that was known to ruffle that fair brow at times. Children will tell tales out of school! But Father Austin was, as he thought, particularly qualified to sympathize with that kind of mental agility which our forefathers called choler, and that was the reason why he "sugar-coated" his rebuke with a smile. The artifice had good result, for Priscilla of the thin lips and eyes that flashed, returned smile for smile, and begged her spiritual pastor to choose for her a motto that should take in at a word the whole duty of a Christian, if such a word there were!

"And there is!"

"Then give it me, Father Austin!"

"It is this: 'I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.'"

Just what was the significance of this command, as applied to her, did not appear; and she was about to ask an explanation, when the chimes began to ring for Evensong, and the good priest turned towards the sacristy; but the desired explanation came soon, for, strangely enough, the first lesson that evening was Genesis xvii: 1 to 23, and at the proper time the rector made an address on the first verse: "And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect."

Father Austin reverently alluded to these words as a birthday motto given of God to the old man who was nearing the end of his first century of years. What motto could have been more appropriate or beautiful? What more inclusive of every known duty? To walk before the Lord was thus inclusive, and well did the father of many nations, our father through faith, walk in that way. There is no other way. To walk before the Lord is to recognize His Presence continually. This is the very foundation of practical religion, for he who lives as seeing God shall attain perfection, with impossibility of default. St. Chrysostom contended that if we keep ourselves in God's Presence we shall think no evil, we shall say no evil, we shall do no evil.

But if faith's vision of the Presence is the foundation of the spiritual life, the vision presupposes love. It is love only which can truly walk before God. Fear may seek out the Presence when danger is nigh, and tremble as it cries for pity and help; but fear is nothing better than self-love in straits, and feels no drawings towards God when immediate distress or danger passes. What a despicable thing it is to neglect God when all goes well, and then, when only He can help, to turn to Him as the last resort. It does not appertain to mortal man to assign limits to anything so divinely mysterious as the forbearance and patience of God toward those who thus insult Him; but we may righteously condemn their conduct, and pray for them and for ourselves that we may serve Him with a generous affection all our days. It is possible to know God only by loving Him. It is possible to love Him only by loving Him for His own sake—not for the benefits it brings, not for future reward, but because His character constrains us to love. It is passing strange how many there are who never find God out, nor try to, who never come to know how glorious He is, and how irresistible the attraction of His Being is to those who do seek and find. They see Him to be Love, and their love is the recognition of His. They realize that, for all that He is, faith is not a sufficient response of appreciation, nor hope, which cannot sing the Te Deum that is His due; it is charity (love) only which can answer back in kind the wonderfulness of His love, and therefore it is love alone which has the power to keep the soul abiding in His Presence.

It may be objected that it is impossible to keep our attention consciously applied to the Divine Presence every moment. Certainly it is not possible. God has fashioned us with limitations as well in our intellectual as in our physical being. We cannot be in two places at one time, neither can we think of two things at one time. Thought has the velocity of light, but it is consecutive. It is therefore true that one could not engage in direct contemplation of God without intermissions and to the exclusion of all other objects of thought. A thousand duties press upon us, some of them most importunate, and to discharge them, entire concentration of the faculties becomes necessary, during which it may be said of us that God is not in our thoughts, in the sense of the conscious elevation of the soul to His Presence. But this does not create a difficulty. We have limitations, and must accept them. He who made us expects us to observe the laws of our being. What He forbids is that we shall engage in other duties or plunge into other absorptions without holding strongly to the intention of doing everything that we do as in His sight and unto Him, that He may be honored in, and we sanctified by, all that we do.

There is not any danger of our spending so much thought upon our Heavenly Father that we shall neglect other duties. The danger is quite in the opposite direction. If we cannot be always thinking of God's Presence, it does not follow that we should think of Him only at long intervals. The length of those intervals is the curse of the Christian. We must learn to practice the Presence of God, both by direct cognition and by casting over our whole lives the general intention that whatever we do we shall do to the glory of God.

Then he went on to mention three ways in which to practice the Presence of God:

1. The way of the reason.

One of the attributes of God is His immensity. By this it is meant that nothing exists save in Him. "In Him we live and move and have our being." All finite things, reason teaches, are included in His infinitude. Nothing by virtue of its greatness is too great, nothing by virtue of its insignificance is too small. They are in Him as fish are in the ocean, and yet their finiteness does not impart itself to Him, nor does His infinitude impart itself to them. They are creatures; He, the great Creator-Spirit, and although they are inclosed in His spirituality, there accrues to Him neither pain nor suffering nor composition of nature nor derogation of His holiness. It would then be contrary to reason to infer His absence. "Whither shall I go from Thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from Thy Presence?"

Not only are we God-inclosed, but we do, for like reasons, believe that we inclose God. He is more really and essentially within our souls than our souls are within our bodies. He is the Soul of our souls, the Spirit of our spirits. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?"

Let us linger long on the thought that God is living His life within us in an abiding fellowship; that there is a real mingling of the two without loss of identity, and that He is within us for our good, perfectly sincere and wise in all that He does. Then, touched and melted by the wonderfulness of this companionship, let us seek a word that shall express our spiritual stupidity and sin in refusing to recognize this indwelling Presence.

Reason also teaches that as we are in God and God in us, so He dwells within all His creatures and they in Him. How impossible, then, it would be to escape from His Presence. Well might St. Augustine present the challenge: "If you wish to sin, seek the place where God will not see you, and if you can find it, do what you wish!"

2. By way of the imagination.

We can cultivate a constant sense of the Presence of God by disposing the mind to conceive of Him in His manifestations. We could imagine ourselves standing with Moses before the bush which burned and was not consumed, a symbol of the Presence of Him whom eye hath not seen. We might think ourselves to be bowed at the foot of Sinai, "because the Lord descended upon it in fire," or in that temple of apocalyptic vision which was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from His power.

But still more helpful would it be to think of ourselves as blessed with a place in the presence of the great Manifestation, to think of Him as the child on the bosom of Madonna, or as the young carpenter at Nazareth, or the boy disputing with the doctors, or the miracle-worker, or the teacher upon the mountains, or the tried one in the desert, or the suppliant in the garden, or the sufferer at the pillar, the victim on the Cross, the silent occupant of Joseph's tomb, the Risen One of Easter. The strong impression thus made upon the mind should abide with us for hours, and help us to feel that the Lord is very near. This exercise would accustom us to familiar intercourse with Him, as if He were at our very side, walking with us as He walked with His Apostles, and receiving our prayers, our aspirations, our protestations of love. He that desires to walk before God and be perfect, let him cultivate this adorable companionship, for its fruits are most precious and its joys most elevating.

3. The way of the altar.

The most sacred humanity of our Lord is at the right hand of God in heaven, and is not omnipresent as to its natural state; but as to its sacramental state, it is in a wonderful mystery present in the Sacrament which He instituted ere He was crucified. Here He makes good His promise to be with the Church to the end of the world. Here He manifests His glory, here reveals the beauty of His glorified Countenance, here dispenses to His disciples greater blessings than heart can conceive. In this sacramental visitation, although hidden behind the veils of material signs, He makes His whole Person over to our souls and bodies, and thereby establishes with firmer grace the sanctifying union of these with Himself, according to His Word—"He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in Him."

Such were the main points of the address. It concluded with an impassioned plea for greater reality in our relations with the Infinite Spirit, more concentrated recognition of His Presence, more purity of intention to please Him in all that we do.

Not many were in the church that evening, but all felt their hearts burn within them, as though they had walked with Jesus on the way to Emmaus. One who was there chose her motto for the year, and it has been her motto every year since.

The Resurrection

THE Resurrection has brought us so near to the unseen universe that we see it as our own country, where our higher interests and relations are. The haze is dispersed which lay on the landscape in which we saw, as weird spectres of the Brocken, the journeyings, the meadows, the judges at the cross-roads, the fates, the transmigration. We see the eternal in the Trinity of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, which gives to the country the family feeling, and the family is the paradise of country and home.

"In my Father's country are many stations; I go to prepare the next station for you; there we shall meet; a little while and ye shall not see me, and again a little while and ye shall see me." This earth station in the flesh, in the visible of matter, force, life, is a realm of the fatherland; and the next station, in the invisible of these same elements, is adjacent, over the hills and behind the sunset and beyond the sky. The visible and invisible are one demesne, and death joins them as the isthmus which joins two continents. A marriage joins two hearts once divided, and the experience of the Resurrection power is pictured as the wedding of the visible and invisible estates. We take our lamps and go forth to meet the bridegroom. The lofty conditions are the hardest fates, and it is because we are climbing up into one of the highest eminences that death becomes the hard fate it looks.

Progress is the simple idea of our future, which we have obtained; continuity is the simple plan; personal identity is the simple hope. The air is quite clear. The future is a scene of labor, service, sacrifice, as here. We drop love to take it up again; we drop service to find another manner of it; we drop the tools of wood and iron, and the methods of steam and electricity, for tools of the unseen in matter and force. We meet with beauty and love in their own native land.

The evolution of the conservation idea took its more ideal form in the bold paradox of the Master: The dead are not dead, and death is not death; death is a moment in life, an incident of being; it is the point of junction between the seen and unseen of us, now in a grating friction. "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and he in whom the Resurrection is translated into experience never dies—death is only a seeming.* The experience of men looking westwards towards the dipping sun, who have told us their interest in the landscape of the unseen, affirms the deathless death. The researches of biology are into life, and the closing phases of it are the sincerest, and the evening air of it is the calmest. Blake, poet and artist, says he "was going to a country he had all his life wished to see." Kingsley says: "God forgive me, but I look forward to it [death] with an intense and reverent curiosity." Faraday, explorer of physical forces, asked about his theories, says: "They are now over, and I am resting on certainties. I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him." Buckland, with a humor not far from pathos, and with a true scientific instinct of unseen modes of life, said: "God is so good, so very good to the little fishes, I don't believe He will let their inspector suffer shipwreck at last; I am going on a long journey, when I think I shall see a great many curious animals." Dr. Stewart, of Ballahulish, who has written charming books on the folk-lore of the Scottish Highlands, tells us that he once asked a rustic parishioner, "When did your father die?" He was answered with indignation, "Men, women, and children do not die, and are not to be spoken of as dead. They shift from this scene, they depart, they change, they sleep, if you like, and are gathered unto their fathers." And Tennyson, like the Gaelic rustic, knows death as the time "when that which drew from out the boundless deep turns again home."

An unearthly splendor breaks out on the Alps, when eight or ten domes, cones, obelisks, lifting their heads in the eastern sky, above a range of mountains miles long, are lit up by the rosy glow of the setting sun, while the huge mass of the mountains and the deep valleys are in shadow. But it is the shadowed mass which holds up the peaks to the evening rose. We look with delight and hope on select spirits who have seen lovingly the fatherland from these shores, but they are only the summits of the general level of heightened life which has been lifted by the pressure of the Resurrection force.

When the religious faculty received impression from the worship of Christ, then our future unfolded into a certainty and into a scheme of beautiful thought. It passed the stage of gleam and hint. In the ancient world the intimations of immortality were everywhere, but mostly indistinct and awful. The Hebrew would not speak of it; the Greek argued it out with metaphysics, and as often wavered; the Roman was like the Greek. Euripides suggested, "Who knows that death is life and life is death?" Tacitus suspected, closing his affectionate monograph of Agricola, "If, as the good and wise affirm, men live on and never die, Agricola is among the immortals." But Paul uses the language of assertion and desire—"For we know that when our earthly house of this tabernacle is dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven."—W. W. Peyton in Contemporary Review.

Beside the Sepulchre

Beside my dear Lord's sepulchre,
I'll watch until the morning break;
Nor will I leave the sacred tomb
Until the Prince of Life awake;
Nor long nor dark the hours will be
While I, dear Lord, am close to Thee.

I shall not fear the beasts of night,
Nor storm clouds gathering o'er the hill;
For well I know that He who sleeps
Rebukes the winds and they were still;
Nor man nor demon will I fear
The while I watch His sepulchre.

In vain the city's far-off light
Shall lure me from my hiding-place;
I shall not stir nor leave the spot
Till I behold my Master's face.
Until my Risen Lord I see,
This hallowed rock my home shall be.

Letters to the Editor

"OUR ROUNDED DUTY AND SERVICE"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

With regard to the rubric which commands the faithful to make their Communion at least thrice a year, in addition to what W. L. D. has urged, I should like, with your permission, to point out: 1. That before the Reformation on account of the habit people had fallen into of attending at Mass, and never communicating, a canon had been passed directing that all should communicate at least once a year. The rubric inserted by our reformers was therefore a step in advance, an attempt to get people to communicate more frequently. 2. It is often overlooked that in Elizabeth's reign, sad to relate, the Blessed Sacrament was made a test of loyalty. The wardens were bound by law to present annually the names of all who had failed to communicate. Naturally they could only take into account Communions made at a parishioner's own church. This rubric was probably partly intended to assist the wardens in this duty, and so cannot be understood as indicating a minimum number of Communions, but only the minimum number which must be made at the person's parish church. For various reasons, it might be more convenient for a person to attend the services of a church in another parish, but even if he communicated there every Sunday, he had still failed to obey this rubric, which required him, however often he communicated elsewhere, to communicate at least three times in the year, of which Easter should be one, at his own parish church. This rubric therefore, cannot, it seems to me, be fairly understood to justify infrequent Communion.

"LOW SUNDAY"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

In answer to the query of F., "why should the octave of Easter Day be termed Low Sunday?" I would venture to reply: Easter has always been observed with a solemn octave, both because it is the direct Christian counterpart of the Jewish Passover, and on account of its dignity as the "Queen of Festivals." For this reason the first Sunday after Easter is called "Low Sunday," as being a "little lower" only than the feast itself.

"The Ritual Reason Why," furnishes this information, and answers the question so constantly asked: What mean ye by these things?

J. HOLWELL GEARE.

Cape Vincent, N. Y., April 8.

To the Editor of The Living Church:

In the letter to the Editor, of your to-day's issue I read under "Low Sunday" that Quasimodo geniti, the name of the 1st Sunday after Easter, is derived from the beginning of the Epistle of the day. This is a mistake, and the name is taken, as in fact most of the old Latin names of the Sundays throughout the year, from the Introit of the day, in this case being from I Peter, ii: 1, 2:

"Quasimodo geniti infantes, Alleluia!
Rationabile sine dolo las concupiscite!
Alleluia, Alleluia, Alleluia!"

"As new-born babes, Alleluia,
Desire the sincere milk of the Word!
Alleluia, Alleluia, Alleluia!"

The Vulgate renders these words, "Stout-modo," instead of "Quasimodo."

Personal Mention

The Rev. Geo. P. Armstrong has been transferred to the diocese of Newark, where he has charge of Christ church, Stanhope, N. J.

The Bishop of Quincy does not gain strength, and will remain at St. Alban's, Vt. He requests all post-office matter to be addressed to him there.

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley has been placed in full charge of St. Mark's church, New York city, since the vacancy in the rectorship. He has resigned the vicarship of the chapel.

The Rev. John Brown has resigned his charge of St. Andrew's-In-the-East, Cleveland, Ohio, to take effect at Easter.

The Rev. Andreas Bard has accepted the rectorship of St. Paul's church, Walla Walla, Wash.

The Rev. Marcus H. Carroll has resigned the charge of Trinity chapel, Woodford's, Me, and accepted the position of assistant to the Rev. W. G. Davenport, rector of Emmanuel church, Anacostia, Washington, D. C.

The Rev. Ernest J. Dennen has resigned the position of assistant at St. John's, East Boston, Mass., and will take work in Trinity church, Newport, R. I.

The Rev. Isaac Dawson, of Grant's Pass, Ore., and the Rev. Charles Booth, of Newport, Ore., have exchanged work for a year. Mr. Booth, having been at the coast for 12 years, seeks the change for the benefit of his health.

The Rev. George William Douglas, D. D., has been appointed commencement preacher at the University of the South.

The Rev. James Ward Gilman, of Racine, has accepted a call to Grace church, Menomonie, Wis., in succession to the Rev. W. B. Thorn.

The Rev. A. A. Lamb has become assistant at the House of Prayer, Branchtown, Philadelphia, the Rev. George Bringham, rector.

The Rev. G. W. Preston has accepted work as general missionary in the diocese of Springfield, under Bishop Hale, to begin Apr. 16th.

The Rev. Geo. F. Smythe has resigned the rectorship of St. Paul's church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

The Rev. W. T. Snead has resigned the charge of All Saints' church, De Lamar, Nev., to accept that of Christ church, Aspen, Colo.

The Rev. Colin C. Tate is serving as chaplain of Kemper Hall, Kenosha, Wis.

The Rev. Erskine Wright, of Philadelphia, has accepted the rectorship of Christ church, Danville, diocese of Central Pennsylvania.

The Rev. F. C. H. Wendel, Ph. D., has accepted the appointment of the Bishop to the work of St. Paul's church, Huntington, Conn. He has been in charge since Quinquagesima Sunday, and expects to go into residence there very soon.

The address of the Rev. B. E. Whipple, now rector of St. John's church, is Altmar, N. Y.

The Rev. John I. Yellott is in charge of St. Mark's and Mt. Calvary churches, Howard County (with postoffice at Highland), Md., and not St. Mark's parish, Frederick and Washington Counties, Md., as incorrectly reported in some of our Church papers. The Rev. Edw. T. Helfferstein is, and has been, rector of the latter parish for the last nine years.

To Correspondents

S. B. D.—We regret that we cannot recall the name for which you inquire.

SACERDOS EXPECTANS.—We are unable to give the names and addresses of persons who have left us for Rome and have returned to us again. We doubt whether any record has been kept. At the same time, cases of the kind have not been infrequent. Perhaps the most conspicuous instance was that of Dr. Forbes who went to Rome and was a priest of that Communion for ten years. He then returned, and afterwards became dean of the General Seminary in New York.

DRUMMER.—(1). The only reason we know against the use of the term "Mass" as applied to the Holy Eucharist, is that it has long been monopolized by the Roman Catholics as the name of that Sacrament, and its use among us is thought to savor of Romanizing tendencies. (2). We can hardly give a "doctrinal" reason against the use of incense, which is said by St. John to denote "the prayers of the saints"; i. e., as we suppose, sanctified worship. The objection to it is, as above, that it is used in the services of the Roman Church.

Official

THE annual C. A. I. L. sermon this year will be preached in St. George's church, Stuyvesant square, by the Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D. D., rector of that church, on Sunday evening, April 30th. On that Sunday, clergymen in every diocese, whether C. A. I. L. members or not, are requested to preach on the interests of labor from any standpoint that appeals to them and also to give some account of the object and work of C. A. I. L. The secretary, Room 62, 231 Fourth ave., will be glad to furnish information to any clergymen who are willing to comply with this request.

Died

BIRD.—Suddenly, on the 25th inst., the Rev. G. C. Bird, late rector of St. Martin's church, Marcus Hook, Pa.

CORNING.—At Albany, N. Y., on Easter Sunday, April 2, 1899, Mary Parker Corning, widow of the late Erastus Corning.

WILMER.—At Colorado Springs, Colo., on March 19, 1899, in the 28th year of his age, John Ringgold Wilmer, son of the late Rev. Geo. T. Wilmer, D. D., and brother of the Rev. C. B. Wilmer, of Price Hill Cincinnati.

Appeals

(Legal title [for use in making wills]: THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.)

Domestic missions in seventeen missionary districts and forty-one home dioceses: missions among the colored people; missions among the Indians; foreign missions in China, Japan, Africa, Greece, and Haiti; support of the clergyman of this Church appointed to counsel and guide the presbyters and readers in Mexico.

Provision must be made for the salaries and traveling expenses of twenty-four bishops, and stipends of 1,700 missionary workers, besides the support of schools, orphanages, and hospitals. Contributions are, moreover, asked specifically for the salaries of workers and support of schools in Mexico. One thousand dollars per month is the estimate of such expenses.

Remittances should be made to MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer, 231 Fourth ave., New York. At present, please address communications to the REV. JOSHUA KIMBER, associate secretary.

Wishes

BY MARGARET DOORIS

Lighter than down of the thistle
That summer winds blow,
Or the waft of each white, airy flake
Of the winter-time's snow,
Are the wishes we make,—
From whither? and where do they go?

The wishes that fall from the lips
Without thought, have no cost,
Unhallowed by word of a prayer,
Waft away, tempest tossed,
In no sunshine have share—
In clouds or in mist they are lost.

But the wishes, all good from the heart,
Swift winged like a dove,
Soar up with each sweet, cheery tone,
To the country above,
Until at the foot of His throne
Wait the fervent wishes of love.

There, touched by His hand and His smile,
Into blessings they grow,
And flowers that evermore bloom;
Then the angels bear them below
To brighten our pathway through gloom.

London, Ohio.

THE REV. JOHN HENRY HOPKINS whose portrait appears on our cover page, was born at Burlington, Vt., in 1861. He is a grandson and namesake of the late Rt. Rev. John Henry Hopkins, first Bishop of Vermont, who was for many years the Presiding Bishop of the American Church. His father was the late Rev. Theodore Austin Hopkins, first principal of the Vermont Episcopal Institute, at Burlington, where his mother is still living. The Rev. Mr. Hopkins was fitted for college at his father's military school, and was graduated from the University of Vermont with the class of 1883. He at once went to California, and engaged in business. In the summer of 1887, he went to New York City, and entered the General Theological Seminary, graduating with the class of 1890. During his seminary course he was organist of the seminary chapel, and one of the lay-workers of Calvary parish, the present Bishop of Washington being then rector. On graduating from the seminary, he was ordered deacon at St. Paul's church, Burlington, Vt. Soon afterwards, he married Miss Marie Moulton Graves, eldest daughter of the Rev. Gemont Graves, of Burlington, and one of the descendants of Bishop Philander Chase, the first Bishop of Illinois, and a member of the well-known Church family to which belong the Bishop of Laramie, Mr. Edward Lowe Temple, and many others who are devoted to the Church and her work. The Rev. and Mrs. Hopkins at once took up their residence in New York City, working in Calvary chapel, where Mr. Hopkins was assistant to the Rev. Benjamin Brewster, now at Colorado Springs. In the spring of 1891, after being ordered priest by Bishop Potter, at the seminary chapel, Mr. Hopkins was called to St. James' parish, Chicago, where he was for nearly two years the first assistant, the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr., being rector. From Chicago, the Rev. Mr.

and Mrs. Hopkins were called in April, 1893, to Atchison, Kas., where they resided for a little more than two years, taking part in much diocesan work, as well as in the work of Trinity parish, Atchison. One of the permanent results of this work is the parish house, built in the fall of 1894. In July, 1895, they went to Christ Church parish, St. Joseph, West Missouri, the work which they now leave to return to Chicago. Mr. Hopkins was a deputy to the last General Convention, where Mrs. Hopkins was also a delegate to the Woman's Auxiliary, in which work she has taken an active interest. For three years, during his St. Joseph rectorate, he wrote the weekly Bible Lessons in St. Andrew's Cross.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

THERE is no single day of the week which is not accepted by some portion of the human race as the "day of rest." For example: Christians, Sunday; Greeks, Monday; Persians, Tuesday; Assyrians, Wednesday; Egyptians, Thursday; Turks, Friday; Jews, Saturday.

"Oh, give me!"—'twas in rhyme he sighed—

"Within your heart a place!"

The literary lass replied,

"Declined for lack of space."

--Stamford Daily Advocate.

THE Lancet, the leading medical journal of Great Britain, if not of the world, has this to say of medical missions: "We can imagine no career more lofty or honorable than that of a well-informed, capable, and courageous medical missionary. A few hundred of such men in the next half century would powerfully affect the history of China, India, and Africa. If men of commerce would give as good an account of their work in these lands as men of medicine, the evangelization of the world would be hastened."

JULIAN RALPH, in Harper's Magazine, says: "An American's first month in England is a sore trial of his nerves. Every succeeding month is more and more a rest. As long as you expect to do anything, get anything, or reach anywhere in a hurry, you are on the rack of despair. Once you realize the folly of trying to reform thirty-eight millions of easy-going, deliberate people, you begin to feel grateful for the calm and peace and restfulness they carry about with them like an atmosphere."

WHY should not the veterans of learning be pensioned as well as the veterans of war? Harvard University has during the last eighteen years been building up a fund for the purpose of pensioning professors, and has now adopted a plan for regular retiring allowance for professors and assistant professors who have served the institution for twenty years or more. This is a most gratifying sign of educational progress.

ALONG with Saxon arts we shall find a startling survival of Saxon speech among the Appalachian mountaineers, says President Frost in The Atlantic. The rude dialect of the mountains is far less a degradation than a survival. The Saxon pronoun "hit" holds its place almost universally. Strong past tenses, "holp" for helped,

"drug" for dragged, and the like, are heard constantly; and the syllabic plural is retained in words in -st and others. The greeting as we ride up to a cabin is: "Howdy, strangers. 'Light and hitch your beasties." Quite a vocabulary of Chaucer's words, which have been dropped by polite lips, but which linger in these solitudes, has been made out by some of our students. "Pack" for carry, "gorm" for muss, "feisty" for full of life, impertinent, are examples.

THERE is a certain mass of stock phrases, anecdotes always related in the same words, standing illustrations, and the like, which are of the nature of literature, and might be called the literature of the illiterate. As an instance of this, we recently jotted down the following apothegm of a mountain preacher: 'Yeou caynt help a-havin' bad thoughts come inter yer heads, but yeou hain't no necessity fer ter set 'em a cheer.' The saying was repeated in a gathering of ministers in the East, and an aged man who was born in England, said that he had heard the same thing from an unlearned country preacher when he was a boy. Doubtless that saying has been passed from mouth to mouth for generations."

IT is a curious fact, taken in connection with the hostility displayed by some Irish Church people towards the cross, that the word itself should be of Irish origin, according to Part VII. of the new English Dictionary, as noticed by a reviewer in The Guardian. The word in its present form may still remind us that Irish missionaries once bore an important part in the Christianizing of England. The form cross seems to have been first used in the North and East of England, in that part of the country which was occupied by the Danes, and was probably borrowed directly from the old Norse form kross; compare such northern-place names as Crosby, Crosthwaite. It was through Irish missionaries that Danes and Norsemen first came into contact with Christianity, and the Norse form kross is simply adopted from the old Irish crois, which had been directly borrowed from the Latin crucem. The native English name for "cross" had been rod, whence, rood in rood-screen, Holyrood, etc., and the French form in England was crois after the Conquest; but the English and the French words have long disappeared from the standard language, and "cross" is the only survivor.—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.

DR. HARRIS, United States Commissioner of Education, gave recently interesting statistics as to the efforts to overcome the illiteracy of the South. In 1876-'77, the enrollment in the schools of the Southern States was a little more than 14 per cent. of the whole population, white and colored included; five years later, it had risen to 17 per cent.; in 1892, to 21½ per cent., and in 1897, despite the five years of special business depression, it reached 21½ per cent. of the population. The length of the school year in the rural section has also increased from 91 to 106 days' duration.

THE Clothing and House-Furnishing Bureau of Pittsburgh is an enterprise founded four years ago by some good Churchwomen for the benefit of their poorer neighbors. Cast-off clothing and second-hand furniture are received from those who have no further use for them, and put into such good condition as is possible, and then sold to worthy persons who are known to the management and their friends. Mrs. F. A. Sawyer says in her report: "The prices are moderate, and the articles are often very good. A bunch of tape for a penny, a cooking stove for a dollar, a bed, a hair brush, a wash tub, a suit of clothes, a warm bed comfort, a pair of shoes, a cradle, a penny bundle of pieces of new cloth, muslin or calico, much in demand, give but a faint indication of the variety sold. The purchasers are needy, and many buy these things who would not seek charity or accept it. One mother told the writer that for two years her children could not have gone to school but for the shoes and clothes she had been able to buy of the Bureau." The money received from these sales has amounted to nearly $1,000 in the four years, and has been used to give employment to poor women. The store is open every Saturday afternoon.

IT is interesting to note the exact state of the English university incomes. Seventeen colleges at Cambridge have between them an income of £299,381. In addition to this, the university has an income roughly amounting to $42,000, making a total for colleges and university of £335,614. The undergraduates in residence are about 3,000. Thus, the colleges and university together enjoy an income of about £111 for every undergraduate. The position of Oxford is not quite so favorable. The income of nineteen colleges amounts to £198,800, and the income of the university to £60,000, giving a total of £258,800, and an average income of £86 for each undergraduate. But these figures, as far as they relate to the colleges, only represent endowment, and do not include other sources of income. If these latter were included, it is probable that the average income per undergraduate would be very nearly equal to that of Cambridge.

SUGGESTIONS as to new employments for women are always to the fore. The latest is the success of Miss Mona Selden whose health succumbed to the taxing duties of a school teacher, and who therefore was compelled to seek other means of livelihood. These she found in a frog farm at Friendship, N. J. Buying marshy land there at $2 an acre, she fenced it in, "spent a winter learning to hit a target the size of a frog, and now picks off frogs with a rifle as easily as she once called off the roll in her school-room, making thereby from $3,000 to $5,000 a year."

Journalistic Blunders

WE are familiar with the vagaries of the "ritualistic reporter" who gravely states that in a certain London church, seven acolytes were suspended, filled with burning incense; that Bishop Potter, on a special occasion, sat upon the altar; and that at the opening of a Mission, the usual "evening Mass" of the Episcopal Church was sung. Lately a lady of rank in England has added her contribution to the popular feeling there, by a story of a highly ritualistic vicar who rode into his church upon a donkey in a Palm Sunday procession. Accounts of Mr. Gladstone's funeral in Westminster Abbey, spoke of "the singing men, clad, some of them in plain white surplices, others, in violet stoles"! It was also stated that "up in the chancel, a bright light burned upon the altar cloth." Recently, a reporter supported his impression that a church was very ritualistic, by remarking that he saw several disused "thurifers" lying in a heap in the corner of the vestry. A daily illustrated journal this spring edited its readers with a picture of Archbishop Benson opening convocation the previous week, nearly three years after the death of that distinguished prelate. Another paper, reporting the moving utterance of Archbishop Temple on the same occasion, on the "peace that passeth all understanding," encloses the words, "loud laughter," in brackets at the end. Still another laments that it is becoming a growing practice of the clergy to imitate the Roman Catholics by "carrying the vatican to dying persons." It is hardly surprising to learn from Church Bells, from which we cull some of these choice specimens of journalism, that a guild of Church journalists has been formed with the view of securing greater accuracy and avoiding these ridiculous blunders. However, remarks one of the secular papers, by way of comment upon this undertaking, "the journalists of the country will go on maintaining the high excellence of the press, quite irrespective of the Church Guild." It is much to be feared that this will indeed be the case. It is asserted that the majority of the papers of largest circulation in England are controlled by Jews or Roman Catholics.

The Church Relief Fund

BY B. T. B.

I HAD come home, one afternoon, worn out with trying to arouse a little more life in my small mission. I had visited a number of cold, careless, indifferent communicants; I had attended a meeting of the guild, and had had the discouraging statement made to me that the ladies could do nothing just then to aid the finances of the Church, owing to house-cleaning, etc. I had said Evening-song to the customary two or three, and I felt altogether "blue." My meagre stipend was far in arrears, and the fact that several bills about town were daily increasing in size had that day been very unpleasantly forced upon my attention. These, and a notice from the landlord that he would like the rent, now long overdue, had brought things to a climax. As I sat in my study in the growing darkness, thinking how a rectory would solve most of my difficulties, I was soon dreamily picturing my little family in a cosy little parsonage, reveling in the freedom from a monthly visit of an exacting landlord, when the door burst open, and in rushed my sprightly little daughter.

"Papa, a gentleman to see you," said she, and laying a card down on my desk, she ran out as quickly as she had entered, nearly colliding with the gentleman who had closely followed at her heels. I glanced at the card, which, to my surprise, bore the name of a well-known Wall Street speculator and financier, and hurriedly rising, begged my visitor to be seated, saying at the same time: "What can I do for you, my dear sir?"

Apologizing for troubling me, he at once made the following most interesting statement:

"I am a stranger no doubt to you, except by name, and you are even more so to me. You will therefore be surprised at my visit; this, however, I can easily explain. I am an old member of St. John's church in the neighboring metropolis, but had not till recently given much thought to the practical adaptation of religious truth. The past Lent I attended the noon-hour services for business men, at which some splendid addresses were given by noted priests. One given by Dr. Spires on the Parable of the Rich Fool made, I believe, an impression on me that will last. I sat down when I returned to my office, and refusing myself to all callers, began to consider my past life. I found that I had been heaping up riches, not caring much who would inherit them, or how they had been secured; not even like the rich man in the parable, was I intent on the future possibilities of ease and luxury contained in my millions. I was simply basking in the excitement of the pursuit of riches. Mammon had me in his clutches; I was his slave, and simply piling up my bank account, being drunk with the lust of gold. Any and every scheme of the money market—more or less—iniquitous, it mattered not—was pushed to its utmost limit if it promised to increase the size and weight of my already well filled money bags. This was my life as I faced it in the solitude of my office, on the afternoon of March 1st, and as I sat and pondered, I heard a voice saying as certainly as I heard yours just now: 'Thou fool! rich indeed beyond measure towards men, but poor, miserably poor, towards thy God.' From that moment I resolved to devote my money to the betterment of those about me, and strive to act, as the preacher very forcibly declared us business men to be, a steward of God-given riches. I have therefore divided my wealth into several portions: one, for the improvement of my native town; a second for the establishment of hospitals, reading-rooms, and dwellings for the poor in the crowded metropolis; a third for the service of God; and the remainder to be divided equally among my poor and hardly known relatives and myself. Thus I trust I may make amends somewhat for my past selfish life; and the personal oversight of one or more of these funds will keep me busy, and help me to grow out of myself, and realize the truth that no man can live to himself; that is, no man worthy of the name of a man, especially if he enter truly into the spirit of this holy Passion-tide, which, thank God, I believe I am doing.

"And now I've got to where I want your assistance. I have concluded to invest $10,000,000, to form what shall be known as the 'Church Relief Fund,' the capital not to be touched, but the annual income to be applied to providing temporary churches and guild halls, and particularly rectories for needy and struggling missions. I say rectories particularly, as I have been reading lately about the starvation stipends of many and many of the clergy holding the mission stations of the Church; and I believe that if they were provided with a home—a roof over their heads—they would be able to disregard many of the other unpleasantnesses and privations attendant on their work, and so, relieved from an ever-pressing burden, rent, do much more and a nobler work for the Master. You noticed, too, no doubt, that I said temporary churches. I did so, as I have no wish to pauperize any organization, my intention being to help it get a good start, so that in a few years it will be able to care for itself as a self-sustaining parish. This work, to carry out my idea, must not be confined to any one diocese, or to any particular standard of Churchmanship; it is for the good of Christ's Church at large, and must not bear the stamp of any individualism.

"Now here is where you will come in, if you please. The Bishop has recommended me to you as to a man who is most likely to carry out my wishes, the details of which I leave in your hands if you will devote yourself to the task of managing the 'Church Relief Fund.' The income of the fund will be paid over to you to apply as you think fit, provided that under no condition, and for no purpose whatsoever, you make use of my name, or divulge my identity. You will correspond with me through my law agents, giving me quarterly a detailed statement of the application of the fund, so that I may rejoice with the relieved stations of the Church. And now, my dear sir, let me have your acceptance, and so start the work into life."

Needless to say, I sat as one confounded at the idea of such a responsibility so suddenly thrust upon my quiet life, but soon the blessedness of such a task opened as a flash upon me, and blessing God that He had chosen me as the instrument for such a noble and glorious beneficence, I accepted the work with tears of gratitude, warmly calling down the blessing of God and of the Great Head of the Church upon such a noble endeavor, and such a signal sacrifice. Assuring my visitor that my life should henceforth be devoted, entirely and solely, to the work of the fund, and solemnly pledging myself in the sight of God to be a faithful steward of the trust committed to me, I bade my noble guest "farewell," and then threw myself on my knees in renewed consecration to God and His Church.

Having soon settled my affairs in my little parish, I began the active development of the fund. I first of all moved to a city centrally situated, and there placed the headquarters of what I firmly believed would be the greatest motive power in the Church in this memorable age. Then having thus settled my family in a cosy little home, I entered into communication with a man I had long known, not only as a good Churchman, but also as a splendid designer and mechanic, to take charge of a shop in which I intended to make the necessary Church furniture, windows, doors, etc., for the sanctuaries and priests' houses, which I knew would soon be dotting the land far and wide. As one of my most determined resolves was to make the fund reach as far as possible, I intended to have all the churches, halls, rectories, etc., built to one plan, so that I could manufacture their fittings, etc., in large quantities, and therefore cheaply. I next wrote to the bishops of the dioceses in which I intended to begin work, for a list of mission stations worthy and desirous of help, and then sat down to await developments. Very soon my plan became known, and letters came in from all directions, and I was quickly on the road, personally superintending the work here, or looking into the requirements there, while my workmen at headquarters were busily fashioning the necessary furniture for the houses of God which were beginning to spring up as the fruit of the "Church Relief Fund." In sympathy, too, with my patron's ideas, I paid particular attention to the providing of rectories, never leaving a town till I had made certain that the priest of the Church was blessed with a home.

I had returned from one of my long trips, thrilled with enthusiasm for the good work going forward, and was glancing through the correspondence which had piled up in alarming proportions during my absence, when my patron suddenly appeared in my study, and warmly shaking me by the hand, exclaimed: "Thanks be to God, dear sir, for the splendid way you are using my money. I have been so delighted with the opportunity God has given me of extending His Church, that I have called to say that I have just taken the necessary steps to double the capital sum of the fund. Please God, the little struggling missions of the Church shall grow fewer and fewer, till 'the desert shall blossom as the rose.'"

"Gloria in Excelsis Deo!" I exclaimed, and springing up to grasp his hand—I awoke, and found my wife standing by my side, her hand upon my shoulder. "I am sorry to disturb your dreams, my dear," said she, especially such a pleasant one, as from a word or two you have dropped, I should imagine you have had, but the landlord has just been to say that unless we can pay the rent this week we must move, as he has a prospective tenant."

"Oh!" cried I, "for the Church Relief Fund! How long, O Lord, how long!"

Book Reviews and Notices

Social Pictorial Satire, Reminiscences and Appreciations of English Illustrators of the Past Generation. By George Du Maurier. With illustrations. New York: Harper & Bros. Price, $1.50.

Delightful book, and written by a delightful man. The illustrations are nearly all old friends, but they are very dear friends, and we welcome them with outstretched hands. The author had for a purpose an analysis of those famous etchers whom Punch introduced to us, John Leech and Charles Keene, and to speak of that craft in which he himself greatly excelled, the craft of portraying by means of little pen and ink strokes, lines, and scratches, a small portion of the world in which we live; such social and domestic incidents as lend themselves to humorous or satirical treatment; in fine, the illustrated criticism of modern life. It is needless to say that the task is well done. Du Maurier wields a pen as facile as his etching tool. He makes this very true observation: "Hogarth seems to have come nearer to the ideal pictorial satirist than any of his successors. He was not merely a light humorist and a general caricaturist, he dealt also in pathos and terror, in tragic passion, and sorrow and crime, and he often strikes chords of too deep a tone for the pages of a comic periodical."

Instinct and Reason. An Essay Concerning the Relation of Instinct to Reason, with some Special Study of the Nature of Religion. By Henry Rutgers Marshall, M. A. New York: The Macmillan Company. 1898. Price, $3.50.

It is satisfactory to find a student of the biological development of man who does not shut his eyes to one of the most important, really the most important, factor of the problem, namely, the religious instinct. The author, after an exhaustive, though somewhat discursive and laborious, discussion, fully develops the fact that the religious instinct is persistent in man, and possesses the general characteristics appearing in the higher instincts. Its function is to restrain and to subordinate the lower instincts, which are naturally more prompt and powerful in their impulses, together with those which are of individualistic import, to the instincts which have a social significance. He finds that while the function of reason is to control instinct, and thus to accomplish a variation of biological development in each individual case, we have in the religious instinct that which "must be looked upon as our highest instinct, because its function is regulative of reason, tending to bring about subordination of variation to the typical reactions lower than those expressive of the religious instinct itself, in case variation becomes overinfluential." The relation of reason to instinct in general, and to the religious instinct in particular, leads us on to the consideration of the ethical conception, its basis and active manifestation in a rule of conduct. The theory of hedonism is severely criticised, and shown to be based upon an incorrect psychological analysis. The high-sounding phrases of modern utilitarianism are devoid of meaning as practical ethical concepts. In order to the satisfaction of conscience, in each case we must so act that the remembrance of our act will show it to be harmonious with our ethical ideal. "The whole drift of our argument," the author concludes, "has made it apparent that the important consideration in the guidance of our lives is attention to, and the strengthening of, the more far-reaching and pervasive and persistent, although often less emphatic, impulses within us; and that this is necessary if we are to become efficient individuals in the racial group to which we belong, and which we hope will persist and develop in the future." "In other words, bereligious" (pp. 567-9). This argument is upon a strictly scientific basis, dealing with the principles of biological development which are accepted by the followers of the Darwinian hypothesis of evolution, and it does not deal with man as belonging now or hereafter to any other world or sphere of existence than that of this present natural life. Hence this essay is exceedingly interesting, not to say valuable, to the believer in a supernatural revelation, and in man's destiny in a future life, in that the learned author establishes the truth that even for the present life, and for man as a social being, the religious instinct is the highest factor in his development, and the basis of a reasonable ethical conduct.

A Literary History of India. By R. W. Frazer, LL. B. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Price, $4.

This volume forms one of a most interesting series called, "The Library of Literary History." It is history treated not from the standpoint of battles and conquests, and treaties, and the rise and fall of dynasties, but from the development of intellectual growth and artistic achievement. We grant that is by no means as romantic and fascinating as the motif first named, nor can it be expected that it would interest as wide a circle of readers, but it reveals to the student something at once more vital and more picturesque than the quarrels of rival Parliaments. The Literature of India is very copious, very ancient, and much of it is of a very high order, dealing with the deepest problems of life with keen skillfulness. Of course the language makes it a sealed book for the multitude, and even the translations are often too literal and muddled. This book gives us India's history as shown in the works of poet and philosopher and dramatist. The power of the Brahmanic writers, then the transition from Brahmanism to Buddhism, and the influence of both on the life of the people and the course of events, is well shown. The last chapter is by no means the least in interest, for in it are given short sketches of the leading Indian writers of to-day, no mean company, including poets, novelists, playwrights, theologians, and lawyers. The head of all the lawyers in Bombay was Judge Telang, a Hindoo. These writers are all better known in England than in America. Year by year, however, the leaders of Indian thought in India spread their influence over ever-widening circles, though what the final result may be when these leaders, infused with all the best of the spirit of the East and the West, rise up to proclaim that East and West have met, and from the ruins new solutions of religious, social, and moral problems have been produced, is to be watched with hope, not fear or doubt.

Wessex Poems and Other Verses. By Thomas Hardy. With 30 illustrations by the author. New York: Harper and Brothers. Price, $1.75.

Thos. Hardy is known, wherever English is spoken, as a writer of virile, dramatic, and often immoral prose. It was a well-deserved criticism that said his novel, "Jude, the Obscure," ought to be called "Jude, the Obscene." Mr. Hardy's plea would be that the "young lady" cannot be considered always, if there is to be any true picture of life in novels, and there is much truth in what he says; but the sense of decency of the old lady and the old man, and everybody else, need not be outraged to give us pictures of life. This volume of poetry shows the versatility of Mr. Hardy's talents in two ways—as a clever draughtsman and a clever versifier. We say "clever" advisedly, for neither illustrations nor poetry rise above that, but they do rise as high as that, and a vast deal of modern verse falls far below even that guarded word.

Korean Sketches. By the Rev. James S. Gale. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. Price, $1.

Mr. Gale spent some time in Korea as a missionary, and used every opportunity for the study of the country and the people. The result is a valuable addition to our stock of knowledge of the hermit kingdom, and an interesting story of his experiences. The book is useful from the standpoint of a missionary, and it is as attractive as the stories usually written for young people.

Life Lessons from the Book of Proverbs. By William Stevens Perry, D.D., LL.D. New York: Wilbur B. Ketocaam. Price, $1.50.

These addresses were delivered by Bishop Perry when he had charge of a congregation. The author makes no pretense at originality, as he says, but the addresses will do much good if placed in the hands of the young. The style is interesting, and the subjects are treated with evident earnestness and knowledge of the needs of youth.

Sir Jefferson Nobody. By Effie W. Mersman. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. Price, $1.25.

An interesting and well-written narrative is the life, struggles, and generous deeds of Sir Jefferson Nobody who grotesquely—for he was no aristocrat, but a poor forsaken child—dubs himself and other characters in the story with far-fetched and aristocratic, and even royal, appellations. The kindness, generosity, self-denials, industry depicted in the story of Sir Jefferson will furnish a noble ideal and pattern of usefulness for the children who may enjoy the good fortune of having this book placed in their hands. We hope many children will have the pleasure of reading it, and of learning its lessons of goodness and industry.

"Irish Life and Character," by Michael MacDonagh, will be published next week by Mr. Thomas Whittaker. The great number of illustrative anecdotes, many of which are entirely new, will appeal to all lovers of Celtic wit and humor.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker will publish on the 20th inst., "An Epic of the Soul," being a cycle of eighty short poems, of a new form, which records the experience of one who has sounded the depths of doubt and despair, and emerged into light on the farther side. The author, whose name at present is withheld, is already known in more than one department of literature.

Robert de la Sizeranne's essay on Caricature, which The Living Age has translated from the Revue des Deux Mondes, is an extremely brilliant and exhaustive survey of the history and methods of caricature, from the pen of one who never writes without a complete mastery of his subject. The Quarterly Review's striking paper on Women Poets is to be reproduced in The Living Age, the first half of it in the number for April 1st.

The leading attraction of The Cosmopolitan for April is the beginning of Count Leo Tolstoi's new novel, "The Awakening." It has been suggested that the author's own career as a young man has helped to form the picture. Several of Vereshchagin's pictures of Napoleon at Moscow are reproduced in this number, with the skill usual to this magazine. "Recent Developments in Industrial Organization" are discussed by F. W. Morgan, and commented on by the editor effectively. "The Nemesis of Motherhood," by Harriett Prescott Spofford, ought to be read widely. It will set many a woman thinking to good purpose.

A PUBLIC SPIRITED CIVILIAN.—By the death of Prof. O. C. Marsh, of Yale University, the scientific world has lost one of its foremost leaders. It is the testimony of Darwin himself, that no other man has contributed so much as Professor Marsh towards the demonstration of the doctrine of evolution. The wonderful paleontological collection at Yale, which contains more than a full thousand of specimens of which no other examples are known to exist, and which is a goal of pilgrimage for European scientists in search of knowledge, is chiefly his work. It is mainly the result of his own researches, and will be his lasting monument. He was a great explorer, a great teacher, and a great man. But his fame as a scientist should not be allowed to overshadow his services as a patriotic citizen. Few other men have done as valuable corrective work as his in connection with the abuses of the Indians. His many expeditions into the Far West in search of fossils brought him into personal relations with a number of Indian tribes, and gave him ample opportunities of informing himself thoroughly about the shameful frauds regularly perpetrated upon them by government officials. With many men this knowledge would have led to nothing. The labor, cost, and risk involved in what was hardly less than a personal conflict with the administration at Washington, would have deterred them. But Professor Marsh was not a man of that sort. He recognized his duty and did it.

New York Evening Post

LIQUOR IN THE ARMY.—The unanimous action of the House in adopting an amendment to the Army Bill which abolishes the army canteen and forbids the sale of liquor in any camp or post of the United States, formulates a conclusion towards which impartial students of the problems involved have been drifting for some time. The canteen is a place where the lighter kinds of "drinks" are sold, under the regulation of the authorities, and without the incentive that the ordinary saloonkeeper has to promote excess in order to help his business. The argument for this institution has been that drinking could not be entirely prohibited, and that there would be less drunkenness if the government allowed the soldiers to buy beer in camp than if they were tempted to go outside for whiskey. This seemed plausible, and a good many army officers were at first inclined to endorse the system. But the experience of the recent war furnished overwhelming evidence for the opponents of the canteen.—Each colonel was allowed to establish a canteen, or prohibit it, and in Florida, in Cuba, and in the Philippines alike, those regiments which were forbidden it, not only suffered much less from drunkenness than the others, but had by far the smallest percentage of sickness and death from disease. Every general in the army who has expressed an opinion, now opposes the canteen, except one—and his dissent is the strongest argument on the side of the majority, for he is Eagan. Gen. Wheeler has said that "I am utterly opposed to soldiers being sold intoxicating liquors, and I believe that every effort should be exercised to remove the temptation of such dissipation from them." Gen. Shafter said that he had "always been strongly opposed to the canteen system, or the sale of intoxicating drinks of any kind, on military reservations, and have opposed it until absolutely overruled, and required to establish a canteen at my post. I regard it demoralizing to the men, besides impairing seriously their efficiency."

The Advance

STABILITY OF TRUTH.—What our age needs is men and women who have absolute confidence in the power of the truth to survive amid the clash of opinions, and who will earnestly speak the truth, as they see it, their minds being kept open for greater enlightenment by an ardent desire to see the truth as it is. Let the minister preach convictions, not doubts, or mere speculations. Let the editor publish his opinions, rather than to be an echo of prevailing public opinion. Letters of advice and criticism will doubtless come to his desk, and irate subscribers will try to knock him out by landing "Stop my paper!" swings on the point of his jaw, but these amenities form part of the price of opinion. Let Bible critics, high, low, broad, and narrow, state their opinions; and whatever may happen to their personal opinions, not one jot or tittle of truth in the old Book will go down in the wordy war. Let reformers utter their message; and in so far as it is God's message, it will prevail. Above all, let us keep our minds open to the truth, for it is by the power of truth that "the thoughts of men are widening with the process of the suns."

New York Observer (Pres).

ONLY ONE SAVIOUR.—The great struggle in theology is over the position that Jesus Christ is the only Saviour of the world. Many are willing to admit that he is a Saviour, one of several spiritual helpers of mankind. But we must be strenuous for more than this. Jesus is absolutely unique, and wholly divine, or He is nothing at all. No defence of Christianity is really possible, unless it be along the line of its absolute-ness. Its position can only be maintained by an uncompromising assertion, not alone of its superiority, to every form of competing faith, but also of its absolute apartness from all rival systems. Christianity is not simply one way to be saved, it is the only way to be saved. Only when so believed in and so preached, will it have genuine converting power in the world.

CHAPTER VIII.

IT was a late April day in 1775. The valley was luxuriant in all the fresh verdure of early spring, and radiant with the sunshine which shimmered on the river and danced on every filmy leaflet.

The Tryon County Court was in session at Johnstown, and Mr. Underhill who was greatly interested in a case which concerned the revenues of the Church, rode thither in the early morning. He found the courthouse and its vicinity well thronged, for not only was there much legal business to be dispatched, but this was the centre of political interest for the neighborhood, and the news of hostilities with which the air was even then palpitating, was sure to be received here. Among that somewhat motley assembly were ardent sympathizers with both sides of the great question of the day. Here were gathered the dignitaries of the county, the powerful baronet, Sir John Johnson, of German cast of countenance and ungenial expression; the more politic Col. Guy; the stern Butler, and his dashing, cruel-hearted son, and the short, square-built, light-complexioned Indian chief, Joseph Brant who had been closely allied to the great Sir William. Here also were the well-known figures of staunch valley patriots, chief among whom were Sammons and his gallant sons, while the Tory ranks were further swelled by the Scotch Highlanders and the dependents of the Johnson family.

Mr. Underhill entered, with others, the fine new courthouse, built of imported bricks. Within, Col. Guy Johnson, in his official robes, was just taking his seat as chief judge, surrounded by six other justices fully gowned and bewigged. The clergyman's garb made a new feature in the already contrasting spectacle of dress presented by the legal magnates, the kilted Highlanders, blanketed Indians, Dutchmen in voluminous breeches, and various other onlookers, each in his own distinctive attire. Presently the triangle of iron in the belfry was struck by an important functionary in a mongrel legal costume, and the honorable court of Tryon County was in session.

The day wore on, and the assembly dwindled somewhat. Even the clergyman, as the particular case in which he was interested was bandied back and forth between prosecution and defence, grew weary of monotonous citations and elaborate arguments. Decorum demanded that he should not leave until the final counsel had delivered his closing speech, and yet it must be confessed that it was with some relief that his ears now caught the sound of horse's feet with out. It might be that the tardy intruder was the bearer of important news. At any rate, the interruption was a welcome one.

Nearer and nearer clattered the hoofs, beating on the half-dry road, ringing on the out-cropping stone ledges, directed straight toward the pent-up gathering. Their insistent speed attracted the attention of the whole august assembly. Young Sammons, nearest the door, slipped quietly from his place. Outside, he saw a strong-limbed young man throwing himself from his flank-sweated horse.

"What is it?" cried Sammons, laying hold of the messenger's coat.

"You shall hear within," returned the other, "and the ears of every man who loves his country shall blister with the news."

On into the droning assembly strode the two, electrifying the listless audience. The spring sunshine showed off every lineament of the eager face of the youth as he stood bending over his father and whispering into his ear, for the bearer of the dispatches was Alan Underhill.

All eyes were turned upon the father and son. The counsel hurriedly brought his speech to a lame conclusion. The spectators, alert and eager, craned their necks forward. Then Mr. Underhill, rising, notified the Court that he had received news, forwarded from Albany, which concerned the whole assembly.

"This court is adjourned for recess, announced Sir Guy authoritatively, "and now let us have the dispatches, good sir."

Then amid a stillness, portentous in intensity, was read the news from Lexington and Concord!

But at the close of the reading, there was no silent voice in that whole gathering. Such a scene followed as was never surpassed even in the Massachusetts Congress, or the Virginia House of Burgesses. No Tory was there who did not loudly triumph at the news from Lexington; no patriot who did not burn to have fought with the Minute Men. It was only, perhaps, through the overawing presence of the county magistrates that fiery altercation did not then and there culminate in violence. To many more than Alan Underhill the shock of that day came as a revelation of his own standing-point in the momentous issues now confronting him.

"I like not to see you with such rebellious consorts," said Mr. Underhill sternly, at the first opportunity to withdraw his son from the group around young Sammons, who were re-reading the dispatches with evident satisfaction. "How came it your part to bring these tidings?"

"Were they not for your own reading, father?" asked Alan, surprised. "I should not have carried them less swiftly, though less jocosely, had their tenor been different."

"Take care! the spirit of these pestilent times may carry you too far."

"Not farther than my heart goes with it, sir." Alan's lips were firmly set, and though his voice was respectful, his eyes were kindling with a new freedom.

"Mr. Underhill, sir," cried young Butler, coming up to the black-browed clergyman, "here is a paper drawn up by the friends of good order, which doth protest against these present outrages, as also against the enactments of the last Colonial Congress. I beg of you your signature."

"Tis a rare maneuver," said Alan scornfully, "to prepare such document on such an heated occasion, and to present it under the noses and bearing the signatures of all the county grandes."

"Peace, son," said the clergyman, with authority, as he extended his hand, in which young Butler, with a smile of triumph at Alan, placed paper and quills.

The Tories had indeed been wise to prepare their document beforehand, for as another Congress was now pending in Philadelphia, this was an important step. The Whigs, recognizing that they had been so far outwitted, were bitter in their denunciations, and a fierce and angry dispute arose, in which threats, hardly becoming to the dignified body, were freely exchanged. It was well that such of the patriots as could, speedily withdrew from the assembly and dispersed to their own homes, there to retail the stirring news, and to concert measures for the upholding of their own cause.

Mr. Underhill and Alan rode home together, but the latter found, to his real grief, that the son had that day slipped the swaddling bands of youth, and come out, in the strength of his manhood, on the side of freedom. Ignoring by any direct reference the subject uppermost in the minds of both, Mr. Underhill presently asked: "Do you still wish, Alan, to go forward in the vocation of your choice, the sacred ministry?"

"Aye, indeed, sir," replied Alan, astonished. "The matter has never been far from my thoughts or purpose."

"Know, then, that your mother and I have given much consideration to this desire of yours, and have determined that you shall go to New York to pursue your studies. I speak now of this, for you may see for yourself that it is unseemly in one looking towards the Master's work to put himself forward in the stirring of strife. I ask that you give me your word to keep from these so-called patriot gatherings until the time for your departure come."

For a moment Alan shrank from answering. His spirit, all on fire with the day's excitement, quivered as though from a bodily shock. Was his father holding up to him his heart's desire, earlier denied, as the reward of babyish obedience to a blind prejudice? His voice was thick with but half-suppressed anger as he answered: "I wish not to be entrapped into any hasty promise, sir; I will think further of your words."

"You use strange speech when you say 'entrapped,' Alan, and what I have asked of you as a son, I can lay upon you in command as a father. You shall not consort with these tools of the Evil One."

So the two rode on, sore at heart with one another, and the first little rift of misunderstanding started between them.

Nor in Evelyn did Alan find sympathy. Her eyes were bright with the news of the day, and her tongue ardent for the king and his cause, while in every tossing ringlet was a defiance of him who was suspected of disloyalty. And though Alan knew that she would rejoice in his liberty of taking up his chosen work, much of the inspiration of present approval was thus lost to him.

The next few weeks were indeed busy ones for the patriots of Tryon County. Committees were formed, arms secretly collected and stored, and constant gatherings took place at the favorite meeting points, while all sorts of rumors were rife, and distrust of former leaders daily increased. From all such active measures Alan kept aloof, according to his father's wish. He had fully decided that as the way to his chosen vocation now lay open to him, he had no right to close it by his own willful act.

It was thus by pure chance that he was present at Caughnawaga when the first liberty pole was about to be raised, amid an excitement which was intense, if not noisy. About three hundred patriots were there assembled upon a green not far from the Dutch church, when Alan rode into the settlement, accompanied by McKaye who was again on a mission to the valley. Already the ropes were fastened to the tall hickory pole, and the hole for the socket was being rapidly spaded out by eager hands. Alan alone took no part in the proceedings, though he lingered near the scene, with sparkling eyes and short-coming breath.

"Belike you are weary with your long ride," sneered Sandy Cairnewas, for there was much resentment at the young man's supposed defection, "but fash not yoursel', John Aberdeen's bairn has hold of the sma' end, and is not o'ermuch in fear o' his father."

"The young dominie has done his part," growled Dick Myndert. "Yonder come Sir Guy's roysters, and who else hath warned them?"

The angry youth, glancing up the valley road, indeed saw Sir Guy dashing forward at a gallop, accompanied by Colonels Claus and Butler, and all the dependents he could muster. From the other direction, almost at the same moment, appeared Sir John Johnson and every retainer of the Hall, from his own body physician down to artisans and agricultural laborers. With him, also, were a few Highlanders, the very sight of whom inflamed the people's rage, as it was rumored that Sir John was recruiting a regiment of them for his own special service.

"What is this, my good friends?" called aloud the baronet, in a most unsuccessful attempt at suavity. "You do but stir up needless strife in a peaceful community. Disperse, now, and do not bring upon yourselves a merited punishment."

Although the patriots were unarmed, while the newly arrived antagonists all carried weapons, no broad back bent over that day's work was even raised at the baronet's command. Instead, a hundred hard and knotty hands were stretched forth to guide the butt into its socket, and a hundred copper-buckled feet were spread wide in defiance, while the leaders directed the work as before.

Guy Johnson, more ready in speech than Sir John, mounted a high stoop and began to harangue the crowd with great vehemence. He preached to them of the power of the king and the folly of revolt, upbraiding them for past acts of disloyalty, and vituperating their present conduct in violent and bitter terms.

"He speaks well," muttered McKaye aside to Alan, "but a hungry stomach was never filled with curses."

The patriots had now stopped to listen to the speaker. Indeed, Sir John had so closed about the pole, that any attempt to raise it would have been followed by immediate bloodshed. But at last young Sammon's blood boiled over. Crowding nearer to Col. Johnson, he interrupted him to hurl back his abuse upon his own head.

"Liar!" he cried, "liar and villain, though it were in the presence of the king himself!"

Fired by the insult, Johnson leaped from his rostrum and seized young Sammons by the throat. Down in the dust the youth was forced, but was able to free himself, and, springing up, unharmed, to grapple with his adversary.

"Coward and villain," he choked, who bringest swords and pistols against men unarmed!" Again the young man bit the dust, and this time many pistols were presented at his breast.

It was a crucial moment. Many of the patriots, long accustomed to yield obedience to the authority of the Johnsons, and perhaps in salutary fear of real weapons, now slunk away. Alan Underhill and McKaye, unable longer to restrain themselves, had dashed forward with one impulse. The braver spirits who had not yet deserted from the rescue of their comrade, were being forced back by the superior number of the Tories and handled most ungently. Sammons himself was already severely bruised and beaten.

Alan, his strong young frame erect upon his powerful horse, charged directly into the crowding mob, dispersing friend and foe alike before his fierce onset. McKaye, following, made use of the weapons with which he was always armed, to cover the body of young Sammons. "If this youth be injured," he cried fiercely, "Tryon County will be the least safe place in all these colonies for Tory goods and bodies this night!"

But the Johnson party had now expended their first rage, and were really desirous to avert present bloodshed. Not too hastily, but of their own grace, they allowed young Sammons' friends to withdraw their champion, and he was borne safely away, carrying upon his body the first scars which Tryon County yielded to the new-born Revolution.

Alan's conduct in this adventure—as told by Tory friends—but increased Mr. Underhill's anxiety for his son's speedy departure. Alan himself was not loath to go. He honestly feared the temptation to a more active part in the coming strife than must be for one who had set his hand to higher work.

But it was upon McKaye that Evelyn's wrath this time was centred. "I have no patience with you inciters of mischief," she cried. "It is that you hate all authority, religious or royal."

responded the captain, "and I know not that I myself have disclaimed the authority of the Presbyterate. I can e'en say my prayers for the king's counsellors, and pray God hasten the day to give them better minds."

"I could the more resent your words, Captain, were it not for your late kindness to our family. For Griffith Underhill's sake, I can forbear."

The captain's dark eyes sobered beyond their usually grave expression. "I have come again to bid you goodbye, fair mistress," he said abruptly, "but tell me not as before, 'come back when the cause is settled,' for 'tis a far lookout."

He rode away with the touch of Evelyn's warm little palm still upon his, but to himself he was muttering: "Forbear for his sake, forsooth! Aye, for his sake and hers I do forbear. He is but a lad, a weakling, and a woman's love may make a man of him."

Time passed, and with it Alan to his new duties. Evelyn found that she sorely missed him who had been her sympathizer in all her enthusiasms, even when they brought out that rarely playful smile of his. Nothing now remained for her but to extend her sisterly influence to George, fast growing into a long-legged, keen-eyed lad, whose highest tastes were for hunting with gun and rod in the company of Philo. And, indeed, there was another sphere of usefulness to be found in the black boy. Surely none needed more tutoring. To think was to act with Evelyn in those days, and she straightway undertook the instruction of Philo in manners and Franklin's primer. Suffice it to say that her new labor was not without its difficulties, seeing that her pupil's head was apt to be found where his heels ought to be, and his capacity for confounding "ds" and "bs," "fs" and "s"s, was phenomenal.

The Girls of St. Dorothy

BY IZOLA L. FORRESTER

CHAPTER I.

A VERANDA SESSION

(All rights reserved.)

"IN the first place," Eleanor said judicially, from her elevated perch on the veranda rail, "in the first place, it must be kind of a secret society, because the boys' club is a secret society, and they have signs and passwords and initiations, and all that sort of thing, you know, and Jerry won't tell me a single thing about it. So we want to have something that they will want to know all about, too."

Four heads nodded approvingly from the veranda steps, where the girls sat in solemn conclave, and Eleanor Edsall went on: "Of course it will be in the church, but we don't want it to be altogether a sewing or charity affair."

"Something more social?" Evelyn Ferner interrupted, thoughtfully rearranging the knot of red, white and blue ribbon on her sailor hat, with dainty fingers. Eleanor hesitated.

"Well, yes, in a way," she answered slowly; "you see, there is the Ladies' Guild for sewing, and the Junior Chapter looks after all the charity work, so I thought a girls' club after the same style as the boys' Excelsior Club would be a splendid thing."

"And what would our work be, Nell?" asked little earnest-eyed Alice Jardine, leaning forward so that she could look up at Eleanor.

"Something like the St. Andrew's Brotherhood, only of course on a small scale," Eleanor replied, and there was an enthusiasm and earnestness in her voice and face as she continued, that were infectious: "I want you girls to help me start a club that will promote sociability and faithful friendship among all of us. Here we are, all the way in age to Alice and Laura at fourteen, to myself at seventeen, and we seem to be the odd lot at church. We're too old for the Juniors, and not old enough for the Guild, so we must find something to do with ourselves. As we are now, we drift off into little cliques of three or four, and there isn't any kind of a mutual purpose or common interest to bring us together, and make us loyal to each other. So I thought it all out, and it struck me that the boys had accomplished so much, that we could not do better than to follow in their footsteps."

"How do we know what they've accomplished?" put in Alice aggrievedly, "when they won't tell us a single thing about their old club."

There was a hearty laugh over Alice's tone of despair, and then Molly Gray exclaimed, as she glanced up from her task of tying Pirate's long ears under his chin, "Well, anyway, if they won't tell us what they do, I know one thing. They stand by each other splendidly, and they've got a lot of outside boys into the Church who never would have come in any other way, and when any extra help or any money is needed, the Excelsiors are always ready before they are asked."

"Hurrah for the girl with two Excelsior brothers of her own!" cried Laura, and Mollie blushed hotly beneath her freckles, for she had not meant to defend Dave and Arthur specially, and all the girls knew how she loved and admired these two big brothers of hers.

"Well, is that all you mean for us to do, Nell?" Evelyn asked. "Just have entertainments to raise money, and persuade all the nice girls that we know to join?"

Eleanor was silent, and a troubled look came into her steady blue eyes. Someway Evelyn always had the knack of treating her pet schemes to ice water douches. She would think up a new plan, trim it all up with firm purposes and good resolutions, and just gave it a fair start down the toboggan of success, and biff! one of Evelyn's cool little queries had come like a rock on the track, and her plan was jolted rudely from its course, and she felt as if it had never been a very good one anyway.

"I mean that, and more, too," she said slowly, trying to think of all her best arguments in favor of the club. "I mean for us all to be true to each other, and not to gossip or tattle the way girls do about each other. I mean for us to try to bring girls into the Church the same way the Brotherhood boys bring men. Oh, I can't exactly explain it, but I mean for us to live a little of our Sunday lives during the week, to carry some of the things that we hear and say on Sundays into our everyday life. Don't you all understand?"

"I do," Alice said promptly, and Mollie broke in with her usual impulsiveness:

"I think that your idea is splendid, Nell Edsall. We go to church Sundays as a matter of course, and because its heathenish and horrid to stay away, and we learn our Bible lessons about some old folks who lived, goodness knows when, and who did a lot of things that we would never think of doing, anyway, and when it's all over, do we ever think of it during the week? I know that I don't. It all seems to belong to Sunday the same as your best dress."

Mollie's honesty and blunt personal frankness were sometimes a little embarrassing, but the girls were used to her ways, and it did seem as though she were talking plain truths this time, so no one, not even Eleanor, stopped her, or spoke.

"Don't you know we say we are Christians," Mollie went on, holding Pirate by his paws and making them emphasize her words, "but we don't bother our heads over it week days. We don't honestly try."

"I don't think that any of us are very bad, Mollie," Evelyn said, in gentle rebuke.

"Oh, it isn't that we aren't very bad," Mollie retorted, "it's that we aren't very good. I don't mean that we smash all the commandments, but it's just as Nell says. We all tattle. Don't you know we do?" She looked around at the circle of unre-

Baby's Teeth

The process of dentition should no more be painful than the growing of the nails or hair; that infants suffer when teething is due in many cases to the fact that they have not had a food that contained the material necessary for building up the teeth. Mellin's Food not only contains material for the flesh and muscles but contains the phosphatic salts for the bones and teeth.

Mellin's Food

I send you a picture of our boy, taken when he was 9 months old. He has been raised altogether on Mellin's Food and used it until he was 18 months old, taking scarcely anything else, and a healthier child I have never seen. He is now 21 months and has 18 teeth, cut them all with very little trouble, all owing to the use of Mellin's Food. I feel that I want to recommend it to all mothers. Mrs. J. S. sponsive faces, and laughed merrily. "Oh, but I know that we do, because you've all tattled to me, and I've tattled back, so that we're all in the same glass houses, and can't throw stones. I think that your plan is fine, Nell."

Eleanor smiled down on the rosy face of her champion. She was glad that Mollie's sympathies were enlisted so ardently in the good cause, but still, she knew the will-o'-the-wisp nature of Mollie's sudden enthusiasm too well to place much confidence in her steadfastness.

"I am sure that you all understand what I mean now," she said. "That is the real inward purpose of the club, to be better ourselves, and try to bring others into the Church, but now for the other—"

"The outward and visible sign," murmured Mollie.

"We want to rival the Excelsiors in all things, so that our entertainments will have to be—"

"Brilliant!" exclaimed Mollie. "We can get up some beauties, because Dave and Art will help us—"

"That's just what we can't allow," Eleanor interposed decidedly. "Any assistance whatever, mind, Mollie, is strictly forbidden from members of the Excelsior Club, because if we let them help us they will say that we could not get along without them."

"But there are only five of us," said Laura Naylor, "and the boys have over fifteen."

"Oh, well, you know that we must bring in what new members we can. The more the merrier," answered Eleanor.

"Anybody at all, Nell?" anxiously.

"Y-es," hesitatingly.

"How about Virginia Hardy?" and Laura's hazel eyes danced with mischief.

Eleanor did not answer for a moment, and a perplexed look came over her face as she tapped abstractedly on the veranda rail with her pencil.

"I don't see why she shouldn't belong as well as any of us," cried Mollie, breaking the silence. "Just because she lives in the biggest house in town, and drives a span of ponies, and all that, doesn't cut any figure. She's only a girl, the same as the rest of us, after all."

"But they're so rich," Evelyn said reflectively, "and I see her out on the veranda often, and I think she's rather—oh rather exclusive, you know."

"Oh, bother," Mollie said, "she can't do any worse than refuse, and she could be a lot of help to us. I'd just as soon ask her as not."

"Then you may take it right on your shoulders, young lady," said Eleanor laughingly. "I move that we appoint Miss Gray a committee of one to call on Miss Hardy."

"Oh, you needn't laugh," Mollie said stoutly, "I'm not a bit afraid."

So the matter was settled, the motion being duly seconded and passed.

"Now, what are we going to call ourselves?" asked Laura, and at the question all the bright eagerness returned to Eleanor's face.

"Why, I thought that the very best name of all, girls, would be St. Dorothy's Sisterhood."

"Why?" inquired Mollie bluntly, releasing Pirate, and leaning forward, her chin on her hands.

"Because she was so young," Nell said earnestly, and did her saint's work in the world instead of being shut up in some old out-of-the-way convent, praying, praying, praying all the time, and never trying to do any of the Master's work herself."

"I like that kind of a saint," Mollie said. "St. Dorothy it is, then," and all the others assented with the same readiness.

"And you're the president, of course, Nell," Evelyn said, "and Laura and Alice, secretary and treasurer, and Mollie, the committee."

"No," Eleanor replied, "all the rest of you must be the executive committee."

"Then there won't be any members. We'll all be officers," cried Alice.

"Not a bit of it," Mollie said, rising energetically from her seat. "There will be one member, and that member will be a host in herself."

"Who, Mollie?" asked the others in one breath.

"Miss Virginia Hardy," announced Mollie in triumph. "I'm going to call on her ladyship right away."

FELL OCCASIONALLY

At Church Suppers, Weddings, and Parties.

"The minister liked coffee. His long Sabbath Day's work was begun with a cup of the strongest coffee, and ended in the same way. Gradually the physical and mental machinery became clogged; tongue coated, dull headaches, and a general depressed condition of the system turned his delightful occupation into a dreary treadmill.

"One day his attention was brought to the fact that the unsuspected coffee was very likely the cause of his trouble, and it was suggested that if he would use Postum Food Coffee, and induce the good wife to be particular to boil it long enough to extract the delicious flavor and the elements which go to rebuild the broken-down nerve centres, his trouble would be gone.

This was two years and a-half ago, and since that time not a pound of coffee has been purchased by the minister's family. Morning, noon, and night Postum makes its appearance on the table, and is enjoyed by all. With the departure of coffee went the minister's bad feelings, and with the coming of Postum came a feeling of exhilaration, a better appetite, and a constantly increasing weight.

"From the start, the minister's Postum has been properly made, because of the warning.

"At one time during the absence of housewife, the domestic, not being particular about preparing Postum according to directions, make it weak and insipid, which we find is a very common complaint among those who do not understand that there is no way to extract the delicious flavor from Postum except by long boiling. Made properly, it is clear, black, and has a crisp, pungent, fascinating taste. Occasionally the minister has been induced to drink a cup of coffee at weddings, parties, etc., but many sleepless hours of the night are passed in consequence. This is a true experience."

Finance and Commerce

THE industrial life of the country is fast settling down to the ordinary details of production and distribution. The speculative period has passed. The time when the idea in respect of nearly all articles constituting the raw material for different manufactures was that they must be bought at once as prices are going higher, has passed. Distributors, too, have no longer the speculative fever to buy in excess of the prospective season's wants, and are now satisfied to carry usual stocks, and trust the future course of prices.

On the whole prices are steady; in some cases there are slight recessions. This does not apply to wages, they are advancing, in many instances, and it may safely be said that the tendency of wages is higher. The business situation is prosperous and the outlook is encouraging. The secret of it all lies in the fact that consumption of everything everywhere is at a maximum, and there is nothing in sight which causes apprehension of a rainy day ahead, and a consequent tendency towards retrenchment. Wall street had a shock for a day last week. High interest rates for money, and the almost impossibility of borrowing on many of them, caused the slump. The whole list recovered in good form, but in the natural course of things it is not unlikely that the reckless speculative buying that has been mainly responsible for the extreme prices of many stocks of late, has received a shock from which it will not entirely recover. As we have all along foreshadowed, the expanding business of the country has continued to draw currency from New York, and the further small decrease in legal reserve was only saved from being a larger one by shrinking the loans. Of course the recent high interest rates brings in some contributions from the outside, but high rates will have to be maintained to keep it there.

Exports continue in excess of last year in manufactured articles, notwithstanding that the advance must have checked further buying in some directions. They were particularly large in cotton goods, in fact, way beyond all former like periods, although it is said the purchases were largely made some time ago, and before the price had advanced.

Raw cotton has been rather dull, and prices have dragged off some.

There has been considerable interest manifested in wheat the past week, and at times the market has been quite active and unsettled. Prices on the whole have not gained much however, although the reports from the growing crops have been almost uniformly bad. Up to the close of last week there had been no growing spring weather to make it certain that real conditions are as bad as appearances. Pending that, time traders have not felt sufficiently confident in the interim to buy and hold with determination. The next week or ten days ought to reveal the true condition of the growing crop, when a marked change in prices is not unlikely.

Corn has dragged off some in price. Receipts at primary markets are small, but the shipping demand has been unsatisfactory. Probably buyers are awaiting the lower transportation rate which the opening of lake navigation will give.

Oats have been supported some by the lateness of the season. Very little planting has yet been done, but of course much can be accomplished in the next two weeks, with favorable weather.

In the provision market slightly firmer prices have obtained.

It is generally thought that the busyness of farmers when spring work begins, will make small receipts of hogs for awhile. The speculative support is however, not first-class.

Philippine Products

THE agricultural, mineral, and commercial opportunities in the Philippines are discussed in detail in the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance, just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. This discussion shows that, although agriculture is the chief occupation of the Philippines, yet only one-ninth of the surface is under cultivation. The soil is very fertile, and even after deducting the mountainous areas, it is probable that the area of cultivation can be very largely extended, and that the islands can support a population equal to that of Japan (42,000,000). The chief products are rice, corn, hemp, sugar, tobacco, coconuts, and cacao. Coffee and cotton were formerly produced in large quantities—the former for export and the latter for home consumption—but the coffee plant has been almost exterminated by insects, and the home-made cotton cloths have been driven out by the competition of those imported from England. The rice and corn are principally produced in Luzon and Mindoro, and are consumed in the islands. The rice crop is about 765,000 tons. It is insufficient for the demand and about 45,000 tons of rice were imported in 1894, the greater portion from Saigon, and the rest from Hongkong and Singapore; also 8,669 tons (60,000 barrels) of flour, of which more than two-thirds came from China, and less than one-third from the United States. The cacao is raised in the southern islands, the best quality of it at Mindanao. The production amounts only to 150 tons, and it is all made into chocolate and consumed in the islands. The sugar cane is raised in the Visayas. The crop yielded in 1894 about 235,000 tons of raw sugar, of which one-tenth was consumed in the islands, and the balance, of 210,000 tons valued at $11,000,000, was exported, the greater part to China, Great Britain, and Australia. The hemp is produced in southern Luzon, Mindoro, the Visayas, and Mindanao. It is nearly all exported in bales. In 1894 the amount was 96,000 tons, valued at $12,000,000. Tobacco is raised in all the islands, but the best quality and greatest amount in Luzon. A large amount is consumed in the islands, smoking being universal among women as well as men, but the best quality is exported. The amount in 1894 was 7,000 tons of leaf tobacco, valued at $1,750,000. Spain takes 80 per cent. and Egypt 10 per cent. of the leaf tobacco.

Occupations for Little Fingers

FROM Harper's Bazar

EVERY one knows about the use of small wooden boxes for rooms of doll houses, but how many mothers have thought of what nice little shops can be made from this material? Let a boy who can use simple tools fit up a grocery-shop, by painting such a box on the outside, then painting or papering its walls and ceiling, and staining its floor. A neat little sign can also be made out of a strip of wood, and fastened over the front of the shop. A cigar box, without its lid, sawed carefully in half lengthwise, will yield two counters. Sets of shelves for merchandise are easily put up on the walls. Meantime, the little sisters are busy getting ready a supply of bottles and small pasteboard boxes to serve as receptacles for candy, rice, and such matters. They are also rolling long strips of cloth about thin bits of board, from one to two inches wide, to make them look like miniature bales of calico, muslin, and woolen goods. Last of all, a little settee can be made out of cigar box wood. A set of scales may be found for from ten to twenty-five cents to set on one of the counters. Over the counter a spool of coarse white thread is slung by a cord from the ceiling of the little shop to serve as twine.

Such a shop can be used, by way of variety, for a grocery, a dry goods shop, and in summertime, when there are plenty of flowers, a florist's. This last plan will delight small lovers of nature. Empty spools will make nice pots, with a sprig of a bush or flowering plant stuck into the hole of the spool flower pot.

Few mothers know about the possibilities of the great boxes in which upright pianos come as play-houses for children. One mother utilized such a piano box as a doll house. She had a carpenter fill out the top, which is always slanted off, so the whole was a great square box. He also put in partitions, which made two upper and two lower rooms—all very large. This house was for dolls, but a piano-box will make a real play-house that the children themselves can get into. It will furnish close quarters, but all the more fun in that for the children! Do they not love to crowd under an umbrella for a tent, or play house in the exceedingly cramped space under the dining-table?

When the box has been made the right shape by the carpenter, and he has sawed out two square openings in the sides of the house for windows, the work of young fingers can begin. First a coat of paint will be needed on the outside. Then the window sashes must be put in, by tacking two thin slats at right angles across the centre of each window, or fastening rope sashes in the same way. These rope sashes are often seen in tent windows at the sea-shore. Little curtains of thin stuff, shirred on strings, and looped back, will furnish work for girls. The papering of the walls will be done by all the young owners. Pictures, unframed, of course, will add to the coziness of the little house. A table hinged to the wall at the back will open out across the depth of the room, with legs that unfold on its outer end. A bench couch is easily made out of a narrow box turned upside down. The top of the couch is padded, and top and sides are covered with gay cretonne. One or two little pillows of the same, stuffed with excelsior, cover it nicely.

LATEST ADVICES FROM THE PHILIPPINES imply that, instead of nearing a pacific settlement, the situation indicates that in the vicinity of 100,000 troops will be required to bring about complete subjugation. This is at complete variance with first suppositions, when it was believed an army of 20,000 would be sufficient force to restore peace. The changed condition is attributed to a modification of opposition tactics. Instead of resistance in force, Aguinaldo has divided his army into guerilla bands, pursuing much the same course as that taken by Cuban patriots prior to American intervention. This will necessitate armed occupation of Philippine territory from which rebels have been driven, and may prolong the struggle for an indefinite length of time. The approach of the rainy season is a disquieting feature, in that it will cause a partial suspension of aggressive operations, while the natives, being thoroughly acclimated, need not restrict their activity. There is hope that a thorough distribution of the proclamation, declaring the peaceful intentions of the United States government, will have a good effect on the natives, although through treacheries practiced by Spain their confidence in proclamations has been sadly shaken.

REPRESENTATIVES OF SEVERAL FOREIGN governments, as well as of nearly all prominent street railway companies of the country, witnessed recently a test at Manhattan Beach, N. Y., of a new third rail system which promises to displace the trolley, as well as solving the problem of street car propulsion in cities where for various reasons trolleys have not been permitted. The tests were made on a single track, 2,000 feet long. The running time is one minute and 16 seconds. The safety third rail system uses the patents of Captain John McLeod Murphy, who lay down on the track to prove that no shock could be obtained from the electricity. The key of the system is the automatic switch which controls the current. The system is governed by switches at given points, which keep the current under the car at all times. Nowhere on the line is there a circuit except from the front to the rear of the car. No conduit is used, the extra rail carrying the positive or supply current, and the regular rail the negative current. The third rail is built in the center of the track. The governing switches or circuit breakers can be operated by no one except the motorman of the car which is in that section. In the car are ten cells of storage batteries which, while the car is in motion, are charged with sufficient power to move the car in case of any break.

ADMIRAL DEWEY AND HIS OFFICERS and men have presented their claims for prize and bounty for captures and destruction by the American ships at Manila. It is estimated that Dewey will receive about $30,000 as his share of the allotment, provided the most favorable view of the claims be taken by the courts and the treasury department. It will be contended that the three ships belonging to the Spanish navy which were restored, and which will be added to our naval register, should be regarded as prizes, a view which will make some difference in the total amount to be distributed. Another question involved is whether the engagement between the American and Spanish ships on May 1st was with an inferior or a superior force. If the latter, the bounty would be twice as large as if the court decides the Spanish force was inferior to the American fleet. A feature brought out by the lawyers is that the courts should include as prize money the property captured ashore, such as guns, furniture, and a vast amount of movable material, of which there has been a survey, and which, if admitted, would add materially to the allotment to Dewey and his force. The old prize law of 1862 was construed by the Supreme Court as being limited to captures on the sea, but in 1864, the law was changed in such a way as to suggest the claim now made that Dewey may have a share in the value of property captured by his ships at Manila, Cavite, and other places.

COMMISSIONER W. M. RICE HAS JUST returned from Japan, where he was sent three months ago by the United States Immigration Bureau to look into the question of the exodus of natives to this country in violation of our treaty laws. The influx of the Japanese emigrants to America within the last few months has been a matter of unusual concern to this government. "The Japanese," said the commissioner, "are reaching out in all directions—commercially and industrially. Of late years they have come to this country in increasing numbers, and there seems to be no cessation at this time. Farm hands in Japan receive about 17 cents per day, and other wages, I am told, are in proportion. They are a shrewd and friendly people who are going forward with great strides. A block system of railroads now traverses the empire, and accidents are almost unknown. There is a lively competition between British and American capital, with the English slightly in the lead. The government owns nearly all of the railroads, and is making money from them."

GERMANY IS FAST COMING TO THE front in commercial conquest. Her aggressiveness, next to that of the United States, is most menacing to British commerce. The announcement of the settlement of the dispute over African territory between France and Great Britain was given to the world on a Tuesday. On Wednesday, agents of German houses started for Lake Chad to invade French territory, while other German agents started for the Bahr-el-Ghazal to exploit British possessions. Germans have within the last six months thoroughly covered the Anatolian provinces of Turkey in Asia; established trading routes from Haldar Pasha, opposite Constantinople, to Smyrna on the coast, to Bagdad in the interior; down the valleys of the Euphrates, and into Persia from Teheran, the capital of the Shah. Within twelve months a German commercial expedition has traversed the Yangtse Kiang valley in China, for a distance of 1,100 miles into the interior, invading the heart of Great Britain's sphere of interest. Another expedition traveled overland from Kiou Chou into the interior of Tien-Tsin. The southern provinces of China were covered and German depots for trade established in the silk districts of Canton. Japan and Korea have been thoroughly explored by representatives of German houses, and agencies established at all principal towns.

A CRISIS, IT IS SAID, HAS BEEN reached in the controversy between the American owners of Canadian timber in the Province of Ontario, and the Parliament of the province, which recently passed an act prohibiting the exportation of all logs. The Ontario officials have so construed this act as to apply it to all timber purchased and paid for by Americans prior to the passage of the act. The retroactive effect of this legislation, if maintained, it is said, will be to render worthless large holdings of Canadian stumpage purchased by Americans. The matter was referred to the Joint High Commission, but that body having taken no action, a committee of timber owners went to Washington, a few days before the Commission dissolved, and asked the Secretary of the Treasury to impose the retaliatory clause of the Dingley tariff act. After careful consideration and conferences with the Secretary of State, and with representatives of the American owners of Canadian timber, it is stated that a conclusion has been arrived at by Secretary Gage, to apply the retaliatory clause of the Dingley act, increasing the duty on Canadian lumber.

GOVERNOR ROOSEVELT, OF NEW YORK, has signed bills passed by the Legislature of that State, which are expected to go far toward suppressing the sweat-shop evil. The bills provide that clothing and other articles shall not be manufactured in a building not licensed by the State Factory Inspector. The license issued is to state the number of workers to be employed in each room, and this number is governed by the number of cubic feet of air space in the room. To further assure purity of air, a matter of vital importance, electricity is required for lighting where artificial light is used. The law specifies that women and minors shall not be employed more than ten hours per day six days of each week, nor begin before six o'clock in the morning, nor work after nine o'clock at night. Goods manufactured in sweat-shops of other States and sold in New York, must bear tags to that effect. Fourteen additional factory inspectors are provided for to thoroughly enforce the provisions of the Act.

A GENERAL SCHEME FOR THE CIRCUM- navigation of the Antarctic circle has been planned under the auspices of the Berlin Geographical Society and the Berlin Charlottenburg branch of the German Colonial Society. The details of the proposed expedition are so closely related to one projected by the British Royal Geographical Society a plan of co-operation is now under discussion. Sir Clements Markham has donated $125,000 to the British society to enable it to join the Berlin congress. The two societies have now $200,000 in hand for the enterprise, and want $50,000 more, before beginning the execution of the joint plans. Interest in Antarctic exploration has been greatly heightened by recent news from the Belgian expedition under Gerlache. Weddell Sea has been the special field of exploration, and members of the party at Montevideo, on their return home, state that hitherto unknown land has been discovered 1,500 miles south-east of Cape Horn.

INVESTIGATIONS ARE IN ORDER. A committee appointed by the New York State Senate is looking into the administration of affairs in New York City, while a similar committee, appointed by the Illinois Senate, will delve into Chicago municipal matters. Although politics may be a factor in instigating committees of investigation, State legislatures in both cases being Republican, and city administrations Democratic, any effort to shed light on civic corruption is a step in advance for good government.

The News of the Church

The Church Abroad

The resignation is announced of the Most Rev. Hugh Jermyn, D. D., Bishop of Brechin, and the Primus of the Episcopal Church in Scotland. The present state of his Lordship's health is causing much anxiety.

News comes of the death of the Rev. H. G. S. Blunt, for more than 40 years rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn. He was one of three clerical brothers—the Bishop of Hull, and the vicar of Chelsea being the others—and his mother died at the age of nearly 100, a few weeks ago, at Scarborough. He himself was 78 years of age, and graduated at Pembroke College, Cambridge, in 1845.

The "Passion Music" at St. Paul's

The total number of persons assembled at the most imposing musical service held in St. Paul's cathedral during the year, was probably about 8,000, proof of the popularity during Holy Week of Bach's music to the Passion according to St. Matthew. The regular cathedral choir was supplemented by the special Sunday evening choir, and other assistants, which, with orchestra, formed a large force for Sir George Martin to preside over.

Bishop Seabury Memorial in Aberdeen

There was much enthusiasm shown on the 16th ult., when the Marquis of Lothian unveiled the memorial which American Churchmen had been allowed to place upon the wall of the University. The inscription upon the granite tablet reads: "This tablet is, by permission of the authorities of this University, erected by Churchmen of Connecticut to preserve the memory of the place in Longacre, very near this spot, where, on the 14th Nov., 1784, Samuel Seabury, D. D., was consecrated the first Bishop of the Church in America." The Bishop of Aberdeen made arrangements for the formal unveiling, and there was a large assemblage of clergy and laity, including Bishop Douglas, of Aberdeen, and Dean Walker, the Marquis of Lothian, the Lord Provost of the city, the Principal of the University, etc. In his address, Lord Lothian dwelt upon the reasons that had brought Dr. Seabury there for consecration, and upon the condition of the Churches a century ago. Dr. Dawson, rector of St. Andrew's, Aberdeen, reviewed with his usual elquence the development of the American Church. Bishop Douglas paid a warm tribute to the great prelate whom the American Church has newly lost, and who had always a warm heart for the Church in Scotland, as especially shown in his visit to Scotland in 1884, on the occasion of the Seabury Centenary, to which this comes as an appropriate sequel. He handed over the memorial tablet to the safe-keeping of the University and its authorities. The Principal, Sir William D. Geddes, accepted the charge with much pleasure, and was especially gratified to find that one of their own graduates, the Rev. Dr. James Gammack, their old friend in Scotland, and now rector of St. James, West Hartford, in the diocese of Connecticut, had had an active hand in advancing the memorial, and selecting the appropriate site. It would be preserved upon the University as a memorial to all future time.

The Board of Missions

The Board of Managers met at the Church Missions House, on Tuesday, April 11th, the Bishop of Albany (vice-president) in the chair. There were present, 12 bishops, 10 presbyters, and nine laymen.

The associate secretary informed the Board that Bishop Whipple had sailed from New York on April 1st, under his appointment to represent the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society at the centennial of the Church Missionary Society in England, beginning April 12th.

The Executive Committee of three bishops reported that they had resolved to appoint, with the consent of the bishops of the various dioceses, representative men to visit all the diocesan conventions. First, to appeal for a revival of interest in the general missionary work of the Church; and secondly, to arrange for the creation of a central committee in each diocese, to be the means of continuous communication between the Board of Managers and the bishops and clergy of the dioceses. The Bishop of Chicago resigned his membership on the Executive Committee, because of inability to attend, and the Bishop of Pennsylvania was chosen in his room. It was furthermore

Resolved; That the committee of three bishops, appointed to act during the vacancy in the office of General Secretary, be continued until such time as, after conference between the said Committee and the General Secretary, they may unite in recommending that the committee be discharged.

The treasurer reported, that deducting a single offering of $10,000, received early last year, with which there was nothing to compare this year, and allowing for three large collections received after April 1st, which for purposes of comparison should be included, there was a gain of $10,000 on ordinary contributions. The appropriations meanwhile have greatly increased.

The Auditing Committee reported that they had caused the books and accounts of the treasurer to be examined to the 1st inst., and had certified the same to be correct.

Consecration of a Bishop for Boise

The Chair announced that the Rev. J. B. Funsten had accepted his election to be Bishop of Boise, and that he is to be consecrated in Trinity church, Port mouth, Va., on the 27th of April. The consecrator will be the Bishop of Virginia; the co-consecrators, the Bishops of Southern Virginia and Maryland; the preacher, the Bishop of Lexington; also present and assisting, the Bishop of West Virginia.

Election of a General Secretary

The Rev. Reese F. Alsop, D. D., rector of St. Ann's church, Brooklyn, was elected to the office of General Secretary.

Work in Puerto Rico

On the recommendation of the Joint Commission of the General Convention on the Increased Responsibilities of the Church, the Rev. George B. Pratt, already in San Juan, was appointed a missionary of the Board to Puerto Rico. The Commission stated that the reports of the Rev. Mr. Pratt were to the effect that he had been very warmly received by the English-speaking people, and that a Puerto Rican had given him the use of a hall, for the time being; that the attendance upon the services had been from 60 to 80; that San Juan is by far the most important point to occupy, and so forth. It was further stated by the Commission, that Mr. Pratt is enthusiastic about the field, and thinks that any intermission of the services, even during the summer, would be very undesirable. He finds a good many Church of England negroes in San Juan. The local expenses of the mission are likely to be met by the offerings of the people. Chaplain Brown, U. S. A., formerly of Roosevelt's Rough Riders, expects to be ordered to Mayaguez, when he will begin Church services.

The Rev. Dr. W. D. Powers, general secretary of the American Church Missionary Society (recognized auxiliary), made report of the present status of the work in Cuba.

Domestic Missionary Appointments

Information was at hand that the Rev. Wylls Rede, D. D., had been appointed Archdeacon for Colored Work in the diocese of Georgia. Seven of the bishops having domestic missionary work under their jurisdiction, communicated with the Board with regard to appropriations, appointments, and stipends, and, where requested, the Board confirmed the bishops' action. Miss S. Reagan and Miss C. Brandon, nominated by the Bishop of Georgia, were appointed, under the United Offering of the Woman's Auxilliary, for missionary work in his diocese for three years, and a further appropriation was made to two of the students in the Church Training and Deaconess House, Philadelphia.

Recent letters from the Bishop of Alaska, and from two of his missionaries, were submitted. The Bishop is hoping soon to make a new appointment for Juneau, and expects to recommend two or more women to take charge of the hospital at Skaguay, the latter to be supported from the United Offering.

A letter was read from the Rev. Henry Forrester, reporting that under the recent action of the Board providing for his traveling expenses, he was now maturing plans for visits to the places where there are the largest number of English-speaking persons.

Foreign Mission News

Letters were at hand from the Bishops of Haiti, Tokyo, and Shanghai, and from several of the missionaries abroad. Bishop Graves' appointment of the Rev. Arthur Mason Sherman, of the diocese of New Jersey, as a missionary to China, was confirmed, and the necessary appropriations made. The Rev. G. M. Cutting, lately of Nara, Japan, now in London, resigned his appointment because of family matters which compelled him to remain in England. The resignation was accepted. Accounts were at hand from Africa, of the recent general convocation of the mission of Cape Palmas and parts adjacent, held at Bassa, beginning Feb. 8th. The Rev. Robert Hope, D. D., in accordance with the wish of the Bishop, has been appointed as missionary to Africa, to be stationed at Cape Mount, and he has accepted such appointment. The Board rejoiced that this long-standing necessity for a priest at the station mentioned has now been provided for. Dr. Hope plans to sail in the early summer. The work on the church, memorial of the Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Irving, and on the new Langford Memorial Hall (boys' boarding school) is progressing rapidly. There is, however, a lack of funds to complete the plan adopted by Mrs. Irving for the church, for which she worked earnestly up to the time of her death.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The quarterly meeting of the local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew meets on Thursday evening at the Church Club.

The number confirmed in St. Chrysostom's on the 9th, was 25.

The Easter offering at St. Paul's, Kenwood, has reached to over $10,000; three-fourths of it in cash, the rest in monthly payments.

The Rev. J. H. Parsons, recently at St. Paul's, Savanna, Ill., assumed on Sunday last the duties of priest-in-charge at St. Ann's, Humboldt Park, in succession to the Rev. J. Mark Ericsson who has gone to Grace church.

His brethren of the clergy were glad once more to welcome at the clericus on Monday, the Rev. D. F. Smith, of St. Luke's, Evanston, who has recovered from prolonged indisposition.

The receipts of Grace church for the canonical year ending with this month foot up to over $46,000. The good work of the choir is extending to outside institutions, for Mr. Lester Jones, tenor soloist, since Christmas has accepted the leadership of Chicago University choir.

Bishop McLaren's Public Doings

On Sunday morning the Bishop of the diocese made his annual visitation of Trinity church, confirming a class of 68, presented by the rector, the Rev. W. A. Richardson. In the evening he laid hands upon 14, prepared by the Rev. E. A. Larrabee, in the church of the Ascension. On the previous Tuesday he was present at the meeting of the diocesan branch of the G. F. S. at All Saints', Ravenswood, preaching the annual sermon, and blessing the handsome little memorial altar, recently placed at a cost of $100, by the congregation, in the small chapel which is an annex of the convenient parish hall to the east of the church; he made a short address. On the following Friday afternoon the Bishop presided at a large meeting of the Mission Board in the Church Club rooms.

Confirmations by Bishop White

On Sunday, Bishop White, acting for Bishop McLaren, confirmed a class of 40 in St. Ansgarius, Sedgwick st., of which the Rev. Herman Lindskog has been rector for over 11 years; and in the evening, one in St. Paul's parish, Kankakee. This week the Bishop of Indiana holds evening Confirmations at Maywood, LaGrange, Hinsdale, and Aurora.

Bishop Edsall's Visit

Bishop Edsall preached in Grace church on Sunday morning, and in St. Andrew's in the evening, in each case presenting his interesting and promising missionary work in North Dakota. To his appeals some pleasing responses have been made. He returned to Fargo on Tuesday evening, and, having rented his house in Lake View, will remove his family to the North-west very shortly.

Gifts to Charitable Institutions

St. Luke's hospital was last week the recipient of a donation of $750 from Miss Julia Arthur, the actress; the other moiety of the proceeds of one evening's entertainment going to the Old People's Home, a city institution. The Church Home for Aged Persons has just received from a wealthy member of St. Paul's a conditional donation of $500, which enables the directors to secure the means for liquidating all the floating debt.

Girls' Friendly Society

The annual meeting of the diocesan G. F. S. was held at All Saints', Ravenswood, April 11th., and at the roll call 57 responded. At the luncheon served by the ladies of the parish, in their hall, nearly 100 were present, besides Bishop and Mrs. McLaren, including Messrs. Bowles, Cawthorne, Dennis, Moore, Pardee, Philipps, and Rushton, of the clergy. The sermon of the Bishop was a beautiful appeal to Churchwomen for courage not to fear criticism, and for resolution to be positive Christians. The president, Miss Fanny Groesbeck, read a paper largely descriptive of her participation in G. F. S. meetings, and of her kindly reception by officers and members of the society in England, during the ten months of her absence last year. The morning's offering, $10, was voted to the Rev. C. E. Bowles, for parish use. The treasurer's report showed receipts for the year, $361.56, and expenditures, $342.65. The officers were re-elected as follows: President, Miss Fanny Groesbeck, 413 Washington boulevard; vice-president, Miss Eleanor P. Wood, 405 Dearborn av.; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Rudolph Williams, Wilmette.

The Woman's Guild, St. Peter's Church

The monthly business meeting held April 4th, was of unusual interest; 91 women were present to welcome their former rector, the Rt. Rev. Samuel Cook Edsall, whose interesting account of his work in North Dakota brought forth the promise of two cassocks and five surplices for lay-readers whom he has appointed to assist him in his work. Gratifying accounts were read by officers of the different branches, and the motion to invite the Woman's Auxiliary to hold their annual meeting in St. Peter's church, was unanimously carried. March 24th, the guild had the pleasure of a visit from Mrs. D. P. Lyman who made an earnest appeal for the United Offering, which will not go unheeded in this branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions.

Conference of Swedish Pastors

Very interesting conferences of the Swedish pastors of the Church, commencing on the 12th, have been held in St. Ansgarius'. The Sunday services called forth congregations which filled every inch of the church. After Bishop White's address, in English, to the confirmed, the Rev. G. Hammaraskold preached in Swedish on "The following of Christ." The evening sermon, on "The Holy Ghost," was by the rector, the Rev. Herman Lindskog, who was president of the conference, the closing meeting of which, for business, including the election of officers, was held on Monday.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At the General Theological Seminary, the Rev. August Ulmann, D.D., head-master of Trinity School, delivered a lecture, April 18th, on "German Rationalism."

The Rev. Dr. Wm. R. Huntington preached a special sermon on Low Sunday at the Adams chapel of the Union Theological Seminary, on the subject of "The Holy Spirit."

At St. Peter's church, Port Chester, the Rev. Chas. E. Brugler, rector, the Easter offering exceeded $1,200. A generous parishioner has given new carpets for the nave.

At the last meeting of the New York Churchmen's Association, the Rev. Arthur Ritchie read a paper on "Pusey and Wiseman, and their respective efforts to re-Catholicize England."

At the church of the Holy Communion, the Rev. Dr. Henry Mottet, rector, April 19th, the sacred cantata, "The vision of St. John," was rendered under the supervision of the composer, Mr. C. Whitney Coombs.

At the April meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, just held at the Church Missions House, an earnest appeal for increased mission work in the South was made by the Rev. Thomas C. Wetmore, of the missionary district of Asheville, N. C.

A dinner of the class of 1863 of Columbia University, at the Reform Club, April 11th, which was the first re-assembling of the class in 33 years, was made notable by the presence of a number of clergymen of the Church, including Bishop Satterlee, the Rev. Prof. Randall C. Hall, D.D., of the General Theological Seminary, and the Rev. Messrs. Stephen F. Holmes and Geo. W. Ferguson.

Consecration Rhinelander Memorial

The construction of the church of the Holy Trinity, connected with St. James' parish, is so near completion that Bishop Potter has appointed the consecration service for May 6th.

St. Mary's Church, Tuxedo Park

More than $3,000 has been raised toward a needed parish house, and it is hoped that with the summer influx of visitors, the whole sum needed may be supplied and work may be begun. The Rev. G. G. Merrill is rector.

Legacies to Charities

St. Luke's Hospital has received a legacy of $5,000, by the will of the late Mrs. Harriett B. Smedberg, for the endowment of a bed in memory of her son, Hugh Auchincloss Smedberg. The Episcopal Orphan Asylum has received $1,000.

Roof Garden for the Children

At St. Bartholomew's parish house, the roof garden is to be utilized for teaching the children of the kindergarten classes the art of gardening. Earth is being deposited on the roof, and flower beds will be planted and tended by the little gardeners.

Death of Rev. S. M. Akerly

The Rev. Samuel Mitchell Akerly died suddenly in this city on Low Sunday. He was a native of New York and an alumnus of Columbia University, and received the diaconate and priesthood at the hands of the late Bishop Horatio Potter. He held several rectorships in this State.

Death of a Mission Worker

The city mission work has experienced a great loss in the death of Mrs. Matilda S. Studwell who for more than 30 years has been active in mission work among the criminals in the city prisons, and for most of that time a systematic visitor among the inmates of the almshouse, hospitals, and penal establishments at Blackwell's Island.

St. Thomas' Church

The building adjoining the sacred edifice, and heretofore known as the almonry, is to be considerably increased in size during the coming summer. The enlargement is necessitated by the growth of the charitable organizations of the parish. The rector, the Rev. Dr. John W. Brown, contemplates spending the summer season in European travel.

Mission of Church of Heavenly Rest

This parish, the Rev. D. Parker Morgan, D. D., rector, has arranged for a prolongation of the lease of the present building used for its mission chapel, by a payment of $2,000. A like sum is needed each year for the payment of rental. Towards these objects the Easter offering has been applied.

Christ Church, Poughkeepsie

The church debt is to be reduced by $10,000, with the proceeds of a legacy by from the late Edgar M. Van Kleek. A pew has been endowed for the use of strangers, with the sum of $3,000 provided by a bequest of Mrs. Kate E. Van Kleek. A tablet has been erected in memory of the late Dr. E. H. Parker. It is Gothic in design, of Caen stone, with onyx pillars, and is from the church furnishing house of J. & R. Lamb. The cost exceeded $200.

The Pro-Cathedral Chapel

At his recent visitation, Bishop Potter administered the rite of Confirmation to 49 candidates presented by the new vicar, the Rev. Robert L. Paddock. The Ven. Archdeacon Tiffany, D. D., and the Rev. Canons Nelson and Humphreys, of the new cathedral body, were present and assisting. As the poor of the congregation retired, the Bishop stood near the door and renewed the acquaintance with each, formed during his former summer residence and personal work among them. At the celebration of Benefactors' Day a large number of the supporters and friends of the mission assembled, and met the Bishop and clergy. Afterwards there was an inspection of the work being accomplished, and refreshments were served.

Columbia University

Ex-Mayor Abram S. Hewitt and others of the alumni are issuing appeals to graduates of all departments of the university for subscriptions to erect an Alumni Memorial Hall on the same general plan as that at Harvard, and containing a much-needed dining hall. Thus far the subscriptions amount to $61,838.25, with several class treasurers yet to be heard from. The committee is desirous that the fund shall reach $100,000 before the anniversary alumni meeting on next commencement day, June 7th. At that meeting, Governor Roosevelt has promised to deliver an address. It is expected to make the Alumni Hall the social centre of the university. Arrangements are in progress for the creation of a new department of study in connection with commercial affairs. At the suggestion of President Seth Low, LL. D., the New York Chamber of Commerce has taken initiatory steps for the annual payment from its funds of sufficient to meet the expenses of the new department. The course contemplates four years of study for a degree, and will be analogous to other undergraduate departments.

Schools for Cuba

A largely attended meeting, under the auspices of Churchmen, was held April 12th, at the house of ex-Vice-President Levi P. Morton, in the interest of establishing schools in Cuba. Bishop Doane, of Albany, presided. A short address was made by Major-General Francis V. Greene; U. S. V., on the condition of children in Cuba. The Rev. Dr. W. Dudley Powers, General Secretary of the American Church Missionary Society, suggested that $80,000 be raised, and that the teachers be sent from this country.

Other addresses were made by Bishop Doane, the Rev. Dr. Wm. R. Huntington, Gen. Wagner Swayne, and Major John A. Logan. The meeting decided on no definite plan of procedure, but a committee to arouse interest and secure subscriptions was appointed, consisting of Bishop Potter, ex-Vice-President Levi P. Morton, Mr. Morris K. Jessup, President Seth Low, D.D., LL.D., the Rev. Drs. Wm. R. Huntington, and Wm. S. Rainsford, and others. An auxiliary committee of ladies was also appointed.

Bequests of Mrs. Caroline E. Hollister

By the will filed for probate April 12th, $1,000 is to be paid to the corporation of Trinity church to keep the graves and memorials of her family in Trinity cemetery in repair. The legacies include $5,000 to the Home for Incurables, at Fordham, to be used in founding the Johnson bed, in memory of her husband; a like amount to the Woman's Hospital, for the founding of the Eva Johnson bed, in memory of her daughter; $10,000 to the church of the Heavenly Rest, half of which is to be used for the perpetuation of a scholarship established by the testator some time ago. The sum of $5,000 each is given to the House of Mercy, the Orphans' Home and Asylum of the P. E. Church, the Peabody Home for Aged and Indigent Women, the Temporary Home for Women, St. Luke's Home for Indigent Christian Females, the Society for the Destitute Blind, St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children, the Missionary Society of the Church, the New York Bible and Fruit Mission to Public Hospitals, the P. E. Church Missionary Society for Seamen of the City and Port of New York, and some six other unsectarian societies. To the Orphan Society is bequeathed $1,000. The residue of the estate, after personal bequests, is left to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church, and the Union Missionary Society of America for Heathen Lands.

Loving Cup in Memory of Dr. Fairbairn

During the fall of last year, at the suggestion of the Executive Committee, the alumni and undergraduates of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, united together to present to the Rev. R. B. Fairbairn, D.D., LL.D., the retiring warden of that institution, a token of their affection and respect. A substantial and beautiful loving cup of silver, lined with gold, and richly engraved, was the result. The cup weighs 50 ounces, and its selection and engraving were entrusted by the Executive Committee to the Rev. Dr. Kimber. It was made by Theodore B. Starr, of New York. On one side, beneath a fac simile of the college seal, engraved in mediæval English letters, is the legend:

Roberto Brinckerhoff Fairbairn. Sacerdoti, Sacrosanctæ, Theologicæ Doctori; Utriusque Juris Doctori. Sancti Stephani Collegii Annandæ Næ Eboracensi triginta quinque annos Presidi. Cum Alumnorum et academicæ civium amore atque honore. Anno Domini MDCCCXCIX.

On the reverse side there are engraved the letters R. B. F., 1878-1898., the period of Dr. Fairbairn's wardenship. It had been arranged to present the token at the annual dinner of the New York Alumni Association. The death of Dr. Fairbairn changed these plans, and it was not until April 10th that the dinner was given at Delmonico's. The cup was then presented to the representative of the family, Henry A. Fairbairn, Esq., M.D., a St. Stephen's alumnus, and a Mayflower descendant. The occasion was a notable one, and the scene impressive, as the loving cup, filled to the brim, was presented first by the Rev. Gilbert H. Sterling, D.D., with appropriate words, to the recipient, and was then returned by him to the former person, and thereafter passed around the whole assembly in silence and with due ceremony. The guests of honor were the Rev. George B. Hopson, D.D., acting warden of the college, and its professor of Latin for 35 years; the Rev. Prof. George W. Anthony, the Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Haskins, the rector of Dr. Fairbairn in his early youth, and trustees John Aspinwall and John V. L. Pruyn; 45 alumni were seated at the tables. Speeches were made and many assurances given that St. Stephen's, inspired by her record in the past, would continue to do good work in sound and thorough Christian education.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Up to the 14th inst., 53 Sunday schools have sent $3,043.08 to Geo. W. Jacobs, treasurer of the Lenten and Easter offerings.

The building committee of St. Paul's church, Chester, the Rev. F. M. Taitt, rector, has contracted for the erection of the new church edifice. It is stated that the cost will be about $45,000.

Two stores and dwellings hiding portions of St. Luke's church, Germantown, are being torn down, and after the debris has been removed, a lawn will be laid out, giving an unobstructed view of the church from the street.

The annual service for members and associates of the Girls' Friendly Society in the diocese, was held on Thursday evening, 13th inst., in the church of St. John the Evangelist, Philadelphia. After Evening Prayer, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. John Moncre.

The corporation of St. Stephen's church, Wissahickon, the Rev. E. J. Perot, rector, has purchased the three story plastered stone dwelling on Terrace av., north of the church, for $3,300. The property has a frontage of 25 ft., and extends in depth to Dexter st. The dwelling will be remodeled, to be used as a rectory.

Clerical Brotherhood

The first meeting, after the Easter recess, of the Clerical Brotherhood, was held on the 10th inst., at the Church House, Philadelphia. The Rev. R. H. Nelson delivered an address, on "What improvement can be made in the services at the opening of the diocesan convention?" After the matter had been discussed by several members, a committee was appointed to confer with Bishop Whitaker on the subject.

St. Peter's Guild

A very delightful affair was the entertainment at (old) St. Peter's Guild House, on Wednesday evening, 12th inst., for the benefit of the guild. It consisted of two parts—a pantomime, "Timothy Trott," excellently rendered, and a comedy in one act, entitled "To Let, Furnished," which afforded much amusement, and was the joint production of Miss Maria H. Lansdale and Miss Ellen D. Deland, the authoress.

Church Dispensary of Southwark

The 26th annual report, recently issued, states that owing to extra calls made upon various charities having the care of sick soldiers during the recent war, the receipts for this institution were considerably lessened. The treasurer's report shows receipts from all sources, $1,232 20; expenditures, $1,446.17; deficit (including $173 90 from 1897), $337.87. The report of the medical director gives a total of 11,078 patients treated, for whom 15,381 prescriptions were compounded, all free of charge.

The Midnight Mission

The annual donation day of the Germantown branch was held on the 13th inst., and was one of the most successful in the history of the mission. Gratifying quantities of supplies, beside contributions of money, were received. In the afternoon, religious services were conducted by the Rev. Messrs. S. C. Hill and C. H. Arndt, in which the 14 inmates of the mission took part. An exhibition of their handiwork was much admired by the many visitors.

A Farewell Sermon

On Sunday evening, 9th inst., the Rev. Alsop Leffingwell, one of the curates at the South memorial church of the Advocate, Philadelphia, preached his farewell sermon, and before concluding, thanked the members for their kindness to him during his six years of service in the parish. The Junior Bible class, which he had taught every Sunday, presented him with a picture of the class, handsomely framed, as a token of regret at his departure. At a general parish reception to the clergy of the church on Thursday evening, 13th inst., held in the parish house, Mr. Leffingwell said adieu to many of the congregation, who bade him Godspeed in his new work at Toledo, Ohio.

Convocation of Germantown

At a meeting held on the 11th inst., at Grace church, Mt. Airy, a sermon was preached by the Rev. F. W. Tomkins. At the business meeting, the Rev. Dr. J. DeW. Perry, president, in the chair, the committee on parochial boundaries presented a supplementary report, which, after some discussion, was adopted, except so far as it referred to four boundaries. The question of these disputed boundaries will be considered by the committee and the rectors of parishes concerned. The treasurer's report showed total receipts, $4,085; disbursements, $3,609 76. A public missionary meeting was held in the evening, at which addresses were made by the Rev. S. P. Keeling and the Rev. W. S. Baer.

Woman's Auxiliary

A conference of the Woman's Auxiliary, with the clergy, was held on Thursday afternoon, 13th inst., at the Church House, Philadelphia. Bishop Whitaker who presided, stated that the object of the meeting was for the better understanding of the relations of the auxiliary and clergy to each other, and to the Board of Missions. A paper, prepared by Mrs. Thomas S. Neilson, on "The duties of a delegate," was read. The Rev. Dr. J. N. Blanchard, Bishop Whitaker, and Archdeacon Brady, made addresses. Miss Bodine, the treasurer of the diocesan branch, reported that since October last the sum of $634.14 had been expended. Remarks were also made by the Rev. Messrs. J. P. Tyler, R. S. Eastman, W. H. Falkner, and others.

Bequests to Charities

In the will of Margaret S. Lockhart, admitted to probate on the 4th inst., are six bequests to charities, three of which are Church institutions; viz., to the Episcopal Hospital, $500; House of Mercy, City Mission, $500; Sheltering Arms, $300. In the will of Walter H. Tilden, probated 1st inst., estate valued "over $200,000," the residuary estate, after the death of his niece, is bequeathed to the Home for Aged Couples, on condition that it shall change its corporate title to the Tilden Home for Aged Couples. Should the trustees of the Home be unwilling or unable to make this change, the funds are to be divided among the most worthy charitable institutions of Philadelphia; the Episcopal Hospital, Christ Church Hospital, and the Home for Aged Couples, must be included among such institutions.

Episcopal Academy, Philadelphia

Commendation day was duly observed on the 14th inst. There were declamations by eight pupils. Dr. Wm. H. Klapp, the head master, read the names of the commended, with the highest honor, 37; with honor, 28; commended, 30. An address was made by the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins. Certificates were presented by Bishop Whitaker to those commended with the highest honor. Dr. Klapp announced that at a meeting of the board of trustees, held on the 10th inst., it had been decided to enlarge the building the coming season. The annual meeting of the Alumni Society was held in the evening, the Rev. Dr. J. Andrews Harris, president, in the chair. Dr. Klapp explained the proposed alterations to the building. Three stories are to be placed upon the east and west wings, affording four more recitation rooms, and an enlarged gymnasium. He also stated that out of 204 examinations of academy boys at the University of Pennsylvania, 31 were marked distinguished, 81, good, and 89, passed. Officers for the year were elected: President, the Rev. Dr. J. Andrews Harris; vice-president, George C. Thomas; secretary, Dr. Wm. H. Klapp; treasurer, R. Francis Wood, and a board of seven managers.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Joseph's church, Detroit, has arranged to borrow $20,000 from a Scotch company, at 5 per cent., which will be used to discharge the old mortgage drawing six per cent. interest, and to pay other liabilities. Mr. George Dingwall, for 16 years treasurer of the parish, has resigned, but still serves the parish as senior warden.

It is now fully understood that the church of the Messiah, Detroit, will erect a fine church edifice in a new location, but no details are announced.

The clerics of this city has taken an active part in support of a bill, now pending in the State legislature, to forbid Sunday theatrical exhibitions in the State. The Actors' Association of New York, has written in commendation of the proposed law, and it appears that the actors are generally opposed to Sunday performances.

The Rev. A. W. Mann spent Easter Day in Detroit, and held two services at Ephphatha mission. The Holy Communion was administered to 21 members; and Holy Baptism to two infant children of deaf-mute parents. On the previous Sunday, the Bishop confirmed three members of this "silent" mission, presented by the Rev. Dr. Prall.

Epiphany Parish, Detroit, Organized

Epiphany mission on Cadillac Boulevard has resolved to become a parish, and elected a vestry. Gen. L. S. Trowbridge, until this year a member of Christ church vestry, has been chosen senior warden. The Rev. O. A. Tarrant has been given charge of the work. There is every prospect of a strong parish.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At the church of the Incarnation, on Low Sunday, in the evening, the Bishop confirmed a class of 21, presented by the rector, the Rev. Wm. T. Snyder.

The funeral of the late Justice Field, of the United States Supreme Court, was held at the church of the Epiphany, on Thursday of the second week of Eastertide. The Bishop of Washington and the Rev. Dr. McKim conducted the service.

Easter at the Church of the Epiphany

There were several hundred communicants at the early Celebration. The Easter offering amounted to $2,267.81, in response to the rector's appeal for $2,000 for the floating debt. In the afternoon the three Sunday schools of the parish held their united festival. The offerings amounted to $146 for missions; flowers also were brought to be sent the next day to the sick and sorrowing.

Sunday School Institute

On Monday evening, April 10th, the monthly meeting of the diocesan institute was held in Trinity parish hall. The model lesson on the Ascension was given by the Rev. F. A. Henry, of Ohio, and an excellent paper, on "The duties of superintendents," was read by Mr. Dent, superintendent of St. Paul's Sunday school, which was followed by an animated discussion.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Bishop

On Thursday evening, March 23d, Bishop Whitehead made his annual visitation to Christ church, Meadville, and confirmed a class of 38, presented by the Rev. G. S. Richards, rector of the parish. This makes 143 who have been confirmed since Mr. Richards became rector, in 1897.

The Woman's Auxiliary held its monthly meeting at the Church Rooms, April 6th. Miss Sybil Carter made an address on the work and needs of the Church in Brazil, and also told of the progress of the lace work among the Indian women of the West. In the afternoon she held a lace sale at the residence of Mrs. Dr. Daly, at which an encouraging sum was realized from the sale of articles made by the Indian women.

The April meeting of the Clerical Union took place April 10th, at the Hotel Henry, beginning with luncheon at 1 o'clock. The paper was read by the Rev. William Thompson, subject, "The spirit of missions under the Old Testament Dispensation."

Memorial and Easter Gifts

St. Andrew's church, Clearfield, has received as a memorial gift, in behalf of Judge Barret and his wife, from their children, a very handsome pulpit. The base of the pulpit is of quartered oak, and the superstructure of brass. The design and workmanship were from the Phoenix Manufacturing Company, Eau Claire, Wis. St. Mary's church, Charleroi, received as an Easter gift from the children of the Sunday school, a beautiful thirty-inch brass altar cross.

On Easter Day there were presented to Trinity church, Pittsburgh, by members of the Gormly family, a handsome clergy stall of quartered oak, and an altar rail of brass and oak, in memory of Mrs. Mary A. Tschudi, and her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gormly. A large offering was received toward the erection of a parish house, which is to be procured by putting on a second story to the present chapel, and entirely remodeling the interior. Work will be begun on the building very soon, and it is hoped that it may be ready to be used by the 1st of October.

St. Luke's Church, Woodville

This is the oldest parish in the diocese, having been organized somewhere about 1760. The very old stone church for a number of years had been permitted to fall into disuse, but during the last year or two has been revived, and lately has been completely renovated. The interior has been very tastefully decorated, by the kind generosity of friends in neighboring parishes, and the work is now under the care of the Rev. Frank Steed, of the church of the Nativity, Crafton, who is assisted in this and other adjacent missions by two very efficient lay-readers. On Wednesday in Easter week, the church was re-opened with a service of benediction by the Bishop, assisted by the Rev. L. F. Cole, archdeacon of the diocese, and the Rev. Messrs. Steed, Benton, and Young. In the morning there were addresses by the Rev. Mr. Steed and Bishop Whitehead, two candidates were confirmed, and the Holy Communion was celebrated. Many visitors were present from Pittsburgh and the parishes in the vicinity, Woodville being about 12 miles from the city line. Luncheon was served to all in an adjoining building, and in the afternoon an historical address was delivered by Professor Chapman, dealing with the history of the Church in the Chartiers Valley, of which Woodville forms a part. In the evening there was another service with a crowded congregation, when the Rev. Mr. Cole preached the sermon. Very generous offerings were received both morning and evening for the benefit of the work.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A hopeful work has been begun at Brocton, under Archdeacon Bragdon. The Bishop visited this mission April 5th and administered Confirmation.

At Depew, a railroad town, there is much interest in Church matters. The congregation there has been for some time worshiping in a hall. The Depew Improvement Co. has presented to the Church a most desirable lot, 125 x 150 ft., on which to erect an edifice, and $1,500 is already pledged by the congregation for that purpose. The work here has been under the guidance of the Rev. G. A. Harvey, rector of Trinity church, Lancaster, who has recently baptized 10 adults in the new mission.

Church Debts Paid

Trinity church, Rochester, the Rev. W. C. Hubbard, rector, has recently paid off its entire indebtedness, and All Saint's parish, in the same city, will soon be in position to pay off a municipal assessment of $1,100, which has been a great burden on a parish of such modest ability.

Arkansas

Henry Niles Pierce, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Wm. M. Brown, D.D., Bishop-Coadjutor

A Sunday school was organized at Mena on the afternoon of the 2nd Sunday in Lent, with the goodly number of 29 children, and also a number of adults. Active steps are being taken to procure proper books for the use of the school. Mrs. A. J. Larkin has been elected secretary and treasurer of the school, which will ensure a hard worker at the helm.

The Bishop-Coadjutor has been in charge recently of Trinity church, Pine Bluff, holding a series of special services three times daily. Large congregations gathered to hear the Bishop. His sermons during the day time were especially to prepare a class for Confirmation.

Albany

William Croswell Doane, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

All Saints' Cathedral

There were three celebrations of the Holy Communion on Easter Day—the Bishop, the Dean, and Canon Fulcher; celebrants. The Bishop preached at the High Celebration, the Dean at choral Evensong. The choir of 45 men and boys, under Dr. J. Benton Tipton, sang a beautiful festival service. A large number of Communion were made. The family of the late Gen. Selden E. Marvin presented four handsome alms basins in a beautiful case, in his memory. Late in Lent the Women's Cathedral League held their annual meeting. The former officers were re-elected. The treasurer reported a balance of $769.41 on hand. This was voted to be added to the cathedral endowment fund which now amounts to about $64,000.

St. Peter's Church, Albany

The parishioners have had a most helpful Lent. The course of Wednesday addresses by the rector, the Rev. W. W. Battershall, D.D., were listened to by large congregations with great interest. At Evensong Dr. Battershall announced that the morning offerings amounted to something over $9,000. On Easter Monday, from 4 to 6, the Parish Aid Society held their annual reception. The parishioners were there in large numbers. Dr Battershall made an address, and a musical programme was rendered.

Memorials for Holy Innocents, Albany

On Easter Day several handsome memorials were received and blessed. Among them, a beautiful brass pulpit, in memory of the late senior warden, Samuel Van Santvord, by Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Toedet; a pair of brass altar vases, in memory of a late vestryman, Mr. James Oswald, the gift of the rector, the Rev. A. R. B. Hegeman and wife; also a Prayer Book and Hymnal for the chancel, in memory of Mrs. James Agar, and a chancel Hymnal, in memory of Walter Hines.

Woman's Auxiliary in Cooperstown

During Lent some very interesting papers were read by men before the Christ church branch of the Auxiliary: Prof. H. H. Combs, an interesting paper on "Missions in Northern Maine"; Mr. G. Pomeroy Keese, an historical paper, on "The Church, past and present"; Mr. Henry E. Pellew, Hon. Secretary of the Commission for Colored Work, an address of widespread importance, of which he has, at the request of the rector, consented to send a copy to any W. A. branch desiring to read it.

Gifts to Grace Church, Waterford

This church has been enriched by the gift of a new velvet carpet for the chancel, which has been redecorated. A fine black walnut reredos, designed by Mr. R. Geissler, of New York, has been erected, the gift of St. Mary's chapter, in memory of those who had been connected with this old church in the past. It was blessed by the rector, the Rev. J. M. Gilbert, on Palm Sunday, at the early Celebration. On Easter Day, a handsome chancel Prayer Book was the gift of St. Paul's chapter.

Christ Church, Ballston Spa

On Easter Day, the Rev. Dr. Charles Pelle-treau entered upon the 16th year of his rectorship. By the improvements and additions made during his incumbency, the value of the property has almost doubled. At the present time the church is absolutely free from debt. The losses by removal and death have been many and serious during the past ten years. On Easter Day the offerings amounted to more than $500.

Maine

Rev. Henry Adams Neely, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. Dr. S. Cochrane Quinn, of Boston, with Mrs. Quinn, arrived in Winn, March 1st. Dr. Quinn takes charge of Winn, Kingman, Lincoln, and Bancroft, under appointment of the Bishop. Services will be held, as a rule, every Sunday morning in St. Thomas' church, Winn; every second Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, in St. Luke's, Kingman, and the last Sunday of the month, in Lincoln, at 3 P. M. Week night services will be held on Wednesdays, at 7 o'clock, in Winn; Fridays, at 7 o'clock, in Kingman, and every second Tuesday, at 7 o'clock, in Lincoln.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D. D., Bishop

The Easter offerings of Christ church, New Haven, amounted to $1,581.

The Easter offering, Grace church, Norwalk, the Rev. J. McClure Bellows, rector, was $1,250. The new choir of 36 voices, under the direction of Mr. Harry Pepper, formerly of St. Mark's, New York, will enter upon its first service the first Sunday in May. This choir is ten voices in excess of the present surplined choir, under the direction of Mr. James Baker who goes to Bridgeport. During Holy Week, especially Good Friday and Easter Day, the church was crowded.

The Rev. F. C. H. Wendel, Ph. D., has had charge of the Lenten services at Trinity church, Portland. The Rev. O. H. Raftery, rector, who has been unable to do any work since last October, is now convalescent, but does not expect to resume work for some months.

Visitations of the Bishop

Bishop Brewster confirmed a class of seven at Grace mission, Hadlyme, on Easter Monday afternoon. The youngest member of the class was 15, and the oldest was almost 70. The Rev. George W. Griffith, rector of St. Stephen's parish, East Haddam, is in charge. At the services, the Rev. F. C. H. Wendel, Ph. D., who founded the mission, and had charge from the last Sunday in April to the first Sunday in Sept., 1898, assisted.

Bishop Brewster has held recently two days of devotion for the clergy, one on Feb. 7th, for the Hartford Archdeaconry, and one in Mid-Lent, for the clergy of New London archdeaconry. The Bishop is making a very steady, thorough, and sympathetic visitation of his diocese. Although the very wet weather which has prevailed in this State on every Sunday for over two months, has seriously interfered with the preparation and presentation of candidates for Confirmation, yet there has been a noticeably large number of men and boys in the different classes. This is largely due in many cases, to the work of the senior and junior chapters of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which are doing yeoman's work in many parishes.

The Church Army

On the evening of Holy Thursday, the Church Army held a special service in Trinity chapel, New Haven. Mr. Alexander M. Hadden, of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in New York, spoke to the large gathering of men. Under Major Stansfield, the Army is doing good work in rescuing men. The Brotherhood is one of the recognized auxiliaries in this work, and the different chapters in the city have made themselves responsible for keeping up the services in St. Andrew's mission church, on Shelton ave., where there is the nucleus of a large parish in the future.

Memorial to Bishop Williams

A letter was sent to all the clergy, asking them on the 2nd Sunday after Easter to present to their congregations the subject of a memorial to the late Bishop of the diocese. The subject on which Bishop Brewster and a representative body of clergymen and laymen have decided as a suitable memorial, is the endowment of the chair of the "Dean and Professor of Doctrinal Theology," which was Bishop Williams' position in the Berkeley Divinity School. "This endowment," says the committee, "ought to be $75,000, and the raising of it is a part of the plan inaugurated by the Bishop himself more than a year ago." Of this sum, about $24,000 is already pledged, mostly in large amounts and by a few friends. The greater part of this is on condition that the entire sum be pledged. Now "all gifts will be welcomed from rich and poor throughout the Church who have known and loved and felt the man and his power. It is believed that many will consider it a privilege to contribute according to their ability toward this memorial of our great Bishop." Bishop Brewster says this "is the first and only memorial to receive the official sanction of those who stood nearest to Bishop Williams in matters relating to the Berkeley Divinity School." Contributions for this purpose are to be sent to the Rev. Cornelius G. Bristol, 92 Wethersfield ave., Hartford, Conn.

Confirmations in New Haven

Bishop Brewster, on the Eve of the Annunciation, confirmed six women at St. Faith's House. This is the first fruits of the noble effort inaugurated by Miss Lena McGhee to rescue and aid unfortunate women. The day following, the Bishop visited the New Haven hospital, and confirmed four persons. He also confirmed seven in private. In four days he confirmed as follows: Christ church, New Haven, 15; St. John's church, nine; St. Thomas' church, nine; Trinity church, 51; St. Paul's church, 38; Christ church, West Haven, 15, of whom two-thirds were men and boys.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

On Low Sunday a class of 50 was confirmed in the church of the Redeemer, Astoria.

A fair linen altar cloth, of beautiful drawn work, has been presented to St. Luke's church, Sea Cliff, by the women of Grace church, Newark, N. J., many of whom spent last summer in Sea Cliff, and attended St. Luke's.

Easter in St. Paul's, Brooklyn

On Easter Day the special offering reached a sum greater than had been asked; $800 was required, and more than $1,000 given, and the parish, the Rev. H. M. Dumbell, rector, after struggling hard for years, has to-day no indebtedness of any kind whatsoever. The church edifice is probably the finest, from an architectural point of view, in the borough; the congregation is increasing, and the outlook for the future promising. A handsome ewer has been given, and placed at the font, by the Girls' Friendly Society of the parish.

Dr. Bacchus' Twenty-fifth Anniversary

The 25th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. John Greenwood Bacchus, D. D., was held in the church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn, on Sunday, April 19th. The Bishop, who was unable to be present, sent a letter of congratulation, in which he spoke in the highest terms of Dr. Bacchus as a man, a clergyman, and a Christian. A special musical programme was given. Dr. Bacchus made a departure in not preaching a sermon of reminiscences, but in the evening he told briefly of the history of the parish during his long rectorship. He was followed by the Rev. A. B. Kinsolving, who paid a high tribute to the work of the Rev. Dr. Bacchus. The Bishop of Brazil also made an address. Dr. Bacchus gave a brief outline of his career in the ministry, and in conclusion referred feelingly to the relations between himself and the congregation, and paid a glowing tribute to their generosity, faith, integrity, and spirituality. Besides that from Bishop Littlejohn, letters of congratulation were read from the Rt. Rev. Chauncey D. Brewster, the Rev. Dr. A. J. Lyman, pastor of the South Congregational church, and the Rev. Dr. William M. Grosvenor. On the following evening a reception was given Dr. Bacchus and his family at the parish house. Previously there was a short service and addresses in the church. Ex-Judge Augustus Van Wyck presided, and the speakers were the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop, Colonel Bremner, senior warden of the church of the Incarnation, the Rev. Dr. McLeod, pastor of the Clinton Avenue Congregational church, and the Rev. Dr. J. F. Behrens, pastor of the Central Congregational church.

Resignation of the Rev. Dr. Nies

The Rev. Dr. James Buchanan Nies has resigned the rectorship of the church of the Epiphany. A year ago he accepted a year's leave of absence for the purpose of study and research in the Holy Land, and to recover his impaired health. The latter has in a measure been accomplished, and he is now desirous of extending and continuing his studies. Since his absence the Rev. Andrew Fleming has been in charge.

Dallas

Alexander Charles Garrett, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

The Bishop visited St. James' church, Texarkana, on Low Sunday and confirmed a class of 53 persons, prepared and presented by the rector, the Rev. Percy T. Fenn, D. D., Ph. D. On Easter Day the rector received from his parishioners an offering of $125, in recognition of the esteem in which they hold him.

Maryland

William Paret, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

St. Matthew's parish, Garrett Co., has received a beautiful altar of quartered oak, the gift of a Churchwoman of Baltimore, for use in the rectory chapel, at Oakland, the Rev. William Brayshaw, rector.

St. John's church, Hagerstown, was reopened Easter Day, after some very handsome improvements were made to the edifice by Mrs. Mollie Macgill Rosenberg, of Texas, as a memorial of her grandparents, Richard and Elizabeth Ragan. The improvements consist of a handsome carved oak reredos, an altar, a beautiful Gothic window, and a mosaic tile pavement forming the floor of the chancel.

Confirmations in Baltimore

Bishop Paret visited the chapel of the Advent, the Rev. Charles A. Hensel, rector, on March 31st, and administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of 33 persons—18 from the chapel of the Advent, three from Grace church, and 12 from the Locust Point Mission. On Easter Day, the Bishop confirmed a class of 12 at Trinity church, the Rev. Julius E. Grammer, D. D., rector. The Bishop also recently confirmed 42 at Mt. Calvary church, of whom 41 were from the chapel of St. Mary the Virgin, and one from St. Luke's church; 17 at Holy Trinity, and seven at St. Thomas' church, Homestead.

Emmanuel Church, Baltimore

At the Easter service, a new pulpit, elaborately wrought and beautifully finished, was uncovered. It is a gift to the church by a member of the congregation, and was received with the understanding that the name of the giver be announced by the rector at the Easter service, 20 years later, or in 1919, and not before. It is of brass, with heavy, highly polished standards, and exquisitely moulded figures. On the front, in bas-relief, is represented Christ blessing the children, while on either side are figures of the four Evangelists.

Easter Offerings

At Ascension church, Baltimore, the Rev. Charles C. Griffith, rector, the sum of $1,200 was raised. A portion of this sum will be used to liquidate the floating debt, and part will be the nucleus of a fund with which a new organ is to be purchased. The organ will cost about $5,000, and one member has already signified his intention to give $1,000 for this purpose. At the evening service at St. Peter's church, Baltimore, the rector, the Rev. Frederick W. Clamptett, announced that the sum of $6,700 was received, which will more than wipe out the floating debt.

St. Timothy's Church, Catonsville

The beautiful memorial window presented by Mrs. Henry James, in memory of her deceased husband, has been placed in position. The subject is St. Michael, the archangel, "The conquering spirit of religion, the fighting spirit of God." The angel is represented standing upon a flaming wheel, sword in hand, and shield uplifted. Over the coat of mail is a rich mantle, lined with ermine. Behind him is the white banner with its cross, and the surroundings are rich in varied tints and delicate colorings. The window was designed by Mr. Frederick Wilson, of the Tiffany Art Studio, New York, and was made there. The organ at the church is being remodeled, at a cost of about $2,000. Bishop Paret visited the church on March 28th, preached, and confirmed a class of 20 persons. The Rev. Percy F. Hall is rector.

The Keerl Fund for Missions

At a recent special meeting of the Committee of Missions, held at the episcopal residence, an appropriation of $400 was ordered from the interest of the Keerl fund, towards the stipend of a diocesan missionary to the deaf-mutes in Maryland, and also one of $2,000 from the same fund, for the rebuilding of the church at Canton, with the conditions that the special committee, appointed by the Archdeaconry of Baltimore to raise funds for the work of rebuilding, shall, before July 1st, have in hand at least $6,000, exclusive of this sum; and that the building committee shall be ready to begin the actual work of rebuilding by July 15th.

Marquette

Gershon Mott Williams, D.D., Bishop

Sault Ste. Marie

At St. James' church, the Rev. Wm. Johnson, rector, on Good Friday, there were morning and evening services, also the Three Hours' service, at which, and also in the evening, the congregation about filled the church. Easter Day communicants were 36 above last Easter's number. The offerings amounted to over $650, the largest ever made in the history of the parish; the debt of $600 which was on the parish when the present rector took charge one year ago, has now been canceled. The rector was presented with a purse of $40 by a number of the parishioners, together with a letter expressive of their esteem and affection. The larger part of the Easter offering was the result of self-denial during the Lenten season. The Sunday school Lenten offering for missions amounted to about $40.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop

Grace Church, Lyons (North Clinton)

On Quinquagesima Sunday, the new two-manual pipe organ was dedicated, to the great delight of the whole parish; it is the gift of Mr. W. T. Joyce. On the 3d Sunday in Lent, a beautiful window in the chancel, to the left of the altar, was unveiled to the memory of Miss Lucy Walden; the corresponding window on the right is to the memory of Miss Lola Ashton, two near and dear friends who "in death were not divided." Another window in the nave, a memorial of the late Mrs. Anna Gabriel, was blessed by Bishop Morrison at his visitation on Wednesday of Holy Week, when he preached in the evening, and was celebrant at the early service on Maundy Thursday. On the Sunday after Easter, a silver ciborium was consecrated, a gift of the Rev. George Sherwood Whitney, of Thomasville, Ga., in memory of his wife. The vested choir celebrated its 10th anniversary at Easter, and rendered especially fine selections, uniting in the evening with the choir of St. John's, Clinton, in a brilliant choral service at the latter church. Its ten years of continuous service are not excelled, it is believed, by any other choir in the diocese, and its faithful choirmaster, Mr. Arthur Holmes, and equally faithful organist, Miss Marian Rand, have both been with the choir from the beginning. On the Sunday after Easter, the rector, the Rev. C. W. Tyler, observed the fifth anniversary of his rectorate with a special Celebration, and in his sermon briefly reviewed his work in the parish, which includes 77 Baptisms, 49 Confirmations, 26 marriages, and 57 burials. In spite of much business depression and many losses by death and removal, the offerings have aggregated $15,000, of which $1,000 was for diocesan and missionary objects; over $6,000 have been expended on improvements to the property, and the remainder has covered parish expenses. The harmony of pastor and people has been unbroken during these years of faithful ministry.

Western Michigan

George De Normandie Gillespie, D.D., Bishop

The first resident pastor of the new mission at Dowagiac, the Rev. H. P. Vieborn, is much encouraged by the interest shown in the church. About 150 people attended service on Palm Sunday, with 250 on Easter Day, when the Knights Templar attended in a body. The services began two months ago, with an attendance of 20, in the old Universalist church.

Grace Church, Grand Rapids

The attendance and interest was good during Lent, with some 200 receiving the Holy Communion on Easter Day. The offerings, including $107 from the Sunday school, amounted to $500. The year of progress in this active parish has been marked by a Confirmation class of 25, and the following gifts at Easter: A brass cross for the altar, the gift of Mrs. Beal, in memory of her mother; a pair of brass vases for the altar, from the recent Confirmation class; wrought iron sanctuary gates; a richly bound litany book, the gift of Mrs. B. J. Reynolds; a fair linen cloth; a flagon chalice, and credence paten.

St. Mark's Church, Grand Rapids

Over 200 communions were made at the early Celebration, and the chancel was thronged later in the day, when the lily gates were opened by two of the choristers. About $1,000 was offered by the church and Sunday school during the day, over half of the amount being for missions. Beautiful altar vases and memorial offerings of flowers graced the altar. On Maundy Thursday, Bishop Gillespie confirmed a class of 21. In both parishes the Three Hours' service on Good Friday awakened unusual interest.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D.D., Bishop

A litany desk has been given to Christ church, Quincy, by the Rev. H. E. Cotton. It bears this inscription, and is in memory of his wife: "To the glory of God, and in memory of Catharine Louise Cotton, a devoted wife and mother."

The parishioners presented recently to the rector of St. George's, Lee, and his wife, a water color painting, in commemoration of the 25th anniversary of their marriage.

The Clerical Association

Topics and speakers announced are as follows: April 10, the Rev. L. K. Storrs, D.D., "The Church and the public schools"; April 17, the Rev. F. I. Paradise, "Bishop Williams"; April 24, the Rev. P. H. Steenstra, D.D., "The Bible of the Ninth Century B. C."; May 1, Mr. W. T. Stowe, "Our duty to discharged prisoners, and the work of the John Howard Home"; May 8, the Rev. Arthur N. Peaslee, "Miracles"; May 15, Marcus Morton, Esq., "Progressive charity"; May 22, Clara M. Carter (deaconess), "What a Christian woman can do in a parish"; May 29, an informal conference, "Religious ministrations in summer time."

St. Thomas' Church, Taunton

This church was opened on Easter Day. It is now completely restored and renovated, with many signs of improvements in arrangements and decorations. It will be remembered that in the latter part of last winter, during a blizzard, the church building took fire. After hours of persistent effort to curb the flames, the results showed a wrecked chancel and a badly damaged interior. In the work of renovation, a large sum of money has been expended. The entire roof has been reslated, the stone work pointed and restored, steam heat and ventilation introduced, water and sewerage provided, the clerestory and ten other windows set in new glass, the wood work entirely refinished, the ceilings sheathed, and all the walls frescoed. The chancel is new, and is furnished with many memorial gifts. A beautiful Caen stone altar and reredos have been placed there with solid foundations of masonry. The reredos is in five recesses, the centre being a high relief of the Crucifixion. The statues of the four Evangelists occupy the other niches, the carving is excellent, each face represented having its distinctive character. The altar has the Agnus bearing the banner of the cross, and lying upon the book with the seven seals. The Alpha and Omega are represented in the side panels. The mensa is of an intensely hard and polished French marble, and is set with five consecration crosses in red marble inlaid. The altar steps are in dark Tennessee marble, with two medallions of Florentine mosaic before the altar. The credence is carved oak. The chancel railing is of oak with grape vine of brass. The cathedral stalls are of oak, with canopies for men, and plain ones for the boys. The organ is a fine instrument, and was made by Jardine. There are also elaborately carved sanctuary chairs, pulpit, and litany desk. Terra cotta with borders and medallions, is the coloring of the nave, while in the chancel, the tint is warmer with an all-over design of pomegranates in gold, and a ceiling of light turquoise with border. The whole effect of these changes is very marked. The frescoes, altar, reredos, and most of the furniture, were designed by Archibald D. Sawyer, of New York. At the opening service on Easter, the rector, the Rev. Morton Stone, officiated. Holy Communion was celebrated in the chapel at 7:30, Morning Prayer was said at 10:45, and a short benediction service followed, in which the altar, organ, pulpit, and other furniture were blessed; sermon and second Celebration followed. The present rector has accomplished a good and aggressive work for the Church in this community. His ability has shown itself in the splendid results of a restored structure, more beautiful than before, and in conformity with the best ideals of ecclesiastical art. He has been greatly aided by the building committee of the parish. There is no parish in the southern part of the diocese that has a stronger hold upon the life of the community than this, and none that has such a future before it.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

In Trinity church, Portsmouth, the Rev. J. B. Funsten, rector, a very large Easter offering was taken up, amounting to upwards of $2,006.

St. Luke's church, Norfolk, raised on Easter Day $2,200 in money, with a balance in pledges, to make up $7,700, the debt on the church. This is to be paid in full by Oct. 1st, and then the church will be consecrated.

On April 5th, the rectory at Garrisonville, Stafford Co., was destroyed by fire. The rector, the Rev. Mr. Gibbons, and his family narrowly escaped with their lives. All of their belongings were lost, including Mr. Gibbons' library. There was an insurance of $1,000.

The consecration of the Rev. J. B. Funsten, rector of Trinity church, Portsmouth, to the bishopric of Boise, Idaho, will be held on April 27th. Bishop Whittle, of the diocese of Virginia, will preside; Bishop Burton, of Kentucky, will preach the sermon, and Bishops Randolph and Kinsolving will present the Bishop-elect.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

Recent Confirmations in Toledo were for Trinity, 25; St. Mark's, 6; Grace, 9; St. Paul, 17.

Bishop Brooke, acting for the Bishop of the diocese, confirmed at Calvary church, Sandusky, 28 persons on Low Sunday, making a total of 166 during the incumbency of the present rector, the Rev. E. V. Shayler, covering a period of a little over four years. The ladies of the parish presented the rector with a handsome Eucharistic stole on Easter Day.

Springfield

Geo. F. Seymour, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Chas. R. Hale, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

On Monday of Easter Week, Bishop Seymour was summoned to Cairo by the sudden and serious illness of Bishop Hale.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

M. N. Gilbert, D.D., LL.D., Bishop-coadjutor

Grace church, Montevideo, is in a better condition to-day than it has been for years. There is a boys' brigade, 60 members, and a gymnasium club of 40 young men, connected with the church.

The missions at Chatfield and St. Charles are being looked after by Mr. Simpson, a divinity student of Seabury.

The Rev. C. C. Rollett, rector of Christ church, Red Wing, has declined the election as general diocesan missionary.

The floating debt of $170, at Sleepy Eye, has been cancelled. The parishioners now contemplate erecting a rectory. When that is completed, a resident rector will be in demand. In the meantime, the Rev. W. H. Knowlton will continue to look after the spiritual welfare of the parishioners, as heretofore.

A new mission—St. Thomas—for colored people, has been inaugurated. They begin with a Sunday school at 3 P. M., and vespers at 4 P. M. The mission will be under the fostering care of St. Mark's parish, Minneapolis.

Mr. Joseph F. Langton has been appointed lay reader at Nativity Mission, North St. Paul. The Rev. W. C. Pope gives the parishioners a monthly Celebration.

A very neat and commodious vestry and guild room has been erected adjoining the church at St. Mary's, Merriam Park.

Good Condition of St. Paul Parishes

The Easter parish meetings showed increased membership, old standing debts wiped out, and finances in a healthy condition. The rector of St. Paul's, the Rev. John Wright, announced that the Easter Day offerings liquidated all outstanding debts, leaving his church practically free from financial burdens. The various parish organizations report substantial progress made during the past year, and bright prospects for the ensuing year. Perfect harmony prevailed at all the meetings.

Calvary Church, Rochester

The 10th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. W. W. Fowler was commemorated April 2d. During this decade the church has been remodeled, the guild hall erected, and many minor improvements made on the Church property in general. There are now 101 families in the parish cure, containing in all 459 persons. Of these, 388 are baptized, and 235 have received the rite of Confirmation. There are nine teachers and 73 pupils in the Sunday school; 13 persons were confirmed during the past year. The report of the treasurer showed that the parish was in excellent financial condition. The vestry has voted to grant the rector a three months' vacation, to be taken at any time he may elect during the coming year.

South Carolina

Ellison Capers, D.D., Bishop

During his visitations in March, Bishop Capers confirmed 63 candidates.

The Bishop recently visited St. Stephen's church, Willington, preaching an eloquent sermon, and confirming a class of five persons. This service was held during the day, and the public school adjourned, the children attending in a body, to the delight of the Bishop who commented on their attention throughout the service.

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D.D., Bishop

Gethsemane Church, Fargo

On Easter Even a goodly number of children received the sacrament of Baptism. Very large numbers partook of the Holy Communion at each service on Easter Day. The offerings, including two pledges, amounted to $3,290. It is hoped to complete the finest church this fall, the first story of which was erected last year.

St. Paul's, Grand Forks

St. Paul's parish was organized just 29 years ago Easter Monday. A year ago the parish reckoned 64 families, 267 baptized individuals, and 170 confirmed persons. This Easter there are 71 families, 200 confirmed persons, and 328 baptized individuals. The record for the year shows 32 Baptisms, 27 confirmed, and 109 Sunday school scholars and teachers. Easter, 1897, two years ago, the parish reckoned but 93 persons upon its list. Now there are more than double that number, which means an increase for the two years of over 100 per cent. The parish has raised $3,000, and paid $300 of debts incurred the year previous. Besides this, there has been over $300 expended in improvements to the rectory. The Easter offering this year, to be applied on the floating indebtedness, was over $450, and the Sunday school offering for mission work amounted to $30. The church edifice will be consecrated on Wednesday, May 31st, at which time the convocation of the jurisdiction will be held in this city.

Nebraska

George Worthington, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop

Bishop and Mrs. Worthington leave the diocese next month. The coming separation is being felt keenly, the Bishop having endeared himself very sincerely to all classes of the community. The illness, angina pectoris, necessitating the removal of Bishop Worthington from this altitude, is now felt to be one which cannot be tampered with any longer, and that elsewhere from Nebraska must be the home of the Bishop for many years to come.

The Standing Committee has given notice that at the diocesan annual council in May, the Bishop will ask for a coadjutor to be elected, as high medical authority certifies that a continued permanent residence in this State will prove fatal.

Canon Doherty's removal to Yankton, S. Dak., took place so quietly that his many friends throughout the diocese had no opportunity of testifying to him their love and confidence. Consequently, on his recent visit to Omaha for a few days, the occasion was seized upon by the city clergy as a fitting one to wish him "God-speed" in his new work and home; at the recent meeting of the clericus, valuable books were presented to Dr. Doherty, together with many assurances of affection and confidence.

Tennessee

Thomas Frank Gallor, D.D., Bishop

The 67th annual convention of the diocese of Tennessee will meet in St. Paul's church, Chattanooga, on Wednesday, May 17th.

Kansas

Frank Rosebrook Millsbaugh, D.D., Bishop

Easter at St. Paul's, Clay Centre

At the 7 A. M. Low Celebration, about half the communicants received. At 10 A. M., a marriage ceremony was performed by Dean Leeds. At 11 A. M., Morning Prayer was said, with the initiation of two young ladies into the order of the Daughters of the King, they having previously passed a good examination in Church doctrine and history. A special short service followed as a thanksgiving to Almighty God for the past prosperity of the parish, and the recent entire liquidation of debt on the handsome Church property, during which the two wardens, solemnly, and in view of the large congregation, committed to the flames the released mortgages and receipted notes. All present joined heartily and joyfully in singing Gloria in Excelsis Deo. There is now no debt anywhere on Church property in Dean Leeds' district. The Holy Eucharist was then celebrated. The boy choir and the quartette, one of the finest in the State, furnished the music.

Equally beautiful and hearty services were held at both the Wakefield parishes of St. John's-on-the-Prairie, and St. George's, 16 very muddy miles away. At the latter, as an Easter gift, and in memory of the first Wakefield rector, the Rev. Mr. Hickox, a handsome pulpit was exchanged for the lecturn which has been doing duty for several years. The altar, font, and pulpit are now all that could be desired. These three parishes, all in first-class condition, will soon be vacant, owing to the rector being obliged to return to Europe.

Laramie

Anson R. Graves, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Bishop visited Christ church, Sidney, Neb., and confirmed 11 on the evening of Easter Day, making a total of 16 confirmed within the past four months. At the children's service in the afternoon, the rector, the Rev. Thos. Bakes, baptized 11 persons. The present outlook for the Church in this place is very encouraging. The children's Lenten offering amounted to $22.10, and more to hear from.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Robert A. Gibson, D.D., Bishop-Coadjutor

Easter Sunday School Celebrations

At Christ church, Alexandria, the children's Easter offering amounted to $70, prizes were distributed to the various classes, and each scholar was presented with a growing plant. The children of St. Paul's Sunday school gave as their Lenten offering, $130. Grace church celebration took place at 9 A. M., and the offerings amounted to over $100.

Easter Services in Richmond

Never before in this city have the churches been so crowded, or the preparations for the services been so elaborate, as on Easter Day of 1899. The music was particularly worthy of notice. At St. Paul's church, Bishop Jaggard's sermons were among the strongest he has yet preached. Confirmation was held in this church at night. The Bishop left Richmond for his home immediately after the services.

The Monumental church was beautifully decorated on Easter Day. Holy Communion was celebrated at 6 A. M. The Bishop confirmed a class of 28 and preached. At Holy Trinity church, at the morning service, the rector, the Rev. J. J. Gravatt, made an appeal for $5,000 to pay off the church debt, and at the close of the night service the required amount had been obtained. Of this sum, the Ladies' Industrial Guild raised $500. The members of the two commanderies of Knights Templar attended this service in a body. The offerings of the Sunday school amounted to $280.

Louisiana

Davis Sessums, D.D., Bishop

All the churches report well-attended services on Easter. In the city the rule was two or three celebrations of the Holy Communion in each church, and the Easter offerings seem to have been satisfactory everywhere.

St. Stephen's church, Maringouin, has a new fence about the church and cemetery. The money for this needed improvement was made during Lent, by means of the Easter egg envelope.

The Rev. Dr. Warner, in addition to his own many duties in Trinity parish, New Orleans, has been taking an active part in the delivery of free lectures of an instructive kind, to the poor.

Presentation to the Rev. Mr. Slack

The Rev. Mr. Slack, in charge of the church of the Epiphany and St. John's church, at Opelousas and Washington, has been presented by the people to whom he ministers, with a beautiful paten and chalice. The latter is encrusted with rare gems.

Confirmation at St. Anna's, New Orleans

Bishop Sessums on Passion Sunday confirmed a class of 50 at St. Anna's church, one of, if not, the largest class presented this year in the diocese. The Bishop also preached with his usual force and eloquence.

Sixty-first Annual Council

The council met in Christ church cathedral, April 12th. The opening service consisted of a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, Bishop Sessums, celebrant, the Rev. Joseph Spearing being preacher. The Bishop's address was instructive and interesting.

Standing Committee elected: The Rev. Drs. John Percival and H. H. Waters, the Rev. M. Brewster; Messrs. F. N. Butler, James McConnell, and G. R. Westfeldt.

The treasurer of the diocese, Mr. Edwin Belknap, reported receipts of the Episcopal Fund, $5,782.08, leaving a balance of $782.08 to begin the conciliar year. The Council Fund also showed a balance of $841.47. The treasurer for the diocesan kindergarten made an excellent report, evidencing a balance of $293.25. The Committee on the State of the Church congratulated the council on the progress made during the past year. The improvements made in St. Anna's parish, New Orleans, the giving out of the contract for a new church in St. George's parish, New Orleans, and the foundation of a Church school at Alexandria, all came in for favorable mention. Contributions for general Church purposes in the diocese exceeded by $5,600 those for last year. A review of missionary effort in the city and in the country, showed great results achieved.

During the council there were daily celebrations of the Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M., in the chapel of the cathedral. The lunches provided by the city parishes, and served by the ladies from all the parishes, served to bring the city and country clergy in closer touch with one another.

Woman's Auxiliary

At the annual meeting held during the session of the diocesan council, the report of the treasurer showed disbursements during the year of $1,069.50, and a balance on hand of $40.95. Addresses were made by the Bishop, Dr. Warner, Mr. Brewster, and others. Mrs. Claverius reported having on hand $23.12 towards assisting in building a mission house in China, and Mrs. Ida A. Richardson reported the sending of $600 to Miss Suthon, Louisiana's missionary in Japan. The following officers were elected: Mrs. T. G. Richardson, president; Mrs. J. P. Hornor, vice-president; Miss E. Greenwood, treasurer; Mrs. Fred. N. Ogden, corresponding secretary; Mrs. R. L. Robertson, recording secretary.

Junior Auxiliary

The report was read by Miss Josephine Hornor of St. Anna's parish. It was excellently written, and very interesting, telling of the box sent St. Mary's mission, Sewanee, and the help extended several missionary clergymen in the diocese. Miss F. Breeden, corresponding secretary, made a report showing expenditures among various missions of $140.65. Miss Carrie Girault, treasurer, in her report mentioned disbursements as $208.25, and a balance on hand of $23.74.

MAY

1. P. M., Trinity, Mineral Point.
4. P. M., St. Mary's, Kilbourn.
5. P. M., St. Paul's, Tomah.
9. P. M., Emmanuel, Lancaster.
11. P. M., St. Luke's, Whitewater.
12. P. M., St. John's, Elkhorn.
15. P. M., Grace church, Hartland.
19. P. M., Christ church, Delavan.
22. P. M., St. John's, Portage.

St. Clement's, Whitefish Bay, has recently paid in $20 additional, on their improvement debt—now reduced to $90. This small balance will soon disappear, as the ladies of the guild are working towards this end.

A branch of the Woman's Auxiliary has been formed in St. Luke's parish, Racine, the Rev. Dr. Piper, rector; 21 women have zealously taken up the work, and it is expected that as the value and efforts of the auxiliary are better understood, this number will be largely increased.

Payment on the Cathedral Debt

The cathedral congregation has paid in $1,000 on their only remaining mortgage debt, that on the cathedral guild hall. This mortgage now remains but $3,000, at 5 per cent. interest; and for this a sinking fund is provided, which will wipe out the whole debt when the mortgage becomes due. The entire cathedral property, with its noble plant of buildings, then becomes absolutely free of incumbrances.

Central Pennsylvania

Ethelbert Talbot, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A correspondent writes: "Scranton is worthy of more than a passing notice. With a population, including its suburbs, of considerably over 100,000, I found the Church work carried on with a self sacrificing zeal, energy, and ability which is bearing precious and abundant fruit from the centre to the circumference. At the centre, the rector of St. Luke's, the Rev. Rogers Israel, whose loving character, marked ability, and deeds of charity single him out as a true man of God, wields a widespread and most salutary influence within and without the Church; frequently exchanging pulpits with his assistants, and helping them most generously to carry their financial burdens. These clergy, notably the Rev. Edward J. Houghton and the Rev. Mr. McHenry, catching his spirit, are pushing out and establishing new missions in their respective suburbs. Thus the leaven at the centre is leavening the whole lump, and the good work of extending the Church and saving souls is carried on. A parish house, used for a great variety of important purposes, has just been completed in Scranton. An appendage of St. Luke's church, it is memorial, the gift of Mrs. Phelps, in loving memory of her parents. It is the finest and most complete of the kind that I have seen, and cost nearly $40,000.

"Greenridge parish, near by, under the able management of the Rev. F. S. Ballentine, is strong and prosperous.

"I noticed with great pleasure that in these parishes and missions the men attend church, and take a lively interest in the work."

Throop Memorial Parish House, Scranton

The formal presentation of this memorial gift to St. Luke's parish took place on April 10th. The Rev. Rogers Israel, the rector, was the first speaker on the occasion. "The dream of ten years ago had become a reality," Mr. Everett Warren, representing Mrs. Mary Throop Phelps, the donor of the building, referred to the parish labors of Dr. and Mrs. B. H. Throop, of whom it is a memorial, and presented the key to the rector. The junior warden, Mr. A. D. Holland, made an address of acceptance, in which he spoke of the value and use of parish houses, and especially of Dr. Throop's work in the parish. He was indeed "the beloved physician" in many a household. When the old St. Luke's church was abandoned he bought the property, paying for it a higher price than could be secured elsewhere at that time, and converted it into a free hospital for accident and emergency cases, a charity of which Scranton had been long in need. Knight's Te Deum was sung by the choir, and the office of benediction was conducted by Bishop Talbot who also made an address. During the evening, Bishop Talbot, the Rev. Rogers Israel, and Mrs. Israel, the associate clergy, with Mrs. Mary Throop Phelps, held a reception. The building, as now completed, is a most elaborate and substantial memorial. It is a four story structure of stone, in the Gothic style of architecture. Entering through a large vestibule, connecting it with the church, one is impressed with its elegant and beautiful proportions. On the first story are the clergymen's offices, the Woman's Guild rooms with toilet rooms, and the Sunday school library. All are elegantly furnished and carpeted, and equipped with electric and gas lights and steam heat. In the basement is a large room, with closets, to be used for supplies to the poor. There is a large toilet room and a laundry. The Sunday school room, 100 ft. long, 32 ft. wide, and 20 ft. high, occupies also the first story. It will be used for social gatherings, a gallery being at one end, and at the other a stage. Five divisions, divided by curtains, can be used for graded classes. An opening into the organ chamber of the church makes it possible to utilize the organ for services. In a wing at the rear of the organ chamber are the choir and robing rooms. In the second story are commodious kitchens and pantries for a cooking school; also the Young Women's Guild rooms. The Young Men's Guild rooms are on the third story, and rooms for kindergarten and industrial work. The fourth story has living apartments for the clergy, nurses, sexton, janitor, etc., all well arranged and separated.

North Carolina

Joseph Blount Cheshire, Jr., D.D., Bishop

Mrs. Lyman, widow of the late Bishop Lyman, has lately had the Bishop's episcopal ring set as a jewel in the head of the pastoral staff that was presented to him over seven years ago, by the clergy and laity of his diocese, on the 50th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. This staff is a beautiful piece of workmanship, the crook being of solid silver, ornamented with symbolical figures, and wrought into beautiful form. The staff is to be handed down to the Bishop's successors, as a memorial.

The choir stalls which were used by the new vested choir of St. Ambrose church, Raleigh, on Easter Day, have been made by the carpentry department of St. Augustine's Church School, at Raleigh.

Bishop Gray, of Southern Florida, recently received a gift of $10 from the congregation of St. Augustine's chapel (colored) for the relief of a deceased colored clergyman's family, and to help erect a stone to his memory.

The Bishopric of Boise

THE consecration of the Rev. James Bowen Funsten, of Portsmouth, Virginia, as bishop for the missionary district of Boise, has, we are informed, been appointed to take place April 27th. This announcement raises a question of some importance. Mr. Funsten was elected at the General Convention of last October. He, however, formally declined to accept the appointment. Subsequently, the Presiding Bishop, pronouncing the bishopric of Boise vacant, called a meeting of the House of Bishops for the purpose of making a new election. This meeting has not yet taken place; but, meanwhile, Mr. Funsten, having changed his mind, was allowed to withdraw his declination without waiting for the bishops to consider it, and order has been taken for his consecration. The regularity of this proceeding is strongly questioned. It is claimed that when a bishop-elect has once declined the honor conferred upon him, he cannot retract except with the consent of the House of Bishops. In other words, when he has declined, the matter is at an end, so far as the first election is concerned, and a new election must take place; otherwise, a question arises touching the matter of jurisdiction. That a precisely similar case has not arisen before, renders it all the more advisable that it should not be settled without due deliberation. It is a matter for the consideration of our ablest canonists. Possibly they may have been consulted, though the rapidity with which events have succeeded each other makes it improbable. The fact appears to be—we speak under correction—that from the moment the election was formally declined, the bishopric became vacant, and that no individual or body can fill the vacancy except the House of Bishops. We have reason to believe that a considerable number of influential bishops take this view of the case, and that an endeavor is being made to prevent the consecration, or at least to have it delayed until the matter can be satisfactorily adjusted. In such a case, it must be evident that hasty action is most objectionable, particularly in view of the unpleasant consequences which might easily follow. In all this there is not the slightest question of Mr. Funsten's high character, or his entire fitness for the office of bishop. But it would be most embarrassing to all concerned, and especially so to Mr. Funsten himself, if, after his consecration, his title to jurisdiction were to be called in question, and his right contested to a seat in the House of Bishops.

What People Want

DR. MCCONNELL appears to think that because he has found it difficult to obtain a place for a competent priest where he will receive $1,000 a year and have a house free of rent, therefore there is no longer "any room in the ministry." The ministry, it seems, ought to be a comfortable profession, without hardship or poverty. But surely this is a very modern view of the matter. We venture to say that at every period of history, and in every part of the Church where the Gospel is being preached with any fervor, and its principles carried out with zeal, the clergy have had much to contend with in the way of poverty, if not persecution. Our Blessed Lord in sending forth his Apostles, gave them no promise of an easy life, and St. Paul, we know, worked at a trade. It is this Apostle who speaks of himself and his companions as "in all things approving themselves as the ministers of God in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses. . . . as poor, yet making many rich, as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." It is true that in other passages he insists strongly on the duty of Christian people to contribute to the support of those who minister to them in spiritual things (though he himself will not profit by it), and he expresses these admonitions in terms which imply that this obligation was not always fulfilled with cheerfulness or liberality. Perhaps these primitive clergy did not give their congregations "what they wanted," as we are assured by Dr. McConnell that where that is done there is no difficulty about support. Alas! we fear it is too often true that faithful priests do not give people "what they want," or that they even give them positively what they do not want.

AN earnest preacher who had been discoursing with great directness on sin and responsibility, was taken to task by an active and leading lady of the congregation who wished he would not dwell on such dark and dreadful subjects. For her part, she did not believe people were responsible; what we call "sin" was merely the product of heredity and environment. A man had no use for this preaching about sin. He denied that he was himself a sinner, and he would never stultify himself by joining in the General Confession, or saying, "Forgive us our trespasses." The fact is that this disbelief in sin is, explicitly or implicitly, very wide-spread. It may be said of a great many people that they do not want to hear anything about it. Hence the popularity of what is called "the People's Church," in many of our Western towns. No doubt also this is one secret of the rapid spread of "Christian Science." But the minister of Him who died to "save His people from their sins," must preach about sin. He cannot prophesy "smooth things," without being false to his duty. And so long as the clergy fulfill this obligation frankly and fearlessly, they must run the risk of poverty and hardship. As the Rev. E. W. Worthington says, in a letter to The Churchman, "Always, everywhere, and under every system that can be devised, must it not necessarily be difficult to induce men (not the saints, but men as we find them) to pay money for the support of an institution which is in duty bound to tell them perpetually what they do not like to hear?"

YET when it is said that the age is becoming less Christian, and that a part of the trouble, at least, lies at the door of the Christian organizations, and of the Church with the rest, it is worth while to inquire whether there is any truth in this charge. It is expressed in various ways. It is very common, for instance, to say that the Christianity of nineteen centuries has become antiquated, that it needs adjustment, in fact, transformation, to suit the spirit of the age. We are even told that the old antithesis between the Church and the world no longer exists, that the world at its best is now in entire accord with all that has any permanent worth in religion, that it is time for religion to recognize this, and to cast away what still remains as a barrier, and thus bring about a reconciliation and a final union between what the New Testament constantly declares to be opposing elements.

OF course this includes the rejection of the supernatural. In reality it means, though disguised under a thousand forms, unconditional surrender on the part of the Church. This, we take it, is the meaning of the unceasing declamation against the dogmatic element in religion. People, it is said, are tired of dogma, they do not want creeds, and if we persist in imposing them as propositions which must be accepted, they will turn away from us. But dogmatic creeds, that is, statements which are asserted as true though they are not the results of human discovery or philosophic reasoning, are simply the expression of the supernatural. They do not proceed from the investigations of human science, and are not ascertained by inductive processes, but are things which have come from God to man as revelations, and which could not have been ascertained in any other way. The "spirit of the age" is certainly opposed to the supernatural, and hence it is opposed to dogma. But it is the supernatural as necessary for man which is the very reason for the existence of the Church. With this eliminated, it becomes difficult to justify the continuance of any organization which can rightly be called a "Church." Associations for ethical culture might continue to exist, but for the rest, the churches must become merged in societies for philanthropic or sociological purposes.

ON the other hand, attention is drawn to the fact that the "Christian pulpit" (we refer here to the so-called orthodox denominations) has been more or less affected by "the spirit of the age," and that it often gives forth an uncertain sound. And it is asserted that in the anxiety to give the people "what they want," many old doctrines have ceased to be preached, and others are handled vaguely, and without force or effectiveness. The trouble then is, according to those who consider these facts, not that there is too much dogma, too much of the supernatural, but too little. "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed." If this be all religion has to give us, men are led to say, we need not trouble ourselves with its support. There is in it nothing vital, nothing which constitutes a moral obligation. It seems to us that there is in this way of looking at things much more of truth than in the other. People who have ever felt that they had souls to be saved are not being driven from religion in this day and generation because there is too much "dogma," but because there is too little. In much of the Christianity that is preached there is a sad lack of power. It has been emasculated of the elements which gave it power. That all men are sinners, and that they are responsible and must one day give an account; that they were made for God, but are kept from God by sin; that there is no other name given under heaven whereby they may be saved, save the Name of Jesus Christ—such are the themes of a truly Christian pulpit. To “adapt” ourselves to the age, is not to preach “what people want,” but what they need, and the needs of humanity are at bottom the same in every age. Repentance, conversion, faith, are not out of date, nor will ever be. It is true enough that if the Church sends out preachers of this type, they will seldom be popular, for they must say much which people—many people—do not like to hear. It is only here and there that a man of commanding personality and genius can, under such circumstances, win the popular ear. The rank and file of faithful men, just because they are faithful, will remain poor, and will have to approve themselves as ministers of God in much patience, in necessities, and in distresses.

A Physician's Estimate of “Christian Science”

IT is not often that we stray into the literary pastures of the medical profession, but while glancing over the table of contents of a recent number of The Journal of the American Medical Association (Vol. XXXII No. 11, March 18, 1899), our attention was arrested by the title of an article on “Christian Science, the new theologicophilosophic therapeutics,” by one of the most eminent surgeons in the country,* and we immediately became interested in what he had written on the subject. Of course we expected to find this learned physician an opponent of the new cult, but what we were anxious to ascertain was to what extent his point of view and his general estimate of Mrs. Eddy's sect and its principles, coincided with those of orthodox theologians.

DR. ANDREWS, while premising that “the discussion of theologic opinions in a medical journal is felt to be abhorrent to good taste,” justifies himself by the fact that “Christian Science intrudes itself upon us, both as a religion and a healing art inextricably mixed together.” He rightly alleges that it employs its peculiar theology as a weapon to attack the science of medicine, and with it all the other physical sciences. After giving a condensed account of Mrs. Eddy's system of theology and philosophy, the singular trait of which he remarks, “is a steady habit of self-contradiction,” he turns his attention to her therapeutics. Here the self-contradiction is even more patent. For the entire “treatment” of Christian Science proceeds upon the idea that the disease does not exist, is a delusion of “mortal mind,” and yet the “healers” will boast to outsiders of wonderful cures performed upon those afflicted with the most dangerous and deadly diseases. The writer asks: “Why do these people say at one time that the disease never existed, and then describe its horrible character, and boast to us how they cured it?” It appears, however, that up to the present time surgical cases are rather intangible to Christian Science, although it is claimed that dislocated bones have been set by the power of “immortal mind,” without touching them. We cannot forbear to ask our readers to enjoy the gentle sarcasm of Dr. Andrews upon these alleged surgery cases: “It must be very interesting to see a non-existent bone, having only the substantiality of thought, which had been dislocated from a socket which never existed, going back without being touched into that imaginary socket with a thump audible to all the bystanders.”

MEDICAL men and theologians agree, if Dr. Andrews speaks for his profession, that in its theology and philosophy this new cult is really “a species of pantheism, teaching that ‘God is all in All,’ and nothing else exists.” But theologians can add to this diagnosis the further observation that Christian Science tallies more completely with the Gnosticism of the second century of the Christian era than any religio-philosophic system that has appeared for centuries. The Docetic Gnostics of the first and second centuries held substantially the same opinions as to the predominance of “immortal mind,” and the unreality of matter. The moral result of it all, after it had had time to reach its logical results, was in one direction singular, and in another, horrible. The non-existence of matter drove one class, the more spiritually minded, into the practice of a fanatical asceticism, much like that of the fakirs of India. The same theory was held by the sensual-minded to justify them in committing all sorts of sins of lust and intemperance, since, if the body did not really exist, such actions possessed no moral quality, but were indifferent altogether. A system as weak in philosophy and logic as that of “Christian Science” offers no safeguard against the development of either extreme in due time, just as it has happened under similar conditions in the past.

Father Austin and His Teachings--XVI.

BY THE RT. REV. DR. McLAREN,

IN a sermon which Father Austin preached on prayer, he said, among other things, that the proportionate importance of the spirit of prayer, as compared with its outward manifestations, was so overwhelmingly great that rules with respect to time, place, and method were idle and injurious, unless the attraction of the soul to God was genuine and constant. The practice of doing things devotional was a temptation to the deceitful heart to let routine take the place of spiritual virility. The only thing which could not be dispensed with was the activity of the spiritual faculties. The spirit was the essence, expression by words the accident, of prayer. Better far to pray with the spirit only than with words only, because the former would be essential prayer, while the latter would not be prayer at all, as Isaiah has taught (Ch. xxix: 13, 14).

One of his hearers, a man of exemplary fondness for practices of devotion, imagining himself censured by these remarks, embraced an early opportunity to say to his pastor that if it should appear to be to his spiritual advantage, he was willing under advice to give up his external practices.

To this, Father Austin replied that there was nothing said in his sermon to justify any such inference as that.

“Will you kindly consider, my dear friend, that the word prayer is used in many senses, and that beneath them all, and imparting itself to all, is the simple idea of the elevation or uplifting of the spirit of man to God for the purpose of converse and communion? Consider further that the moment this idea of prayer ceases to be effective, prayer ceases to be such. There are two ways in which it operates: first, as trust, love, penitence, adoration, contemplation, without words, attitude, or any other method of expression; second, as the same spiritual graces outwardly expressing themselves. It is possible for the spirit to pray without words, but it is not possible for words alone to constitute prayer. This truth should be strongly stated, and yet not so strongly as to disparage external expression, for the action of the spiritual faculties is facilitated and regulated by method, except in cases, not of frequent occurrence, when prayer is wholly interior. The spirit of prayer may be illustrated by the nutritive principle in food. Without it, food is valueless. Such food may be taken into the system, but it supplies neither refreshment nor nourishment. It is therefore absolutely essential that the food contain the factor of nutrition. When we speak of prayer as the food of the soul, we mean that its virtue consists in a hidden principle of spiritual attraction, by which the soul is sweetly drawn to seek, find, and commune with God. As the element of nutrition is ordinarily partaken in the use of the food which contains it, so in all cases, except those where vocation has been to the highest planes of prayer, the effects of prayer are attained by the observance of rules with respect to time, place, attitude, and expression. The exceptional cases are apparently so few that we may speak of spirit and method as co-ordinates, and indeed it is only after long years of thoroughness in method that souls ever rise to contemplative heights. Even then they are constantly falling back on method; such, at any rate, is their testimony, and you and I, dear friend, ought to accept the word of those holy souls.

“Following the analogy of food, we ought to pray as we eat, at stated times. I do not say that it is as easy to pray as to eat, for with the most of us physical appetite is stronger than spiritual. It is much less difficult to neglect a call to the oratory than to the refectory, and there are to my knowledge many starved souls who have not possessed strength of character sufficient to enable them to live up to a rule of stated devotion. What fleshless skeletons they would be had they pursued the same course with their bodies! Imagine yourself going to the table for food only now and then, only upon some great occasion or exigency, only to alleviate the symptoms of impending starvation; and yet that is the way of prayer which thousands practice! In either case, whether of eating or praying, the adoption of particular times induces a habit. Habit is an act constantly repeated, and a good habit immeasurably enhances the value of good acts.

“How frequent our appointed occasions of prayer ought to be, and how much time should be devoted to them, depends on the circumstances of each individual; but the spirit of prayer could not satisfy itself with infrequency. The Psalmist's rule is a good one: ‘In the evening, and morning, and at noon-day, will I pray, and that instantly, and He shall hear my voice.’ But in other places he puts special emphasis on the importance of the morning hour, perhaps because of our resurrection from ‘sleep, which is the sister of death’; perhaps because then our faculties are at their best; perhaps be cause there will be less to repent of at night if we begin the day with strong supplications; perhaps because at that time other duties have less power to absorb our minds. 'My voice shalt Thou hear in the morning, O Lord; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto Thee, and will look up.'

"The time allotted to prayer should be held sacred to its object. Three times daily we turn our backs upon labor and recreation, imprison our bodies between the table and the chair, proceed to take that which is set before us, and for the time being our attention is quite engrossed in the one thing. Ah, then at least, recollection is spontaneous! One can readily think of occasions when some other duty would have paramount claim. Who would not flee from the table to answer a cry for help? Tauler who scaled the heights of contemplative prayer, said that he would have felt called of God to forsake the most ecstatic visions of His glory if summoned to do some act of charity or minister to some sick or dying brother. Such an infringement of rule would have been an act of self-denial for love's sake, which is a higher kind of prayer. But this is an exceptional instance, and does not impair the duty of calling in all our faculties in the time of prayer, to converge them upon Him whom we love and adore.

"Then we are very real at table. We do not 'pretend' to eat, like little girls who spread the toy board with tiny dishes, and then with becoming seriousness, partake of viands of air,—which is not a bad illustration of the use of forms unaccompanied by the spirit of prayer. I said just now that some holy people can pray with the spirit and keep silence with the lips. Yes, there are those who can, but they have attained thereunto only after years of vocal prayer and meditation, only after many conflicts and much suffering. But I have never heard that any one could pray with the lips and keep silence with the spirit. Above all things, prayer must be real, and reality is the contribution of the spirit."

Before the conversation was concluded, his parishioner mentioned a difficulty which he said he would be thankful to have explained. In a notice of the life of the late Rev. Dr. C—, it was stated that he daily spent many hours in prayer, and frequently it has been recorded of holy people that they prayed continuously through an entire night. We do not wonder when St. Luke tells us that our Lord "continued all night in prayer to God," but how can mortal flesh endure such a strain?

To this the reply was:

"When God pours out a special spirit of prayer on a soul, the faculties are so taken up into God that the usual conditions of life cease to impress themselves upon the mind. There is a pretty legend illustrating this absorption in God, which relates how a young monk wandered one day into the depths of a forest to pray, and how strangely beautiful birds from paradise came and sang for him a long, long time. Finally he returned to the convent, but who were these strangers? He did not recognize one of them, and no one knew the venerable man who came to them in their habit and made himself at home within their walls. Then the oldest of the monks remembered how the story used to be told in his youth that one of the brothers had gone away into the forest, and never been heard of again, and that was a century ago."

"That is very beautiful, Father, but, aside from legend, how can we engage in prayer for hours? Must we use vain repetitions, and are we heard for our much speaking?"

"By no means, and yet we are taught that our Father loveth importunity."

"But must one go over the same ground again and again?"

"I think you fail to recognize the exceeding breadth of prayer. It is more than an asking for what we desire, more than confession and thanksgiving. It is also that action (1) of the will by which we protest our allegiance and pay homage to God, (2) of the affections by which we love Him, and ever seek to love Him more, (3) of the mind by which we study His nature, His perfections, and His works, and (4) of all our faculties in co-operation, by which with awe and adoration we meditate upon the life and passion of our Lord, the life of faith, the works and graces of holiness, the last things, and the eternal destiny of the elect. It is said of one of the saints that he spent a whole night in meditation upon two questions, 'Who am I?' and 'Who art Thou?' and morning light found him with thoughts still crowding into his heart and mind.

"Plainly, then, prayer is, as I said just now, a very comprehensive action, but every feature of it goes back to the simple idea of the soul uplifting itself into the presence of God."

With a bright face, as though new light had fallen upon him from above, this devout man said he hoped that he might be made strong and wise to honor both the external and internal ways of prayer, and that he might be encouraged to persevere in the same by some test, if there be one, of his sincerity.

"A test of the reality of your prayer? O, yes," replied Father Austin, "humility is the test! The nearer you get to God, the less will you think of yourself, and the more satisfying and reasonable will your self-abasement appear."

THE CHURCH A DIVINE INSTITUTION

To the Editor of The Living Church:

In his letter in April THE LIVING CHURCH of 1st, re "Church and Sacraments," your correspondent, "Texas," incidentally asks the question: "Is the Christian Church a divine institution or is it a human organization?" With your permission, I would like to answer this question as briefly as the importance of it will allow.

I claim from the inspired Scriptures of the New Testament, and from Church history, that the Christian Church is a divine institution, and not a human society.

If we can prove that the branch of the Church to which we belong rests upon the New Testament platform of Acts ii: 42, "they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers," the historic continuity of the Church is demonstrated.

This is not difficult to prove, as will appear from the following considerations, to which I now ask your attention.

It has pleased God, the Holy Ghost, to lay down for our guidance the marks or notes of the Church which Christ founded, in Acts ii: 42. According to this Scripture, the marks of the Catholic Church are four in number. Having been admitted to the Church by Holy Baptism; 1st. They continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine; i. e., they held firmly and loyally to the Faith or Creed, a scheme of truth which was by divine direction and authority promulgated and taught by the Apostles, "the form of sound words" mentioned elsewhere. Any departure from this standard, either by false additions or by self-opinionated diminutions, is justly regarded as heresy. Here note the fact that the Greek, Anglican, and Anglo-American Churches remain steadfast in the Faith.

2d. They continued steadfastly in the fellowship of the Apostles, not merely in the fellowship of one of the Apostles; i. e., they continued in communion with the Church, and loyal to all the Apostles, loyal to the Apostolic Episcopate.

3d. They continued steadfastly "in the breaking of bread"; i. e., in the observance of the Holy Eucharist. This mark of the Catholic Church is seen only in the Greek, Anglican, and Anglo-American Churches.

4th. They continued steadfastly "in the prayers." Like the Jewish synagogue, the Church has always had a form of worship. The liturgy of the Church, though variable and flexible, has yet in it a divine skeleton, demonstrably of apostolic origin, which is the common heritage of Catholic Christendom.

These are the four chief marks of the one Church which Christ Himself founded, and to which He gave a real, definite organization.

To the Church we are "added" by Baptism. It has officers whose position and duties are distinctly enumerated and defined (see St. Paul's Epistles to Timothy and Titus). To the Church the Word of God has been addressed and entrusted. It meets at stated intervals for worship and edification, the administrations of the Holy Eucharist; it has powers of discipline, and is aggressive and missionary in character, and has again and again suffered persecution.

From this necessarily brief survey of the marks of the New Testament Church founded by Jesus Christ, and from the discovery that these marks are clearly seen in the Anglo-American Church (known in law as the Protestant Episcopal Church), we are warranted in the conclusion that the branch of the Church to which we belong—the Anglo-American Church—is in historic continuity with the Church founded by Christ. (See John xx: 19-23 with Acts i: 3.)

We now recognize the source whence the Church has come—from the Lord Jesus Christ. We, therefore, conclude that the Church is a divine institution, not a human society.

In other words, the Church, like the Tabernacle in the wilderness, and the Temple of Solomon, is the result of a divine plan, the outcome of a divine pattern.

A VESTED CHOIR OF GIRLS

To the Editor of The Living Church:

A lengthy and interesting discussion relating to Church choirs—mixed, men and women, boys and women, boys and girls, vested and otherwise—has occupied the columns of one of our prominent Church journals for some time. With most of the leading positions urged, I most heartily agree, the unwisdom of organizing boy choirs in small places; the error of assuming the superiority of the passional voice of women over male voices, where worship is the consideration; the vocal difficulty in assimilating the voices of girls and boys in a mixed choir, and the un-Churchly and unseemly practice of vesting women and girls in any species or semblance of ecclesiastical choir vestments.

But there is one condition of things which has not been noted, and which, it seems to me, must in some parishes have much to do with the rector's decision and method. I am personally acquainted with the following cases of this kind: A rector who has for some years maintained and conducted, in a plain way, it is true, a vested boy-choir, finds his choir, for several reasons, somewhat lessened in numbers. He has plenty of room in the choir—it is not in the chancel, but the nave—for fifteen more singers; and he has in his congregation nearly that number of interesting girls, from 12 to 16 years of age, all able to sing, and most of them communicants, but who have no set place in the Church, except the Sunday school, and who of course are growing up with no sense of their ability or duty to take a steady part in holy worship. Now, if these girls can be enlisted in the choir, and uniformly vested in a womanly way, to keep up a sort of esprit de corps, ought not this to be done, for the sake of the girls themselves, even if girls' voices do not, in tonality, harmonize with those of boys with artistic musical exactitude?

In the other case, the matter stands thus: The general congregation is small. The ordinary mixed choir is out of the question. There are few men; men nowadays rarely feel themselves responsible for anything in the Church but pew-rents and offerings. There are not many women singers, and they have too much to do to give their services regularly to the choir. A boy choir is impossible—the boys are not to be had in so small a town; but he has, and can have, girls enough for an organized vested choir of ample size; girls of interesting character, and of really enlisted enthusiasm for their place and work. He has felt it a duty and necessity to institute such a choir; has vested the members, mostly in a simply feminine way, all but the mortar-board caps, which I hardly think either womanly or necessary, and, so far, the new choir is a success.

Now, in both these cases, are not the practical conditions such as justify, and despite any artistic objections, both these earnest and hardworking rectors in the plans undertaken? What say the critics?

FRED'K S. JEWELL.

ARE THERE TOO MANY?

To the Editor of The Living Church:

In Dr. McConnell's letter in The Churchman we get the astounding statement that there are but two vacant parishes—vide letters of 59 bishops—in the entire country. Evidently the Doctor did not hear from his own bishop, nor from his neighbor, the Bishop of New York; but why these exceptions? It is notorious that for the last two months several first-class parishes have all been without rectors, and all these within a radius of six miles from Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. It would seem as if some of these parishes ought to want just such a clergyman as Dr. McConnell has in mind. So many vacancies lets down all the argument about the only "two parishes paying over $1,000 and a rectory" in the American Church to-day. It may be presumptuous so to assert, but I believe there are at least twenty such parishes vacant, instead of "only two." It is a noticeable fact that the number of clerical applicants for a vacant parish is usually forty; but why always forty or thereabouts? I fancy that the half of this conventional number would be nearer the truth.

There is an abundance of work for all the unbeneficed clergy, if it was get-at-a-ble, and work that only men of experience can do effectively. A residence in New York city of nearly twelve years, with unusual opportunities for observation, has convinced me that there is very little house-to-house visiting done where only this sort of preaching can be effective. The rector has not the time for this work, and the young men—diffident and without experience—cannot take the rector's place, and so the work remains undone. Again and again, I have implored clergymen to visit families who only required a little attention to become regular and useful members of the congregation, but I have utterly failed, to my own disgust and astoundment. The parish may be organized "out of sight," but this does not take the place of the house-to-house preaching and teaching, now so generally neglected, and why?—again, why? and with emphasis. Because the rector has not the time, and the young men cannot fill the bill. This is the field for men of years and experience; and some, a very few, of our vestries have sense enough to appreciate the superiority of the man with experience behind him. Then, again, there are positions and agencies in the Church which belong to the clergy of right—positions which laymen not qualified to fill secure, while having no right to them even if they were qualified.

And, once more, there are many parishes served by laymen for economic reasons. I have in mind one at this moment that can easily afford $1,000 a year and rectory, which is satisfied with a lay-reader, except on the first Sunday in the month. The extent of this evil was so large in Massachusetts a few years ago, that Bishop Paddock refused to visit any parish of this shameless order, until they made a change and supported a man in orders, as they should do. When so many parishes are so miserably mean and unworthy, it is not surprising that some of the clergy are without a charge. Then, again, there is a congestion of men in the East, because every candidate for orders is willing to remain near home, and in the East, if possible. It has always been so. Bishop Kemper found great difficulty in persuading young men from the seminary to go West, and it has been so ever since. These young graduates need the freedom of all out-doors, rather than the soft places of the stuffy East. Like young birds, they should be pushed out of the nest, and fall or fly as they can. What we need in a hundred towns and cities of the West, are builders of congregations. If they would remain single for three years, they need not fear a failure. It requires faith as a grain of mustard seed, truly, and courage, and labors more abundant, but the end will be "something accomplished, something done," and this, after all, is the joy of the minister's life, to be able to say with the great Apostle, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course."

INFORMATION WANTED

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Can any of your readers put me into communication with the officers of the American branch of the "Society of the Treasury of God"?

L. E. JOHNSTON.

Grace Church Rectory, Louisville, Ky.

It was the atheism of France that taught license for liberty, and led to the French Revolution. Where are those old philosophies and philosophers? They are dead, while Christianity survives. The school of Atheism led to despair. Materialism soon found that every violation of the moral law could go on consistently with its teachings. So Pantheism and Positivism have followed only to be destroyed, and now we have the school of Humanity and the cosmic philosophy coming close to the borders of Christianity as expounded by John Fiske. They tell us there is no more Creator, only a cosmic dust. Who made the dust? There is only protoplasm indeed! Who made protoplasm? They tell us of evolution from dust to monkey and then to man; but all the scientists have never found the missing link. The simple Gospel of the Son of God, preached by twelve fishermen, has survived the centuries, and outlives all other philosophies of 1800 years.—Chauncey Depew.

The Rev. Mr. Snively has resigned the Pine Ridge mission, and will withdraw May 1st. The Rev. W. J. Cleveland has accepted the place, and will take charge early in July.

The Rev. Robert S. W. Wood, acting assistant rector of the church of St. Michael and All Angels, Baltimore, will perform the duties of assistant rector of old St. Paul's church for the next six months, in place of the Rev. Charles Jessup who resigned, to become rector of St. Luke's church, Atlanta, Ga.

To Correspondents

M.—There is little doubt among liturgical scholars that the rubric before the Lord's Prayer in the offices for Morning and Evening Prayer relates to those offices alone, and that the expression, "divine service," stands for the Latin officium divinum, which meant the daily services only. The rubric has been taken over from the English Prayer Book, where it has more significance, since this prayer occurs there a second time in each service; namely, after the Creed. In the sacramental and private or occasional offices, it is either defined that the priest shall say it, or else left undefined, in which case the usage becomes a matter of custom which may differ in different places.

READING FOR OUR SOLDIERS

Recent advices received by the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association from its representatives with the army in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, report the supplies of good reading matter to be inadequate to the needs of the different camps and barracks.

Gifts to supply these needs are desired, and the committee will engage to forward contributions of good literature which are sent to its office, No. 3 W. 29th st., New York city, to the different camps in these islands. The gifts may be of books, as well as late numbers of illustrated papers and magazines. A number of traveling libraries, to consist of fifty or more volumes, would be appreciated by the men in Cuba and Puerto Rico, where the regiments are divided into small detachments at different points, making the condition of the men more dreary than if they were in camp with a large number of men with whom they were acquainted. These libraries could be circulated by the Y. M. C. A. secretaries, and as they can be provided at small expense, it is hoped that a large number of friends of our soldiers may be found who will avail themselves of such an opportunity to help make the lot of the men composing our army more pleasant.

An Evening Prayer

BY LAWRENCE N. FOOTH

Again I close mine eyes to sleep,
Still knowing not
What other hours of day shall keep
My mortal thought.
Like one who launches from the shore
Out on a starless sea,
Uncertain of return once more,
So come I unto thee,
O dark and death-like sleep.

Father, receive my evening prayer.
Thou knowest best,
What time my pilgrim soul should fare
To its long rest.
A little longer to abide—
This may more needful be;
Yet quick departing to Thy side
Is better far for me.
Thy pleasure is my prayer.

So this I ask for Jesus' sake:
If called this night,
Then let my mist-cleared eyes awake
To perfect light;
But if an earthly day shall dawn,
Give it a resurrection power.
Forgive the error past and gone,
Bless every new-born hour;
That when I come to launch once more
On sleep's dark, death-like sea,
Come life, come death, on either shore,
I may be nearer Thee.
Grant this for Jesus' sake.

THE death has taken place of the Rev. J. R. Lunn, for thirty-five years rector of Marton-cum-Graffham, Yorkshire. He was born in 1831, and was educated at King Edward VI.'s Grammar School, at Birmingham, among his contemporaries being Archbishop Benson and Bishop Lightfoot. He came out as a Fourth Wrangler at St. John's, Cambridge, of which he was a fellow. He was an active parish priest, but was best known as a very able musician. He was organist of Edgbaston church when only fifteen, and while at Cambridge he was president of the University Musical Society. Alike as a composer and conductor he was distinguished. Once, after going to a performance of the "Elijah," at Birmingham, conducted by Mendelssohn himself, he returned home and wrote from memory a complete score of the Angels' Chorus. He was a brilliant performer on the pianoforte, and one of the finest Bach players in the country.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

HON. CARROLL D. WRIGHT who breakfasts, dines, and sups on statistics, and speaks of statistics as one having authority, says that "every dollar received in revenue from the liquor traffic costs the government of the United States twenty-one dollars." That proportion seems to hold in a large city, for Chicago receives about three and one-half millions of license money from her 6,000 saloons, and expends about one hundred millions in their support.

THE blunders made by people in their eagerness to be complimentary to literary lions are often very amusing. In a recent lecture Mr. Howells told of a young lady who assured him that she greatly admired his "Bostonians." Mr. Howells replied that he too was a devotee of James, "whereupon," he slyly added, "we fell into some embarrassment." To cover her confusion, the lady asked to introduce a gentleman who knew "all about his novels." But the latter only made a charybdis for the author, says The Critic, by announcing that one of Mr. Howell's novels, "A Stillwater Tragedy," he always kept on his table!

A FRENCH writer in The Revue des Deux Mondes makes the following comment on his nation:

It is said that one day in the seventeenth century a king of Spain looked out of his palace window, and saw a man laughing. Feeling that there was nothing in the sorry state of public affairs to justify the merriment of a sensible being, he remarked that the man must be either mad or reading "Don Quixote." In our day the alternative would be, "or looking at the sketches of MM. Forain and Caran d'Ache." For the popular idea of caricature, as of Don Quixote, is that it is something amusing, and were it so, the works of our two most eminent illustrators would indeed be the solitary source of gaiety afforded by the national outlook. Their manikins would console us for men, and their "legends" for history.

THE same writer says: "The whole secret of the Greco-Turkish war lies in that remark attributed to a reporter who is dining with some of the Kaliph's officers: 'After all, beer comes from Germany.' The whole moral of it is in a bon-mot evoked by a scene of devastation—strewn with dead and haunted by orphans: 'It will all end in two loans!'"

CANON LYTTTELTON told an amusing story at Glasgow the other day, concerning Prof. Jebb. The members of the recent Educational Commission, upon which both Prof. Jebb and Canon Lyttelton served, were discussing each phrase of the report that they were going to send to Parliament, to determine whether it expressed sufficiently the exact shade of meaning the commission intended. The phrase "the teachers of England, a highly trained and intelligent set of men," was read out. Some of the members of the commission demurred to the adjectives, but the writer of the sentence spoke up for them. Prof. Jebb whispered to the Canon that they would apply equally well to elephants; after which the phrase was speedily excised.

THE Penny Provident Fund which has branches in many parishes of Greater New York, has greatly increased its activities. It now has 58,416 depositors, with deposits of $38,399.88. During the entire year the deposits have reached $75,816.54. Nearly as much was withdrawn, as the depositors are urged to open accounts in the regular savings banks as soon as their deposit reaches $1. The expenses of administration were less than $800. It is found that the institution greatly promotes habits of saving, especially among the children of the poor.

THE following bit of unconscious humor occurs in the "Reminiscences of Julia Ward Howe," now being published in The Atlantic Monthly. Speaking of the death of an eccentric Polish nobleman, Count Gurowski, who was much befriended by Mrs. Charles Eames, of Washington, Mrs. Howe says: "I was intrusted with some of the arrangements for the funeral. Mrs. Eames said to me that, as the Count had been a man of no religious belief, she thought it would be best to invite a Unitarian minister to officiate at his funeral. I accordingly secured the services of the Rev. John Pierpont who happened to be in Washington at the time." "Of no religious belief"—therefore, "best to invite a Unitarian minister to officiate," is a logical sequence as grim as it is delicious.

M. ROCHEFORT'S recent advocacy of temperance has directed attention to the consumption of absinthe in France, and some startling statements in connection therewith are being made. Men, as a rule, take the absinthe diluted with water, sipping it slowly. But the women, to the consternation of the doctors, insist, as a rule, on drinking it "neat," with most terrible results to their constitutions. The number of brilliant men whom France has lost through the abuse of the opalescent, but poisonous, fluid, from the great poet, Alfred de Musset, who used to be picked up drunk and half-dead every night in the streets, down to the celebrated artist and caricaturist, Andre Cill, is simply appalling. An idea of the extent of the evil may be gathered from the recent returns of the Ministry of Finance, which show that at the present moment there is a marchand de vin, or French absinthe seller, to every three houses in the French metropolis.

PRESIDENT FROST, of Berea College, Ky., says: "When John Fox gave a reading from his Cumberland Tales in Berea, the mountain boys were ready to mob him. They had no comprehension of the nature of fiction. Mr. Fox's stories were either true or false. If they were true, then he was no gentleman for telling all the family affairs of people who had entertained him with their best in the mountains. If they were not true, then, of course, they were libelous upon the mountain people! Such an attitude may remind us of the general condemnation of fiction by the unco' gude a generation ago.

THE AWAKENING

But yesterday I passed along this way,
And naught of life or beauty could discern
In all the valley lone. Strange wintry shadows lay Across the brook's brown rim, and on the withered fern
That drooped beside it was the cold white gleam
Of April's frozen rain. . . .

But yesterday! And lo! as in a dream
To-day I walk the self-same path again,
Silent and dark no more, for fount and loosened stream
Flash in and out among the springing weeds,
Making low laughter in the tufted reeds
And elders straight and tall—
While clear and sweet across the tangled brakes
I hear (what tender memories it wakes!)
A bluebird's piping call.

Days With the Sisters of St. Mary

BY ABBY STUART MARSH

I.

ORGANIZED woman's work has long held an honorable place in the American Church. Probably no one can estimate the good accomplished thereby, working as it does in unseen channels—now educating the mind and forming the character of future wives and mothers; now raising the fallen and tenderly leading them on into safer paths; now giving to the little ones from the purlieus of our great cities a glimpse of better things and a knowledge of the Wonderful Birth that has hallowed all child life. Truly can it be said of every one of these devoted women, "Many shall rise up and call her blessed."

The Sisterhood of St. Mary, founded in 1865, one of the oldest communities in the American Church, has for its object a wide range of work: four large and successful girls' schools, situated in different parts of the country; the Training School for Mountain Girls, in Sewanee, Tenn.; the Church Home, in Memphis; St. Mary's Home for Children and St. Mary's Mission House, on Washington boulevard, Chicago; The House of Mercy, on the outskirts of New York city; The Laura Franklin Homeopathic Hospital in the city; St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children, 34th street, New York, with its summer home at Norwalk, Conn.; and the Noyes Memorial House for Convalescents, at Peekskill; besides the work which the order is doing under Trinity parish foundation; namely, Trinity Hospital, Trinity Mission House, on Fulton street, New York, and a summer home at Great River, Long Island.

Having some knowledge of two of these institutions, St. Gabriel's School, Peekskill, and St. Mary's Free Hospital, New York, I am able to give you a glance at their work.

The Mother House, or Convent, and St. Gabriel's School are situated on a beautiful property of some fifty acres, at Peekskill-on-the-Hudson. Several hundred feet above the river and town, this locality is picturesque in the extreme. Driving for the first time, in the evening, up and up the winding road, which is lighted by electric bulbs hung from the trees, one almost wonders into what fairy land she is being borne.

St. Mary's chapel, an exquisite structure of stone, standing on a commanding bluff, is known, by its round tower and shining cross, for a long distance both up and down the river. Here worship the Sisters and the school. Simple and self-denying in everything regarding their own lives, the chapels and oratories of the Sisters are made beautiful with all the accessories which art and wealth, the fruits of their own labors, and the gifts of friends, can afford. I should like to enumerate all the treasures which make beautiful this House of the Lord, from the white marble altar, with its beautiful statues and its perfect appointments, to the mosaic pavement at its foot. Suffice to mention the Stations of the Cross, carved from terra cotta, in deep relief, which remind one of the early Flemish school of art. Beginning at the left of the pulpit, one follows every stage of the sad way in the pale-covered stone.

The numerous choir stalls are occupied by the Sisters, the school girls sitting in the nave. An organ, well adapted to the size of the building, is in a cloistered way at the right of the chancel, by which the excellently rendered service of the school is accompanied. Matins, Evensong, and a full choral Celebration are all smoothly and pleasantly given by the fresh young voices. One of the quaintest pictures connected with the school is that of the white-veiled procession wending its way through the trees toward the chapel, and some of the most valuable lessons are learned by these young hearts and minds while sitting here at the foot of the Cross, or reverently kneeling to receive the Holy Feast. A large proportion of the girls at St. Gabriel's are the Church's true and loyal daughters whose minds are being trained by the Sisters in a knowledge of her history, her doctrines, and her ways, and whose young lives are led on true lines towards those highest of Christian virtues, self-discipline and self-control.

It may not be amiss here to refer to the excellent work from the hand of the Sister-in-charge, just published by Pott & Co., "Notes on Church History," which is daily receiving encomiums from bishops and priests of the Church. The book is all the more valuable that it is the outcome of her practical work with the senior class of the school.

Two more buildings are upon the grounds: one, called "the Castle," where some of the teachers and school-girls lodge, and the priest's house. At the latter is an altar which should be dear to all Western Churchmen, as a memorial of the sainted Dr. De-Koven.

The location is ideal for a school, with its cultivated grounds and flowers near the house, its wild-wood walks at a greater distance, its beautiful views of the Hudson, its basket-ball and tennis courts, and its skating ground and coasting privileges in winter. When the contemplated new buildings are erected, St. Gabriel's School will truly have much to offer to those parents and guardians who wish to combine watchful care, training, and the retirement desirable for girls, with strong scholarship and easy access to the advantages of the metropolis. Sufficient to say of scholarship is that the school is accredited by Wellesley, and that many of the students prepare for that and other colleges.

Of the lives of the Sisters of the convent, we of the school see less than we could wish; we hear the bells for the daily offices, and we feel that our busy lives are blessed by dwelling where prayer and praise unceasingly arise, and where the daily Sacrifice forever pleads. We see the Sisters coming and going among us, we are the grateful recipients of their ministrations in our sickness, and we feel the subtle influence of their consecrated lives as those most truly "in the world and yet not of the world." Genial and alive to the interests of the day, the Sisters of St. Mary preserve a happy medium between the too great conventionality which would repel, and a lightness and familiarity which would fail to command respect. Even the school-girls love them as friends, and yet their being set apart and consecrated is never forgotten. Culture, refinement, scholarly ability, and oftime, talents of a high order, are by these ladies consecrated to the Master's work.

A quaint, pretty custom prevails of naming the dormitories and the wards, both at the school and at the hospital which I have visited; at the school, we have St. Mary's, St. Agnes', St. Margaret's, and All Angels' dormitories.

Some of our Church people, alas! still send their daughters, for the accomplishments of education and watchful care, to Roman convents, the outcome of which often proves a grief to the mother's heart. If our excellent Church schools will not suffice, Sisters' schools, of the rank of those of which I am speaking, make this sacrifice no longer necessary.

AN APPRECIATION PREPARED AT THE REQUEST OF THE MEMORIAL COMMITTEE BY ONE OF HIS FORMER ASSISTANTS

ON Easter Day there was unveiled in the chancel of St. John's church, Boston (Highlands), Mass., a beautiful and artistic memorial of a recent rector who for many years was one of the most prominent clergymen in the diocese, revered and looked up to by all alike, the Rev. George Sherman Converse, D. D.

It was in the early sixties, while rector of St. James' church, the mother parish of the Roxbury district of Boston, that the attention of Dr. Converse was called to the imperative need for the services of the Church in the newly forming Highland district (a continuation of Tremont st. and the old Jamaica road). In its inception simply a small Sunday school, the mission grew, and soon proved the wisdom of its founding and the foresight shown in its location. Within a stone's throw of its doors were located such industries as the Roxbury Carpet Works and Boston Belting Company, each employing hundreds of hands; while in the immediate vicinity were the Hook & Hastings Organ Factory and the Chickering Piano Works. The whole district, indeed, was filled with a population whose antecedents were Churchly. In time, the necessity for permanence was demonstrated, and Dr. Converse set about the task of soliciting funds for the purchasing of a lot and the erection of a chapel. From that time up to the day of his final retirement, some thirty years after, he gave literally of himself and his sustenance for the furtherance of the Gospel of Christ in his locality.

While St. John's was a chapel of St. James', the rector's supervision was constant. Even in the relatively brief interval between its independence and his entering upon the rectorship of St. John's, it was the regular habit of the authorities of the infant parish to consult him in every important crisis. In fact, it was through such constant intercourse that finally he consented to act as rector until they found one who suited them better—a relationship which existed up to a few months prior to his death.

This man of fine natural endowment, cultivated and gifted, handsome in appearance and genial in temperament, whose graces of mind and heart, together with a singular gift for administration, would have conspicuously adorned any position in the Church, gladly and zealously spent himself in this peculiarly hard field. For it was a trying work, made doubly difficult because of the constant shifting of the population. He used to say: "Just as we have begun to do much with our people, they up and leave us." The financial problem was always making itself felt. Not only were the people poor for the most part, but they were largely "old country folk," and were not acclimated to the voluntary system of Church support. No wonder, then, that after twenty-three years of such burdens, the strong frame was bent and bowed, and the tired shoulders were compelled to lay aside the burden they had borne so long. For during all these years his fellow-Churchmen in the diocese had recognized the powers and gifts of Dr. Converse and delighted to do him honor, so that for years he was a member of the Standing Committee, long time its secretary, and latterly its president. In four General Conventions he was one of the clerical deputies, and a trustee of several Church institutions. The regard of the diocese found its natural expression when the choice fell upon him almost unanimously to preside at the conventions which elected Bishop Brooks and Bishop Lawrence.

He entered into the rest of Paradise in 1895, shortly after the present incumbent, the Rev. Robert Codman, began his duties.

And now in the chancel which he loved so well, and near the altar at which for so many years he devoutly exercised the priest's office, there has been placed a mural tablet to perpetuate his virtues. It is of bronze, set in a heavy oak frame of Gothic design, and handsomely carved. The frame is mounted with a finial and heavy Latin cross. At the top of the metal tablet appear the symbols Chi Rho and Alpha and Omega, encircled by ivy wreaths. Below is this inscription executed in relief:

To the glory of God and in memory of George Sherman Converse, Priest and Doctor in Divinity, 1828--1895, to whom, under God, this parish owes its strength and a large measure of its present prosperity; he having fostered its beginnings, procured the funds for the erection of the church, and for the last twenty-three years of his life serving at its altar, literally giving of himself and of his sustenance for the furtherance of the Gospel of Christ.

"Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all. For the same cause, also, do ye joy and rejoice with me." Philip. ii: 17.

Upon the lower part of the panel appears this inscription upon a metal plate: "This tablet erected by many of his former parishioners."

The work was executed by J. & R. Lamb, and is pronounced in every way artistic and satisfactory. It will serve as a fitting memorial of one whose name, to all who ever really knew him, is the synonym of disinterested zeal and unselfish devotion.

Book Reviews and Notices

The Sanctuary of Missions. By the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Churton, D.D., Bishop of Nassau. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. Pp. 197. Price, $1.50.

No doubt many of our readers are familiar with the author's previous work, "The Missionary's Foundation of Doctrine." It has been his long-cherished desire to add to it a volume dealing with the devotional side of missionary life. This most excellent and important purpose he has now carried into effect. But little has been written with a direct purpose of developing the devotion of missionaries. This book is therefore of singular interest and value because of its aim, as well as on account of its contents. The latter are singularly sweet and helpful. With rare good judgment, and in most winning ways, the good Bishop sets forth the devotional aspect of missionary life. His suggestions are always wise and practical, and the whole book is penetrated by a genuinely devotional spirit which is most inspiring and refreshing. Although he has made no attempt to avoid that local coloring which was congenial to his home in the West Indies, yet the book is suitable for all missionaries everywhere. We wish it might be placed in the hands of every one of them. We can imagine no more helpful thing than for thoughtful and generous Churchmen to send it to lonely missionaries at home and abroad. Are there not some who will take this hint?

A Sister to Evangeline; being the story of Yoome de Lamourie, and how she went into exile with the villagers of Grand Pre. By Charles G. D. Roberts. New York, Boston, and London: Lamson, Wolfe & Co. Price, $1.50.

Mr. Roberts contributes in this story another interesting link to the chain of romance connected with the banishment of the French from Acadia. An officer of the French army in Quebec returns to his native home in Grand Pre to find the girl of his choice affianced to an English settler. The story carries us with interest through the burning of Grand Pre, the imprisonment of the men in the chapel, and the ultimate embarkation of all who refused allegiance to England's king. The heroine really loves her former French adorer, and leaves her father's home to become an exile with him rather than stay and marry the Englishman. Many are the straits and sufferings through which the Acadians pass, but marriage and happiness at length end the struggles. The story is well told, the plot an excellent one, and the reader will learn a good deal about the life and history of that unfortunate band of exiles.

The Biblical Museum. A Collection of Notes Explanatory, Homiletic, and Illustrative, forming a Complete Commentary on the Holy Scriptures, Especially Designed for the use of Ministers, Bible Students, and Sunday School Teachers. By James Cowper Gray. Revised with Additions, etc., by the Rev. George M. Adams, D. D. The Old Testament, Vol. I., Genesis to Second Kings. New York: E. R. Herrick & Co.

Having given the title of this book in full, we have sufficiently indicated its character. As a commentary, it is composed of fragmentary selections from many sources, many of which are of sufficient value to the preacher and student to render it useful and suggestive. Various standard commentaries are freely drawn upon, and a multitude of well-known writers. It is evidently the design to aid those who have few books, or little time to consult many books.

A West Point Wooing, and other Stories. By Clara Louise Burnham. New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, $1.25.

We have here several excellent stories—thirteen in all—but that "unlucky number" never can exercise any malign influence over the success of such a collection of well-told charming tales. They have, all of them, the merit of brevity, wit, and good morals, and may be read over and over again with pleasure. The witchery of West Point, and its military splendors, gleam through several. Others are set in New England watering places; but each has that completeness which one may find in a well-written German Lied, or in the short compositions for the piano by Schumann.

The celebrated "Tucker Hymnal" is now revised and enlarged. Musically conservative, adopted for use in Old Trinity, New York, it will be a welcome manual at all times and in all places among men who are like-minded with the saintly Tucker, now numbered among the "ten thousand times ten thousand" who sing before the throne. As a piece of musical press work, the volume is a rare treat to the eye, and is handsomely bound in a red, strong cover, with edges in red. This issue is the second edition, selling in quantities at one dollar.

Periodicals

The Forum is to be congratulated on finding enough topics of world-wide interest, relating to peace and progress, so as to make its April issue exceptionally good without any "war papers." This is restful to the public, which has been fighting Spain in the magazines for a year or more. The cosmopolitan aim of The Forum is well indicated by the list of subjects and writers in the present issue. There is a paper on Russia by a Russian; on Spain, by a member of the Royal Academy of History of Madrid; on Korea, by the headmaster of the Normal College of Korea; on China, by a missionary to China; on Washington's farewell address, by one who signs the Washington name; and so, through the entire list, the writers are best qualified to deal with their themes by actual relation to the subject matter.

The paper of greatest value in the current issue of The Sanitarian is "Sand Filtration of Water," by Prof. S. R. Lea. "Bad Plumbing—Smoke Test," is a good pointer for working up the plumber's business, and of even more interest to tenants of old houses. The perils of the Chicago Drainage Canal, as depicted by Prof. Hiram Phillips, are startling, but doctors will doubtless disagree on this subject. [Dr. A. N. Bell, 337 Clinton st., Brooklyn, N. Y.]

REJOICE WITH THE DEPARTED.—It has been wisely said that some of the profound sayings of the Sermon on the Mount await their entire explanation and fulfillment until the kingdom of God, about which they were spoken, shall be fully established—on earth or in heaven. A similar thought may be true of other words of Scripture. It is suggested by the remark of a lady, writing of her mother who had suddenly been taken from her: "I am trying to rejoice with her, and so forget my own loss." We think of Paul's familiar injunction as belonging only to our life here; but why should it not become our duty and privilege to rejoice with those who have finished their pilgrimage through this evil world and entered their Master's joy—"glad also with exceeding joy"? Would it not turn our sorrow into joy if we thus tried to sympathize with the supreme happiness of those whom in our half-selfish grief we would like to bring back to earth? It would surely give a broader, grander meaning to many precepts and promises if we extended their scope from the narrow world around us to the wonderful world just beyond our ken—a world already the abode of so many we have known, and a world, too, which is soon to be ours.

Christian Register (Unitarian)

WORSHIP AND WORK.—Side by side with the demand for preaching is rising a demand for faithful and intelligent pastoral work. There is no question, for instance, that the rapid advance of the ritualist branch of the Anglican Church is due, not to eloquent preaching, by any means, but to parochial organization and devoted labor among the poor, along with the reverent and impressive conduct of public worship. It is well known that in England the Nonconformist bodies have been dropping behind the Establishment in numbers and influence during the past decade. There are many reasons for this, but among them is surely the greater effectiveness of the latter among the lower classes, while, as is well known, the trend of the rich is decidedly in the same direction. The fact is, that everywhere two ideals of the Church are facing each other, and have been since the Reformation. One is the Church of thought, the other the Church of worship and work. The Church of thought is intellectual in its cast, inquiring, critical, and progressive. The chief part of its public exercise is the sermon; and its demand upon its minister is for mental power, more especially mental tact and skill for adapting truth to the wants or condition of his hearers. If this demand brings an adequate supply, this kind of Church will succeed. If it does not—and it certainly has not generally succeeded so far—its pulpit will be, as a whole, below the standard set by the pews. There will be great competition among the churches for the able preachers, unhappiness and discouragement in both pulpit and pew among the unsuccessful competitors, and a general languor throughout the denomination.

The Household

The Queen's Glebe

BY FREDERICA EDMUNDS

CHAPTER IX.

THE summer of 1775 was nearly over. War was no longer a threatened possibility, but a grim and awful fact. The alarm first sounded by Paul Revere echoed from Lexington and Concord to Bunker Hill, and from thence reached to the rocky fortress of Quebec and the swampy islands of South Carolina. And now Washington had been summoned to the command of the patriot forces, and all men breathed harder before the coming contest.

At the Glebe farm the sheep still dotted the hillsides, and the corn waved in the summer wind, but the men about the place were all armed now, and the house was kept well barred and bolted, while the women-folk went little abroad. Mr. Underhill made as usual his missionary journeys up and down the valley, but it was with some anxiety that one morning he left his household under the care of the Obermann and the Dutch Karl.

At the Upper Castle of the Mohawks he found a sort of council going on, preliminary to a greater assembly of the Six Nations at Oswego.

Mr. Underhill entered the little square of Indian cabins late in the afternoon, and found the braves gathered in a circle before the largest of their very long, narrow houses, which were mostly built of good logs, and had glazed windows and stone chimneys. The setting sun was now giving a glowing red background to the dark cabins and dusky figures wrapped in striped blankets and decorated with fantastically feathered head-gear. A small council fire in the centre still further lighted the impassive faces made grotesque by paint, and flickered on the dyed moccasins stretched toward it. Straight toward the picturesque group walked the clergyman in his sombre black garments, followed by the young Indian interpreter whom he scarcely needed now.

Mr. Underhill's ringing tones were a sharp contrast to the solemn silence which received him. "My children," he said, "I go to baptize Wahari's wife, and then I would speak a few words with you here under the open sky. Your talk is over, I see, so lift up your prayers for the dying one within. I cannot ask you to be with us bodily, but the Great Spirit hears all his children."

Inside the cabin lay Wahari's wife, Eye-of-the-Dawn, closely wrapped, but the pallor of death plainly visible through her bronzed skin. Beside her bark couch were squatted two medicine-men, each with a string of bear's teeth about his neck and a bag of beaver skin at his belt. The elder who had a face of demoniacal ugliness, held an improvised rattle of snake-skin in his hands, half-filled with beans. The younger who affected dandified airs and was resplendent in a gay blanket, an elaborately beaded belt, and scarlet leggings, had a small drum between his knees, but just now was engaged in stirring some hideous brew of unclean remedies. Both Indians betrayed some disturbance at the entrance of the Christian priest. In a corner cowered an old squaw, cooking something in a pot over the fire. The smoke, for there was no window to this cabin, filled the long room almost to suffocation.

Mr. Underhill choked, in spite of himself, but the sufferer on the couch betrayed no realization of the stifling atmosphere. The clergyman sternly motioned aside the medicine-men who at once slunk away, and took his place beside the dying girl. She opened her eyes and looked up at him pathetically.

"Me go to Wahari," she gasped in English. "Wahari all good, me all bad, heap bad; say 'no' when the white father want to put water on me. Now me want water; go to Wahari."

The priest, holding her hand, spoke to her in a few earnest words of Him by whom alone she could be made "all good." Then he asked for water for the Holy Sacrament which he had come to administer.

While the old squaw was filling the new gourd at the spring, the younger woman raised herself almost eagerly. "Me tell you about our people," she said. "The great chief has called upon them to take up the war hatchet. They say 'yes'; they no like Dutch traders. My people talk fair to you, but when they fight they scalp, they burn, they steal, they skin alive. The white captain talk with my people here outside my door. I listen. After white man gone, Great Serpent talk. He say kill everybody; spare not even the white captain. The country again be Indian. The others say kill Dutch, but no kill good white men. I tell you."

The squaw here fetched the water, and the clergyman, soothing the excited girl with a few words, began the Holy Office. The rite was soon over, and Eye-of-the-Dawn was left content and happy, the drops of Baptism still shining on her dark brow.

Mr. Underhill went from the chamber of peace to join the men outside whose minds were full of savage war and bloodshed, the demons invoked by his own friends, and, as he believed, in a worthy cause.

"My children," he asked, stopping in the midst of the circle, "is it, as I have heard, that you are about to put on the war-paint in behalf of your white brethren?" and then, as no answer but a grunt of half assent was given him, he went on, speaking in their own tongue and telling them that even a just war must not be waged unrighteously.

"You are asked," he said, "to aid in the defence of the property of the great chief across the water, but do not forget that the commands of a greater Captain are upon you. Most of you have been signed with His holy mark. It is the Great Father who has given you your homes, your squaws, your papooses. Take care that you do not wantonly plunder other homes, that you do not slay without mercy the helpless wives and babes of others. And above all, remember not to maim the lifeless body which has been the temple of God's Great Spirit. It is the work of a savage, a brute, to scalp, to skin, to hack. The Christian Indian must not forget his high calling. O, my children, remember!"

Mr. Underhill paused. The braves hung their heads, and here and there one grunted inarticulately, but their stolid faces gave little satisfaction. The clergyman turned away with a sigh, and rode on up the valley, sad and thoughtful. He felt as though he were losing his hold on these, his converts who had once been so responsive. Would that he had Griffith here to help him, that he might oftener visit his scattered sheep at the Upper Castle. Wahari's wife, now a child of the Church, might be invaluable among her own people, could she only recover, but—and then he recalled his own words to Evelyn, "No one is necessary to the Lord's work," and felt himself rebuked by his own lack of faith.

The thought of his son again and again recurred to him. Why did Griffith put off from time to time his return home? What kept him dallying in London and around the English Universities when he was so sadly needed here? To be sure, his reasons were always plausible. It was to talk with Lord-so-and-so on the chances of an American episcopate that he delayed, or to see the learned Somebody-else on missions to the Indians. But was not his immediate duty here? Here certainly were the Indians themselves, and the other question might safely be left for the present. Mr. Underhill would hardly have admitted as much to himself, perhaps, but he was greatly disappointed in his son's conduct.

That night was spent among the people of the Palatinate, where there were but few settlers of the English race or faith. To these few, however, he ministered, giving them plain exhortations as to their duty among their neighbors, and hearing, in return, many complaints of hard feeling and lawlessness.

On the second day he was again within the Glebe fields, relieved to find the house doors open to the mild autumn air, and the hospitable smoke rising from the stone chimneys. If he was, for a moment, somewhat startled by a double war-whoop from the ambush of the privet hedge, he was soon reassured by the breaking into view of George and Philo. The black boy hung in the background, but George scuttled along almost under the horse's hoofs, pouring out his words excitedly, which his brown freckles and dancing eyes seemed to accentuate.

"Oh sir," he cried, "Sir John Johnson is here, and has some of his Highland regiment with him. Oh, but they look brave in their plaids! And oh, their swords, father! And one gentleman has known Griffith in foreign parts. He says he is much made of by all the ladies. And, father, Sir John has further fortified the hall, and has cleared out the forts.

"My lad," said Mr. Underhill, dismounting, "I have left you a guardian of your mother and Evelyn. I find your head full of childish pranks, and your tongue running over with silly gossip. What can I think of your fitness for your charge when you are so wanting in reverence and discretion?"

The boy hung his head at the stern rebuke, and Mr. Underhill, giving some brief orders to the Oberman, passed on to the house. He found his wife and her guests in the keeping-room, which Evelyn was just entering by another door, followed by the maid, Letty who bore a tray of cakes and home-made wines. A short, dull-faced man, carefully dressed, rose as the clergyman entered.

"Mr. Underhill, your return is welcome," he said, "albeit your wife and your fair ward here have made an hour to seem but as a breath. You have come from the Upper Castle?"

"Aye, Sir John, and give you welcome to the Glebe. Nay, sit down, and take a glass with your friends."

Sir John here introduced his escort of three or four gentlemen, all in Highland costume. One of these, called Dalton, seemed already much at ease, while observing every movement of Evelyn who with unusually brilliant color was performing the duties of hospitality.

The baronet drew his oaken arm-chair closer to the settle whereon sat the cler-gyman. "I have not the charm of my father with our redskin friends," he observed. "We will need all your influence in securing them to the royalist cause. The home government is urging that we work among them both with threats and bribes."

"Aye, Sir John; yet I fear me 'tis a case of sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind. Can you keep these same allies in check when once they are secured? Will they be withheld from wanton destruction, from bloody extermination of helpless women and babes?"

"Why, good sir," replied the other, "we are not Saracens, but some such bloody deeds may be inevitable. War is not a game to be played with gloves, nor are bullets stuffed with cotton."

"True," said the clergyman gravely, "but I said wanton destruction, and I speak advisedly."

"You have heard it threatened?"

"Aye, they are ready to blaze their path with blood."

"But they go not uncaptured. The Butlers, Guy Johnson, I myself, belike, will lead them."

"You can answer for the moderation of these others and yourself?"

"No man can answer for other than himself," replied the baronet somewhat testily, "but I tell you if they are not for us they will be against us, and you know what that means for the Church." He looked at the clergyman pointedly.

Mr. Underhill sighed. "The Church is sore bested in these days," he said, "and I once thought as you about the arming of the red men. Now, in face of the fierce fire which rages in their hearts, I can but urge them to be loyal to their Faith and King."

"Aye, time was when you have said differently. 'Tis a sorry loyalty that is but half-hearted, sir. Can it be that Mr. Underhill is tainted with the spirit which has infected the young Alan?"

The clergyman stood up. "You goad me sore, Sir John, but I would not show you discourtesy under mine own roof. We have the same cause at heart. Let each promote it as seemeth to him best."

The baronet bowed, and raised his glass to drink the health of the ladies. The smile which showed his teeth was hardly a pleasant one.

The Distinguishing Characteristic of the Vocation is its Exquisite Tone

ORGANS BUILT on the Vocation system are preeminently fitted for church services. They have a full, rich diapason tone and a peculiar delicacy in the string registers which make them of inestimable value as an accompaniment to the human voice. This, with their great variety of registration and superior carrying powers, renders them remarkably well adapted for leading congregational singing.

Their superiority of tone is a subtlety more easily appreciated than described.

Prices from $275 upward.

Children's Hour

Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations,
That is known as the Children's hour.

The English Language

We'll begin with a box, and the plural is boxes,
But the plural of ox should be oxen, not oxes.
Then one fowl is a goose, but two are called geese,
Yet the plural of mouse should never be meese;
You may find a lone mouse or a whole nest of mice,
But the plural of house is houses, not hie.
If the plural of man is always called men,
Why shouldn't the plural of pan be called pen?
The cow in the plural may be cows or kine,
But a bow, if repeated, is never called bine,
And the plural of vow is vows, never vine.
If I speak of a foot and you show me your feet,
And I give you a boot, would a pair be called beet?
If one is a tooth and a whole set are teeth,
Why shouldn't the plural of booth be called beeth?
If the singular's this and the plural is these,
Should the plural of kiss ever be nicknamed keese?
Then one would be that and three would be those,
Yet hat in the plural would never be hose,
And the plural of cat is cats, not cote.
We speak of a brother and also of brethren,
But though we say mother, we never say methren.
Then the masculine pronouns are he, his, and him
But imagine the feminine she, shis, and shim.
So the English, I think you all will agree,
Is the queerest language you ever did see.

CHAPTER II.

A COMMITTEE OF ONE

OTTAWA was a sleepy little town that had begun life as a market for Michigan fruit shippers, partly because it commanded a fine open harbor, and partly because it lay on the edge of a wide-reaching fruit belt. On its west were high sand bluffs overlooking the broad lake, and on the north side ran the river, commonly termed Black Creek, which, after flowing down through a pretty, rolling pasture country, emptied at last into the deep blue waters of grand old Michigan. At first there had only been a few stores here and there around the docks, but as time passed, and the shipping trade flourished, the town spread itself over the hill sides, and far up on the bluff a few more pretentious houses stood, apart from the rest of the little town.

It was up here that the Hardy residence stood, the handsomest of its kind, with its excessive newness of stone and paint and plate glass. Even the flower beds seemed fresher and brighter than those in Mrs. Ferner's cosy, old-fashioned garden next door.

Mollie had ridden her bicycle from Eleanor's, but it was such hard work on the bluff road, that she dismounted, and was walking slowly up the incline now, her cap pushed back from her head, and her red curls curling tighter than ever, for it was a hot August day, and she was warm and "perspiry," as she laughingly called it.

The cap was Arthur's; the wheel was Dave's, with the bar taken out, and anyone who had ever had brothers would have known where the flag button pins and sailor tie came from; but, as Mollie said, "what are brothers good for, if you don't make use of them?"

Everyone in Ottawa knew that Mollie Gray thought there were no other boys in the world who could compare with her brothers. David was a year younger, and Arthur, a year older than herself, so that she could play twin equally well with either, and the three had always been the closest of comrades.

"Our Mollie," Dave would say. "Why, she isn't a bit like other girls, silly and fussy. She can take a higher dive than I, and beat Art swimming. Yes, sirree. And she never tells on a fellow, or tries to be too fresh, or show off, or anything like that. Mollie's true blue, all right."

So perhaps it was her bringing up with boys that made Mollie so frank and free of speech, sometimes a trifle too much so, some thought, for a girl nearly sixteen. But those who accused her of a lack of gentleness should have seen her tend Dave's wounded hand when Gray Eagle ran away with him, and threw way him down on the bay shore road, and Mollie had followed on her wheel, to find him dead or alive. She certainly did not have Eleanor's quiet, low-voiced ways, or Evelyn's lady-like manners, but, as Dave said, she was true blue, and that told the whole story.

Not a quail of cowardice was in her heart to-day as she turned up the broad, blossom-bordered path, tired and dusty. Leaving her wheel leaning against the great carven stone balustrade, she ran briskly up the steps of the mansion, and pressed the electric bell at the side of the great plate-glass doors.

"I want to see Miss Hardy," she said to the trim maid who opened the door. For a moment the latter hesitated, gazing curiously at the sturdy little figure in the blue shirt waist and travelworn dark skirt.

"I think she is asleep," she said, doubtfully, stepping out on the wide, shady veranda. "What name shall I say, please?"

"Oh, she doesn't know my name," Mollie said, honestly. "Just say a girl from St. Luke's."

It seemed scarcely more than a minute after the maid had left her, when she reappeared, with a smile, around the corner of the veranda.

"Miss Virginia is there in the hammock," she said. "You can go right to her."

There were rose vines and Virginia creeper climbing over the trellis work on the south side of the house, and here, where the cool breeze blew in from the lake, which lay a shimmering half moon of silver and blue far below, a hammock had been swung. There was a low stand at the side of it, a quaint Persian stool with grotesquely carven legs, and inlaid top, and on it was a book and a plate of peaches, the daintily flushed skin showing prettily against the dark green of the leaves they lay upon. Mollie saw them first, and her mouth watered, but a rustle of a white dress drew her attention to the oc-

SANKEY MODEL, STYLE 431.

Known abroad as the Empress Model.

More than two hundred thousand organs were made in our factory before this instrument was perfected. It is the result of great experience in making organs for all purposes for everybody.

The missionary's tent in the jungles and Westminster Abbey, the humble cottage and the king's palace contain a Mason & Hamlin Organ. The self taught amateur and Franz Liszt, Saint-Saens, Theo. Thomas, George W. Chadwick, Emil Paur and scores of great musicians have written words of praise for Mason & Hamlin Organs.

The Sankey Model (so called because it was designed for and is used by Ira D. Sankey) is suitable for churches, lodges, schools and homes. Cash with order price, $180.00. Other organs $27.00 to $2,400.00.

We have accumulated organ information for 45 years. Write us about organs if you are interested.

cupant of the hammock, and she took her first good look at Virginia Hardy.

"At first," she told Eleanor afterwards, "I didn't like her a bit. She look so, oh, so kind of soft and tired, you know, with all that white around her, and her hair was such a queer, pale color, all fluffy and light; and then her face was pale and fair, and her eyes were big and gray, and a little fretful looking; but her mouth was awful pretty, and when she smiled, I liked her."

"From St. Luke's?" Virginia said, extending her hand in welcome. "It was very kind of you to come and see me when I do not know any of the girls there. Excuse my not rising, will you not? You know I am lame."

"Why, no, I didn't," gasped Mollie, her eyes full of deep concern and pity, as she seated herself in a low wicker rocker to which her hostess motioned. "I—I'm awfully sorry for you."

Perhaps Virginia was unused to such openly expressed sympathy; at all events, a slight flush rose to her cheeks as she lay back on the cushions in the hammock.

"Oh, I am used to it now," she said carelessly. "It happened a long time ago. I was a little girl, and I do not deserve any sympathy, because I brought it all on myself."

"How?" asked Mollie, troubled by the trace of bitterness in her tone.

"Just simple obstinacy," Virginia replied, with a short little laugh that had no mirth in it. "Papa would not let me ride his horse instead of my pony. When I had the chance, I climbed upon Sultan's back as he stood by the mounting stone, and—that's all. When they picked me up my foot was crushed where he had stepped on it."

Then, of course, Mollie poured forth her tale of woe, all about how Gray Eagle ran away with Dave, and how they thought he must be dead, surely, and who Dave was, and who Art was, and what perfectly splendid boys they were, and how she didn't think horses were safe, anyway, unless you could hang on by your eyelids or toes, like a wild Indian.

Virginia was visibly interested in her visitor. Her face grew brighter as she joined in Mollie's laughter, and she felt as if she would like to know Dave and Art herself.

"Didn't your being lame make you cross?" asked Mollie abruptly. "I know it would me."

"I'm afraid it did," Virginia answered slowly, her eyebrows drawn together in a perplexed frown. "But never mind my being lame," she added, with a quick gesture of impatience, "go on and tell me all about yourself, and the girls and boys down there, and whatever made you think of coming way up here to see me this hot day."

"Well, it's this way," began Mollie, energetically entering upon her mission, and she laid the case of St. Dorothy's Sisterhood before Miss Hardy, using all of Eleanor's expressions that she could think of, and putting in a few good, strong arguments of her own.

"And you want me to belong, too," Virginia repeated, when she had finished. "I'm afraid I would not be a very active member."

"Oh, but you would," Mollie interrupted eagerly. "You would be so much help to us if you would only take right hold and help us push things through."

"What do you want to do first?"

"Make money," came the prompt reply.

"There isn't a blessed cent in the treasury."

Virginia pondered. After a minute, she said: "I believe I will join your Sisterhood after all. I do get so tired sitting up here all the time, or driving Lad and Lassie as a change, and besides, I have an idea about the money part."

A step on the veranda made her pause, and she smiled at some one over Mollie's shoulder.

"Miss Gray, mamma dear, from St. Luke's."

Mollie turned at once, and found herself bowing to a plump, bright-eyed lady, not at all like Virginia, but with a fresh, youthful face that appeared in startling contrast beneath her snow-white hair.

"It was good of you to come so far this warm day, my dear," she said, her bright dark eyes resting keenly on Mollie's face. What she read there must have pleased her, for she added kindly, "and now you must stay and have luncheon with Virgine before you attempt that long ride back."

"Oh, thank you, but—but I can't," Mollie faltered helplessly, visions of a stately, formal banquet rising in her mind's eye; but Virginia seconded the invitation so heartily that there was no loophole for refusal without appearing absolutely rude.

"And after lunch," Virginia added, as she rose from the hammock, and laid one hand lightly on Mollie's strong shoulder as they walked along after Mrs. Hardy, "after lunch we will drive around town to the president's, and settle on a way to raise money."

"But my wheel?"

"Oh, I'll send one of the men home with it," Virginia answered, laughingly. "Since you have made me join the Sisterhood, you must be my protector and champion, you know."

And Mollie nodded fervently, her eyes wide with excitement as she entered the great, cool vestibule. If only the girls could see her now, as maid of honor to her ladyship.

Finance and Commerce

SPECULATIVE operations in Wall street are, and will likely continue to be, taken as an indication of the prevailing sentiment of the country as to the business outlook. In so regarding it at the present time, one should consider that out of seventy millions of population, there is always a percentage of sanguine ones who fix wide limits as to the possible stretch of prosperity.

When this percentage of possibly over-sanguine ones concentrate their operations in a centre like Wall street, they constitute a power not easily overcome. Such a condition prevails at the present time. Stocks have had an enormous advance. The prices prevailing, with few exceptions, discount the reasonable expectations of years of further progress. These prices were established with money at 2½ per cent. in abundance.

Many of the dividend-paying stocks are now selling on about a 3 per cent. basis. Speculators have been buying industrials on a 7 per cent. basis, and paying anywhere from 7 to 15 per cent. for the money to carry them.

There is every indication that the time of 3 per cent. money and less has gone in Wall street for some time to come. Sudden spurts in the interest rate to high figures may bring in loanable funds on the reaction from which low rates may be reached temporarily, but with the expanding business of the interior, money can be profitably used at 5 and 6 per cent., and even higher rates, and in the long run it will go in that direction. Hence the conservative element—the buyers who took these stocks a year ago at one half to two thirds their present market prices—have largely abandoned the market. They are out, and are either seeking investments in other fields, notably real estate, or are waiting patiently for the break which experience has shown is sure to follow the reckless speculation of these “tail enders.” Such reaction, if it comes, will have nothing to do with the general healthfulness of the business of the country. That is all right. It was never founded on more solid conditions, was never so large, and is still growing. The only blot on the outlook is the poor appearance of the growing winter wheat. Reports from five of the principal producing states; viz., Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, are at this writing quite disappointing. We have had a week of warm forcing weather, which it was hoped would improve the outlook, but with a few local and restricted exceptions, it does not seem to have done so. The spring so far, however, has been generally without showers, and it is hoped that if not long delayed, they will show that life in the plant is not dead, but dormant. The spring in the North-west has also been unusually late, and but little seeding has been done, and it is feared that the ultimate acreage sown will be small.

We should add also, that the acreage of winter wheat planted last fall was considerably in excess of the previous year, which will help compensate for any shortage in the condition.

The market for cotton is steady. In iron, prices are generally firm. Weekly production has increased from 228 tons March 1st, to 245 tons Apr. 1st. Copper has again advanced sharply, and has regained about all the loss since the high prices in January. Affairs in Samoa and the Philippines are not regarded so far as factors in financial and commercial affairs.

Iron and Steel Trade

NO other feature of the wonderful success of American manufacturers in foreign markets has been quite so wonderful as that pertaining to iron and steel. While the exportation of manufactures in the fiscal year 1899 is likely to show an increase of more than $30 000,000 over that of last year, that of iron and steel alone will supply more than one-half that increase. In the eight months of the fiscal year for which the Treasury Bureau of Statistics figures are now available, the exports of iron and steel are nearly $16,000,000 greater than in the corresponding months of the preceding fiscal year, and show a gain of 36 per cent. over those of last year, and nearly 70 per cent. over those of the preceding year. In importations of iron and steel, there is a reduction, as compared with last year, though not in so marked a degree, the falling off in imports for the eight months being but 10 per cent., while the corresponding period of last year showed a reduction of 20 per cent. Nearly all of the great classes of iron and steel manufacturers show an increase over last year. Exports of wire nails, of which the exportations in eight months of the fiscal year 1898, were 16,138,325 pounds, in eight months of 1899, were 28,697,755 pounds; exports of bars or rods of steel increased from 18,720,798 pounds to 37,708,442 pounds; steel plates and sheets, from 13,523,675 pounds to 64,784,626 pounds, and wire from 80 056,290 pounds to 126 858,949 pounds.

Railway engines show an increase of nearly 50 per cent., the value of those exported in the eight months of this fiscal year being $3,178,642, against $2 260,570 in the corresponding months of last year, and $1,958,278 in the same months of the preceding year, and in exports of electrical and metal working machinery an equally large increase is apparent. While a comparison of the exports of the eight months of the present fiscal year with corresponding months of the two earlier years, shows a marked gain, and is therefore interesting, a better view of the real progress of the iron and steel industry is obtained by a comparison of the imports and exports for a term of years. An examination of the figures of the imports and exports of iron and steel, and the manufactures thereof from 1880 to 1898, shows that the imports are now but one-fifth what they were in 1880, while the exports are five times what they were in that year. Thus the American manufacturers, besides occupying four-fifths of the field which foreign manufacturers were then supplying, have at the same time increased their exportations 400 per cent.

SKILLFUL COOKS' DUTY.

Should Make Food Taste and Look Well.

The true science of cookery is to select proper and nourishing ingredients, and then prepare them in such a manner as will please the taste, and incidentally, the eye.

The most valuable food will not long agree with a person if its taste is disagreeable. This does not argue that all nice-tasting articles are nutritious and nourishing. However, it is the duty of all food experts to produce delicious food, and from the best possible ingredients, and to have a comprehensive knowledge of the laws of digestion and assimilation.

Grape-Nuts, the new food made by Postum Cereal Co., Lim., Battle Creek, and now on sale at grocers, is thought to be the highest type of scientifically-made food thus far produced.

It possesses the delicate sweet of grape-sugar, with a new and peculiar flavor of a most winning character, while the processes of manufacture have brought the food to such a condition that it is absorbed by the system in a most natural and healthful manner.

A Combination Set of the Prayer Book and Hymnal, valued at $5.00, handsomely bound and printed on India Paper, will be sent free to anyone sending two new paid-in advance subscriptions to THE LIVING CHURCH, plus 20 cents for carriage.

Suppress Alumed Food

The doctors inform us that alum is a poison, and that alum baking powders should be avoided because they make the food unwholesome. Prominent hygienists, who have given the matter most study, regard these powders as an evil that should be suppressed by State action. In Minnesota and Wisconsin alum powders are not permitted to be sold unless they are branded to warn consumers of their true character, while in the District of Columbia the authorities have, under the direction of Congress, adopted regulations to prohibit the use of alum in bread altogether.

Are not the people of other States, as well as those of Minnesota and Wisconsin, entitled to warning of a danger which is apparently menacing them at close hand, and is not the whole country entitled to absolute protection, as the people of the District of Columbia are protected, by legislation which is entirely prohibitive?

Until we can have protection in the form of a statute, how can our State boards of health, State analysts, or food commissions better serve the public than by publishing in the newspapers from time to time the names of the baking powders which they find to be made from alum?

Meantime, it will aid the housewife in designating the alum powders, to remember that all powders sold at 25 cents or less per pound are of this dangerous class. Pure cream of tartar powders are usually sold at from 45 to 50 cents a pound.

Hints to Housekeepers

THE season is now upon us when the careful housewife appreciates that she must begin preparations for packing away the winter woollens. If she is so fortunate as to be the possessor of a cedar chest, or a chest lined with red cedar, she may rejoice. The moth has his prejudices, and one of these is against red cedar. Another inherent dislike manifested by the discriminating insect, is for the odor of whiskey. If, therefore, our housekeeper can secure a barrel or cask which has contained liquor, she may safely store her woollens in this.

A sunny, breezy day should be chosen as the best time to air the woollens. All winter blankets must be taken out of doors, opened wide, and hung on the line to wave in the wind for several hours. Cloaks, dresses, and all articles of wearing apparel, which are to be stored for the summer, must be thoroughly shaken and cleaned in the open air until all dust is dislodged. Especial attention must be paid to the folds and creases, as in these are often secreted the moths' eggs. After going over a garment with a dry brush, dip a stiff whisk-broom in ammonia and water, and brush again. Then hang each article on the clothes line, and let the sunlight and fresh air visit it from all sides.

Before attempting the work of packing your woollens, have ready a large quantity of newspapers, many yards of strong, unbleached muslin, a paper of stout pins, several pounds of gum-camphor, or camphor-and-tar balls, and enough tar-paper to line the barrel or chest to which you intend to consign your winter treasures. Do your packing in a light, sunny room—one with a clean, bare floor is best. If you must do the work upon a carpeted floor, lay a large sheet over that part of the carpet on which the woollens are laid, that no particles of dust or fluff may adhere to them when they go into summer quarters. Fold each article smoothly, and sprinkle in the folds bits of camphor and tar-balls, and pin up tightly in several thicknesses of newspaper. Over this put a cover of the unbleached muslin, and sew securely with stout thread. On each piece of muslin write in blue pencil the name of the article it encloses, so that if you need a certain bit of wearing apparel before the time for the general unpacking, you can find it without trouble.

Line your box or barrel smoothly with strong tar-paper, and pack your parcels in it neatly. This done, lay a thickness of tar-paper over the top, and tack on a close fitting cover.

Woolen portieres and curtains may be subjected to the same treatment as are the blankets. If easily tumbled by close packing, they may be folded into large, flat parcels, and laid in a paper-lined trunk.

With furs, the housekeeper may take the additional precaution of sprinkling them liberally with cayenne pepper, and letting it sift through the long hairs down to the skin. When the furs are again needed, a brisk shaking in the open air and exposure to the wind will dislodge the red pepper.—Harper's Bazar.

Loops for hanging up garments are always wearing out and breaking. Cut a strip of kid from an old glove, roll in it a piece of coarse string, and sew the edges of kid neatly together. This loop, fastened securely to a garment, will stand any amount of pulling.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO.'S New Books

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL AND HIS FRIENDS

By EDWARD EVERETT HALE, D. D. With many
Portraits and Other Illustrations. 8vo, $3.00.

A delightful book of reminiscences of Lowell and of the interesting friends who surrounded him. Dr. Hale was in college with Lowell, and they were intimate friends. He writes of Lowell with sincere admiration, and in that very interesting style which makes Dr. Hale's stories so fascinating.

THROUGH NATURE TO GOD

By JOHN FISKE. 16mo, $1.00.

This book discusses, in Mr. Fiske's large and luminous way, the mystery of evil, the cosmic roots of love and self-sacrifice, and the everlasting reality of religion. It falls in the same group with his "Idea of God" and "Destiny of Man," which have been an inspiration and a source of strength and light to a multitude of readers.

CAMBRIDGE MILTON

Complete Poetic and Dramatic Works of John
Milton. Cambridge Edition. Edited by WIL-LIAM VAUGHN MOODY. With admirable Introductions to the longer poems, Notes, Translations of Milton's Latin Poems, Indexes to titles and first lines, and a Biographical Sketch. With a fine portrait and an engraved title-page containing a vignette of Milton's home. Large crown 8vo, $2.00.

One of the best of all the volumes in the Cambridge Edition, and beyond comparison the best single-volume edition of Milton ever published.

LETTERS OF CARLYLE TO HIS YOUNGEST SISTER

Edited, with an Introduction, by CHARLES T.
COPELAND, Lecturer on English Literature in Harvard University. With Portraits and
Other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.00.

Mr. Copeland has strung these letters on a slender thread of biography, and, as the London Academy says, "has done his work extremely well." The letters show the tenderer and more attractive side of Carlyle's character.

A TENT OF GRACE

A Novel. By ADELINA C. LUST. 12mo, $1.50.

This story of German village life in the middle of this century, revolves about the gulf of race distinctions, notably the deep gulf between the Christian and the Jew. The heroine is a beautiful Jewess, loved alike by Jew and Christian, and the struggle in her mind between the dominant power of her religious traditions and the force of her affection, is depicted with great dramatic skill.

THRONE MAKERS

By WILLIAM R. THAYER, author of "The Dawn of Italian Independence," etc. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.50.

The "throne makers" are Bismarck, Napoleon III., Kossuth, and Garibaldi. Papers are also devoted to Carlyle, Tintoret, Giordano Bruno, and Byrant. All of these eight papers are marked by a fine historic and critical sense, which lifts them quite above the average of their class.

Notes of the World's Progress

OF CONSIDERABLE INFLUENCE on Cuban political conditions will be the announcement by General Maximo Gomez of his determination to support an American protectorate until such time as a stable, independent government can be formed. It is reported the declaration will include a recital of the personal views of the Cuban Commander-in-chief regarding the $3,000,000. On this point he will say he favors buying plantations and factories in which soldiers can hold stock, drawing wages and dividends, but as the soldiers need clothes and shoes and something to tide over immediate necessities, the money should be paid out now. He thinks the rural police should be one body, so that detachments living in one part of the island might be sent on emergency into districts where they would not be affected by local influences. Annexation sentiment is growing in Cuba, being now advocated by five Havana newspapers. The work of insular reconstruction is proceeding as rapidly as conditions will permit. Puerto Ricans are advocating the cessation of the military government, in order to be declared a territory, believing this the only solution of political, social, and economic problems. On the arrival of the Colonial Commission, an address was presented by a committee of bankers, merchants, and planters, setting forth the needs of the island. It is anticipated the report of the commission will favor an immediate introduction of American laws and customs. The policy of General Henry has been to introduce American methods and principles into the island as fast as circumstances would permit. His idea is to colonize gradually, not to Americanize at once, in the hope that before many years the Puerto Ricans, who are extremely sensitive and jealous of their prerogatives, will be in possession of a territorial form of government.

ANOTHER SERIES OF ATROCITIES, at this time in the State of Georgia, have shocked the nation. Some four weeks ago negroes attempted to burn the town of Palmetto, were pursued by an armed mob, and five were shot; some of the guilty escaped, while it is probable some killed were guiltless. A few days later a farmer living in the locality was killed by a negro, and after committing other offenses, the criminal took to the swamps, where he was captured. He made a confession, implicating a negro preacher, and was burned at a stake. The negro preacher was subsequently hanged, also another negro who expressed sentiments against the whites. Palmetto is in a sparsely settled locality where there is practically no police protection, and this fact may afford some excuse for men to band themselves together to suppress and punish crime, but there is no excuse for the infliction of punishment which savors of medievalism and is a reproach to civilization. The section of the South in which these crimes were perpetrated which met with summary vengeance, is agitated to its very foundations, and while deploring the method of punishment, a means is being sought to prevent causes arising which lead to mob violence. The Atlanta Constitution publishes a page of opinions from prominent Southerners as to the best means of protecting homes from the vicious negro element. Some advocate the organization of rural militia or police, while others, more radical, urge that women be taught the use of fire arms, and be permitted to carry them. It is likely legislative action will be taken.

IN THE LIGHT OF RECENT STATEMENTS by General Lawton, as to the force required in the Philippines, comfort can be found in the more recent utterance of General Otis, that no more troops will be needed, and that volunteers at Manila are to be mustered out and sent home as expeditiously as possible. Dispatches indicate that discord has divided the Filipinos, many being in favor of making terms with the United States. Mr. John Barrett, former minister to Siam, who has arrived in London from Manila, declares that "The United States naval and military authorities have done everything possible in the difficult and exceptional circumstances, and the united support of all parties in the United States at the present juncture will enable them to bring matters in the Philippines to a quick and lasting settlement, honorable to the motherland. Should the Filipinos, however, who are kept well informed, acquire the idea that a prolongation of hostilities would affect politics in the United States advantageously to them, the war would be more prolonged." In the opinion of Mr. Barrett, the Filipino, as soon as he has had time to digest the recent successes of General Otis and General Lawton, and to become convinced of American superiority, will settle down to a life of peaceful and progressive citizenship.

NEWSPAPERS OF CALIFORNIA ARE IN arms against a law enacted by the legislature of that State, requiring, among other things, that all articles bear the signature of their writers. A provision forbids cartooning without permission of the individual. This, the papers are ignoring, being advised it is unconstitutional. The power of the press unjustly exercised is undoubtedly an evil to be legally restricted, but it may be questioned if such radical legislation as that of California may not work a hardship on those editors who have a high ideal in journalism, and would not lend their aid or influence toward furthering any matter, political or otherwise, which would not be right or just. Influential journals are a power for good, and their value in moulding sentiment is universally recognized. It is the pariahs, those which pander to the vicious and sensational, attack character by innuendo, and at the same time skillfully evade actual libel, that should come under the ban of restrictive legislation.

SAMOAN AFFAIRS ARE LIKELY NEAR- ing a settlement. The commissioners, one for each government, have sailed from San Francisco, and it is expected their report, based on a searching investigation into the causes of the present complication, will result in a satisfactory adjustment. Fortunately, the whole matter is not of sufficient importance to lead to serious difficulty between the nations involved. The instructions of the commissioners confer authority to bring about an immediate state of peace, but whatever action is taken must be unanimous. It would seem the first step must be to supersede, temporarily at least, the authority of the consuls now in Samoa, as it appears impossible for them to act in harmony. Doubt is expressed in some quarters as to the result of this visit of the joint commission, owing to the requirement of unanimous action. Utterances of German officials are pacific, and all attempts towards inciting hostilities in all three countries have been disapproved. The only solution may be a dissolution of the tripartite protectorate, although this is open to serious objection.

OF UNUSUAL INTEREST IS THE ANNOUNCED retirement of Thomas Brackett Reed. Since 1878 Mr. Reed has been prominent in Congress, and as speaker, a position which he made unique in congressional annals, he has probably been subjected to more alternate abuse and applause, than any other man in his party. Possessed of all the essential qualities of leadership, and backed by an unbending will where he believed himself to be in the right, Mr. Reed has ruled even the majority with an iron rod. The adoption of new rules soon after his first election as speaker, gave him the opportunity of exerting a powerful influence on legislation, and unless the latter flowed in channels he had marked for it, obstructive tactics which Congress could not overcome were called into play. Nor can anything be said against his rugged honesty and sincerity. While at times apparently just criticism has been directed against him, his so-styled "despotism" has been the death of many profligate Bills which were aimed at the United States Treasury. His object was to get results from Congress, and this he may be said to have achieved. As the senior member of a New York legal firm, Mr. Reed will still be in the public eye. Conjectures are now in order as to whether or not his retirement is in any way connected with a recent visit in Georgia, the guest with President McKinley at the winter home of Senator Hanna.

SENATOR QUAY, OF PENNSYLVANIA, has been "vindicated," in so far as acquittal on the charge of misuse of State funds can be construed as a vindication. The result of the trial was immediately followed by his appointment to the senatorship, which he had failed to secure by election. Inasmuch as the Legislature adjourned without an election, the Governor assumed the right, under certain provisions of the State constitution. Should the Legislature convene in special session, balloting for United States senator will be resumed, otherwise the appointment must be confirmed by the Senate. The outcome of the trial, and subsequent appointment of Mr. Quay call forth bitter comment from factions opposed to "machine" politics, while friends of the Senator exult in the triumph of their political chieftain. The trial was remarkable in some respects. Evidence seemed to connect Senator Quay with speculations in which State funds were used, but no testimony was introduced for the defense. From the first ballot, ten of the jury favored acquittal. For the time the Quay element seems to be victorious.

IN REPORTING ON COMMERCIAL CONDITIONS in the Hawaiian Islands, Consul General Hatwood says: "Few persons who have not lived here can fully appreciate how much the general prosperity of these islands depends on the sugar market. Excepting the transients, everyone makes or loses, according to the profits of the plantations. With annexation came a feeling of security, and when you add to this an abnormally large crop, with high prices, it is not surprising that new plantations should be promoted. These plantations are capitalized for amounts varying from $1,000,000 to $3,500,000, every cent of which will be expended before anything is received from the sale of sugar. A great part of this money goes toward the purchase of machinery and supplies. Of this money I should say that 75 per cent. is spent in the United States. In round numbers, probably $25,000,000 is invested in sugar here."

The News of the Church

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The Bishop announces that after May 1st his private residence will be at 1825 Roscoe st; telephone number, "Belmont, 862," and that, ordinarily, he will be at his business office, in the rooms of the Church Club, on Mondays from 11 A. M. to 4 P. M.

A remarkably fine program of sacred music was rendered by the choir of Trinity, on the evening of the 20th, under the direction of Dr. Rudge, choirmaster, with a large attendance, after shortened Evensong by the rector, who gave brief addresses.

The newly organized chapter of the Daughters of the King in the church of the Redeemer, Elgin, meets once a week for systematic study of the Holy Scriptures, under the guidance of the rector.

The Rev. Alf Lealtad, of St. Thomas' church, is taking a much needed rest in Cleveland, his troubles being augmented by the death last week of a loved sister.

A tablet to the memory of the late Miss Lett has been placed in St. Luke's hospital, by the alumnae of the Training School for Nurses, of which she was for many years superintendent, and on which she left the imprint of her lovely Christian character, which has been maintained by her successors.

At St. George's church, Grand Crossing, Mr. Harry Kerstetter, who has been assisting the Rev. T. J. O. Curran as lay-reader, leaves this week to do missionary work, while candidate for Orders, in North Dakota.

The offshoot of Christ church, Woodlawn, which is rapidly developing into a mission, now domiciled in a store at 67th St. and South Chicago av., will have a monthly Celebration by the Rev. A. W. Williams, while the Sunday school will be conducted by Mr. Hoag.

Bishop McLaren confirmed one of the members of All Angels' deaf-mute mission, at Trinity church, Chicago, on Sunday morning, April 16th, the Rev. A. W. Mann interpreting. Following this, was a celebration of the Holy Communion in the church adjoining. The afternoon service was also well attended.

Petition from Puerto Rico

A petition from San Juan, Puerto Rico, dated at the Easter season, which is destined to be an historical document, not simply in the annals of this diocese, but in those of the American Church, has just been received by the Bishop of Chicago. It bears the signatures of 35 adults, the name of Major-General Henry, Governor of the island, heading the list which includes the chief surgeon of the U. S. Army of Occupation, a colonel, two majors, four captains, and three lieutenants, who promise conformity to the canons of the Church, place themselves under the spiritual direction of the Bishop, ask for the organization of a mission dedicated to St. John the Divine, pledging themselves to give for the support of the same a stipulated sum, which insures the support of a priest-in charge.

Confirmations by Bishop White

The Bishop of Indiana, acting for the Bishop of Chicago, laid hands on the following classes: On the morning of the 2d Sunday after Easter, in St. Ansgarius', one of 75 (not 40 as given by mistake in our last issue); in the evening upon one of 11 in the place of worship temporarily used by the congregation of St. Paul's, Kankakee, where, as we are informed by the rector, the Rev. Dr. D. S. Phillips, a selection will this week be made from the seven plans submitted for the new church. In the church of the Holy Communion, Maywood, a class of 19, the largest ever had in the parish, was presented on the 18th by the Rev. John A. Carr, who is continuing his lectures to them as a first Communion class, the members of which will receive in a body on Whitsun Day. On the 19th the Rev. C.

Scadding presented 30 candidates in Emmanuel, La Grange, on which occasion also one was officially received from the Roman Church. On the 21st, the rector of Trinity, Aurora, the Rev. C. A. Holbrook, presented 10 candidates. At Easter he had 52 communicants at the early Celebration, and 96 at the later, out of a total of 185 reported a year ago; the Easter offering was $150. There was Confirmation at Hinsdale on the 20th, and in Christ church, Joliet, on the 23d. Bishop White visits Waterman Hall, Sycamore, (St. Peter's), and Rockford, this week.

Visit of the Bishop of Niagara

The Lord Bishop of Niagara, the Rt. Rev. John Philip Du Moulin, at present on a visit to his son, the Rev. Frank Du Moulin, preached twice in St. Peter's last Sunday to large congregations. A pleasing incident at the close of the service was the presentation by the Bishop, on behalf of the congregation, of a medal to Master James Edsall, one of the choir, who is leaving for North Dakota, to the Bishop of which missionary jurisdiction his lordship paid a glowing compliment. The Bishop was to be tendered a reception in St. Peter's parish on Thursday evening, and will preach in the church again on Sunday next.

The Swedish Conference

The pleasant gathering of 14 of the Swedish clergymen of our Church, held in St. Ansgarius', and extending from the 12th to the 17th, was brought to a close by a business meeting, previous to which, in the morning, the members of this third annual conference paid their respects, in a body, to the Bishop of Chicago, at his rooms in the Church Club. The Rev. H. Lindskog presided all through the conference, and was re-elected President for the ensuing year, by unanimous vote of the delegates. In the daily deliberations, no subject attracted more attention than that of Sunday schools, the chairman of the Committee on Schools, the Rev. Olaf A. Toffteen, rector of St. Ansgarius' parish, Minneapolis, presenting an admirable report. A Swedish ritual was adopted for use in the Sunday schools. A Committee on Publication was appointed for the issuing of Church literature in the Swedish language, and another committee was appointed to make a translation of the Swedish liturgy, for presentation to the House of Bishops. After Bishop White had spoken to the large Confirmation class on the morning of the 16th, addressing himself particularly to the young lads present, the Rev. Gottfried Hammarschöld, of Yonkers, N. Y., preached in Swedish, taking his text from the gospel for the day, in which our blessed Lord emphasizes His position as the Good Shepherd. The rector was assisted in the evening service by the Rev. C. J. Ljunggren, of Providence, R. I., and the Rev. Schurer Verner, of Litchfield, Mass., himself being preacher. The next meeting of this useful "Swedish Church association" is to be held in Boston during Easter week of 1900. The officers, besides the president, are the Rev. A. V. Alfvegreen, secretary, and Eric Forsberg, treasurer. Other members present besides those already named were: The Rev. Messrs. J. E. Almfeldt, of Cokato, Minn.; Carl A. Nybladh, of St. John's, Galesburg, Ill., and A. W. Sundelof, of Boston.

St. George's Day

The usual annual services of St. George's Day, this year in charge of the Order of the Sons of St. George, were held in the cathedral at 4 P. M., of the 23d. The service was full choral, and the music excellent. The prayers were said by the Rev. Clarence H. Branscombe (who joined the cathedral staff the day before from the diocese of Fond du Lac) and the dean, the Rev. Luther Pardee. The special lessons, Isaiah xlix and I. Peter ii, were read by the Rev. T. D. Phillips, and the sermon, on the importance of "playing the man," by courage and good example, was preached by the Rev. Ernest V. Shayler, of Sandusky, Ohio. The church was densely packed, the nationality of the congregation being clearly manifested by the heartiness in which all joined in singing the national hymn, "My country's God," so strongly reminding of that "gracious Queen," under whose flag most of them were born. An attractive feature was the orderly procession of the members' Sons and Daughters, of the various lodges of the Order, many of the men being conspicuous as officers of the uniformed rank.

Confirmation at the Epiphany

On Sunday morning last, the Bishop confirmed a class of 44, prepared in part by the Rev. E. J. Randall and the Rev. H. L. Cawthorne, and presented by the rector, the Rev. John Henry Hopkins. A supplementary Confirmation will be held at the cathedral on Trinity Sunday, May 28th, the services being at 10:30 A. M., and 7:30 P. M. The congregations since Easter have been unusually large for this season, and the music fine. A service for young people is announced for next Sunday evening, with special music. An elaborate service for the evening of Ascension Day, is also in preparation. Weekly Sunday school meetings are being held at the close of the Friday evening services. Two new Bible classes, taught by the rector and Mrs. Hopkins, will be commenced next Sunday. Three new members were admitted to the local Brotherhood chapter last Sunday.

Emmanuel Church, La Grange

The personnel of the last Confirmation class was noticeably strong. On the evening of the 21st, the rector had his annual meeting for instruction of all communicants, attended by 200, and constituting a fine family gathering. The loyalty and devotion of his people to their church and pastor are gratefully acknowledged by the Rev. Mr. Scadding, in whose last Confirmation class were both the managers of the Associated Press.

Christ Church, Joliet

The rector, the Rev. W. Bohlen Walker, presented a class of 17 at Bishop White's visitation, which was one of unusual interest, from the fact that he was himself for nine years rector of this parish, and during his rectorate the new church, the chapel, and the rectory were built. The Bishop preached both morning and evening to large congregations of his old parishioners. On the afternoon and evening of the preceding day, Col. Fred Bennett, recently elected mayor of the city, and his wife, whose father was for many years senior warden, gave a public reception to Bishop and Mrs. White.

Clerical Changes

The Rev. Harold Morse resigned as assistant at Trinity on the 17th, having accepted appointment as priest-in-charge of the Mediator, Morgan Park, including All Saints', Pullman. The Rev. J. H. Parsons has moved to Chicago, in charge of St. Ann's, Humboldt Park, succeeding the Rev. J. Mark Ericsson, who is now assistant at Grace. Mr. Parsons' place at St. Paul's, Savanna, is taken by the Rev. J. H. Dennis, for a year attached to the cathedral. Mr. Dennis' place is taken by the Rev. C. H. Branscombe, from Centralia, Wis. The Rev. C. J. Shutl, deacon, will leave St. John's, Naperville, on June 1st, returning to Bishop Seymour's diocese, assuming there the duties of city missionary in Springfield, and those of domestic chaplain to the Bishop.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At a meeting of the New York Churchmen's Association last week, the Rev. Chas. L. Biggs discussed "Burial customs." There was a large attendance.

Through the efforts of the Rev. Robert M. Berkeley, rector of Zion church, Dobbs Ferry, a chapel has been established at Ardsley, and the first service was conducted Sunday, April 23d,

At the recent visitation of Bishop Potter to the church of the Mediator, Kingsbridge, in the upper part of the city, he confirmed and addressed 15 candidates, presented by the rector, the Rev. John Campbell. A movement is making to reduce the parish debt.

The trustees of Columbia University have granted a temporary leave of absence to President Seth Low, LL.D., as commissioner to the coming Peace Conference at the Hague. It is an interesting fact that three of the American commissioners are Columbia alumni.

The congregation of the former chapel of the parish of the Transfiguration, has secured by purchase, a house in 69th st., near Amsterdam ave., on the "West-Side," in which it is proposed to hold services. The building, which is of brick, and three stories in height, will be utilized in the upper portion as a parish house.

Memorial to Dr. Langford

On the chancel wall of the chapel in the Church Missions House, a tablet of oak has been placed, bearing the inscription:

To the glory of God, and in loving memory of the Rev. William Spaight Langford, D.D. This tablet is placed by order of the Board of Managers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church, to record the fact that to the forethought and energy of the late general secretary are chiefly due the inception and completion of the Church Missions House.

Ordination of the Rev. Dr. Briggs

It is announced that Bishop Potter will advance the Rev. Chas. A. Briggs, D.D., deacon, and still professor in the Union Theological Seminary, to the priesthood of the Church, on Sunday, May 14th, at St. Peter's church, Westchester.

Bequests of Charles E. Tilford

By the will filed for probate in the Surrogates' Court, April 18th, provision is made that the residue of the estate, which is large, shall go to the Home for Incurables at Fordham, St. John's Guild, the Children's Aid Society, and three hospitals.

Memorial for Mr. Hugh N. Camp

At St. James' church, Fordham, the Rev. Chas. J. Holt, rector, a window has lately been added in memory of Mr. Hugh N. Camp, Sr., a former warden of the parish. The design symbolizes the Holy Eucharist, and represents wheat and the grape vine in artistic arrangement in opalescent glass.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The local assembly has just held its spring meeting at the church of the Holy Sepulchre, the Rev. Dr. Hughes, rector. In the afternoon, the Rev. Everett Smith, of Detroit, discussed "Ways to win," and in the evening an address was made by the Rev. Wm. S. Rainsford, D.D.

Hospital Association

From the annual receipts of the Saturday and Sunday Hospital Association has been paid this year: To St. Luke's Hospital, $5,420.19; to St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children, $2,257.62; to the Home for Incurables, Fordham, $2,063.51; to the House of the Holy Comforter, $1,153.87; and to St. John's Guild, for its children's hospital work, $665.90.

Death of the Rev. Edward Kenney

His death occurred in New York city, April 15th. Mr. Kenney was for a time curate of St. John's church, Washington, D. C. In 1870 he went to Cuba to undertake missionary work. Ten years later he resigned, by reason of ill-health; later, becoming rector of St. Peter's church, Port Chester, in this diocese. His last work was connected with the church of the Redeemer, in this city.

Legacy for the Pro-Cathedral chapel

The cathedral of St. John the Divine is to receive a legacy from the estate of the late Frederick A. Gaus, the will being filed in the Probate Court April 15th. The eightieth part of the residue of the estate is to be divided between the trustees of the cathedral and of the Wayside Day Nursery. In the former instance, it is specified that it be expended for the benefit of the pro-cathedral chapel.

Service for the Old Guard

The 73d anniversary of the organization of the Old Guard was commemorated April 22d, by a parade of the guardsmen, under the command of Major S. Ellis Briggs, and a memorial service at St. Thomas' church. The sermon was preached by the Rev. John W. Brown, D.D., chaplain of the guard, and rector of the parish. A musical service was rendered under the direction of Mr. Geo. Wm. Warren. The Old Guard band was also present.

Gift of Scholarships for Barnard

Barnard College has received from Miss Emily H. Bourne, of New York, $6,000 for the establishment for two scholarships of $150 per annum. They are to be known as the Emily James Smith scholarship, in honor of the present dean of the college, and the Anna E. Barnard scholarship, in honor of Mr. John G. Barnard. These scholarships are to be awarded annually at the discretion of the giver in conference with the representatives of the college.

Girls' Friendly Society

The annual service for the diocesan branch was held Sunday, April 16th, at Christ church, New York city, when the rector, the Rev. Dr. Jacob L. Shipman, preached the annual sermon. The church was well filled, though the weather was stormy. The society is seeking to enlarge the capacity of its summer home at Cold Spring Harbor, L. I., by the purchase of additional property. About $15,000 is needed. Offerings at the service were devoted to the fresh air work.

The Squirrel Inn

The Church Temperance Society has met with a slight hindrance in its effort to put the new Squirrel Inn to use. The funds for support having been sufficiently guaranteed, plans for the reconstruction of the building as a temperance hotel were presented to the Building Department of the city. The latter has disapproved them on a technicality of such doubtful force, that appeal is likely to be made to the civil courts, though it may be possible to overcome the trouble by some modification of the original designs.

Death of Robert R. Livingston

The son of the late Robert E. Livingston, of the historic manor of "Clermont," and great grandson of the celebrated Chancellor Robert R. Livingston, whose name he bore, died in New York, April 16th. He was about 40 years of age and had long been active in promoting public good in many ways at Tivoli-on-the-Hudson, where was located his country residence. He was a vestryman of St. Paul's church, Tivoli, and a man of large benevolence. He was an alumnus of Columbia College. The burial service took place April 19th, at the church of the Ascension, New York city, and interment was made at Tivoli.

Marriage of the Rev. Herbert Shipman

At St. Bartholomew's church, the Rev. Dr. Greer, rector, took place on April 19th, the marriage of the Rev. Herbert Shipman, chaplain of the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, to Miss Julia Fay Bradley, daughter of Edison Bradley, Esq., of New York. The ceremony was performed by the bridegroom's father, the Rev. Dr. Jacob S. Shipman, and Bishop Potter pronounced the nuptial blessing. There was a choral service rendered by the vested choir of the church. Miss Cecilia Miles, daughter of Major-General Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., was the maid of honor.

Church Work in the Philippines

On Saturday, April 15th, the Rev. Messrs. Hugh Nethescotts and James L. Smiley, accompanied by Mr. John Howe Peyton, army secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, departed for the Philippine Islands, under the auspices of the Board of Missions, and the authority of Bishop Satterlee, of Washington, and bearing a commission from the Presiding Bishop of the Church in the United States. The immediate purpose of these men will be spiritual work among the American troops now in and around Manila, under the command of Gen. Otis. It is however, intended to utilize any opening that may arise for work among the inhabitants of the islands.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Bishop Whitaker has been passing a few days at Atlantic City, N. J., enjoying a well-earned rest. He was to return home on the 24th inst.

On Sunday morning, 16th inst., at Trinity church, Southwark, Phila., the Rev. H. F. Fuller, rector, a handsome silver alms bason was presented and used for the first time; it is a memorial of the late Jonathan May.

George W. Jacobs, treasurer of the Lenten and Easter offering of the Sunday schools, reports that up to the 22d inst. he had received $8,858.39 from 80 schools. This is less than one-half the total number of Sunday schools.

Donation to the Sheltering Arms

This institution has just received from the Mænnerchor Society of Philadelphia, the sum of $960, being one-half of the net proceeds realized from the 12th annual German-American ball given last February; the other half was paid to the hospital of the University of Pennsylvania.

Girls' Friendly Society

On Saturday afternoon and evening, 15th inst., the Girls' Friendly Society held a charming little festival in Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia. It was known as the "Festival of Days," and the booths were appropriately decorated. The proceeds go towards the support of the "G. F. S. Holiday House," Cape May, N. J.

A Thank-offering

The aisles and chancel of the church of the Good Shepherd, Kensington, Philadelphia, have been tiled, the chancel enlarged and provided with new steps of Tennessee marble, at a cost of over $1,000. The gift is a thank-offering by Mr. Isaac Schlichter, of Frankford Junction, for the recovery of his daughter from a serious illness about a year ago.

Board of Missions

At a special meeting held at the Church House on the 18th inst., all the convocations were represented, excepting Norristown. Changes in several of the canons to be recommended at the approaching diocesan convention, were discussed. That of abolishing the office of archdeacon was under consideration, but failed of recommendation by a close vote.

Archdeacon Brady Resigns

Some little while ago Archdeacon Brady sent his resignation to Bishop Whitaker, to take effect immediately; but the Bishop refused to accept it. The resignation was again sent on the 18th inst., and Bishop Whitaker accepted it, to take effect Sept. 1st. It is generally understood that Mr. Brady will become rector of the new memorial church of St. Paul's, Overbrook, Philadelphia, on Oct. 1st.

The South-east Convocation

Opened on the 20th inst., at old St. Peter's church, Philadelphia, with a celebration of the Holy Communion. Routine business was transacted. At the public missionary meeting in the evening, an address was made by the Rev. Henry L. Phillips, on "Work among the colored people," and "The solution" was given in another address by the Rev. A. B. Hunter, of St. Augustine's church, Raleigh, N. C.

St. James' Guild

The different departments of the Girls' Guild connected with St. James' church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. J. N. Blanchard, rector, feel that the past winter has been one of unusual profit and pleasure. The classes have been well attended throughout, especially those in physical culture. In the April number of The Club Worker, there is an interesting account of the "Imaginary Trip Abroad," which has throughout the winter been one of the features of St. James' guild work.

The 19th Regiment at Old Christ Church

The recently re-organized 19th regiment, N. G. P., after a five mile tramp through the rain, on Sunday afternoon, 16th inst., marched into Old Christ church, Philadelphia, completely filling the sittings on the ground floor, the staff officers occupying the "Washington pew." The rector, the Rev. Dr. C. Ellis Stevens, who is also chaplain of the regiment, welcomed the 19th to the old historic church, from which officers and men have gone to every war since its foundations were laid, over two centuries ago. George Washington worshiped there, and Col. Benjamin Franklin was chairman of a committee that procured the funds for the erection of the present building.

The North-east Convocation

Met on the 20th inst., in the Church House, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. H. Richard Harris, dean, in the chair. The sum of $2,015 was reported as received from the several parishes. The Rev. J. P. Tyler stated that the deaconess of the church of the Advent had made 395 visits. Those in charge of the Galilee mission reported that there is an average attendance nightly from 60 to 70; and at the Sunday school between 40 and 50. Francis A. Lewis stated that the Board of Missions will suggest to the convention the consolidation of the four city convocations. A resolution was passed that it is the sense of convocation that no change should be made in the boundaries of the convocations. The next meeting will be held in St. Stephen's church, May 23d.

The Southwest Convocation

It met on the 17th inst., in Holy Trinity parish house, Philadelphia. The treasurer reported receipts during the past six months, $1,371.48. Favorable reports were received from mission stations: At the chapel of St. Simon the Cyrenian, colored congregation, it was stated that regular services have been held, and there is a gradual growth. On the 11th inst., the Bishop confirmed 11 candidates, presented by the Rev. H. L. Phillips, rector of the church of the Crucifixion, with which parish this chapel is included. At the French church of St. Sauveur, the Rev. Dr. C. Miel reported progress. The Rev. Dr. A. G. Mortimer, rector of St. Mark's church, stated that the missionary work at St. Michael's and St. Mary's chapels (the latter a colored congregation) was most encouraging.

The Rev. H. S. Getz Resigns

At the morning services on Sunday, 16th inst., of the church of the Holy Apostles, and the memorial chapel of the Holy Communion, Philadelphia, the resignation of the Rev. Henry S. Getz as rector of the parish, was announced. The vestry in accepting Mr. Getz's resignation, had adopted a resolution which was read at this time, testifying to their sense of the devotion to the interests of the parish which Mr. Getz has shown during the period of his connection with it—curate from January, 1884, assistant rector from January, 1887, and rector since January, 1895. The parish, which dates from January, 1868, has done a noble work, and has always been in the forefront in its missionary zeal; its offerings for this purpose, taking into consideration the means of the people, having been remarkable. The communicants enrolled number 1,318, and the Sunday schools have a membership of over 2,000. At Easter of this year the offerings of the schools were, Holy Apostles, $4,027.90; Holy Communion, $684.40.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D.D., Bishop

On Saturday evening, April 22d, Bishop Whitehead made his annual visitation to St. John's church, Franklin, the Rev. A. H. Judge, rector. The Bishop preached and administered the rite of Confirmation, and after the service in the church, set apart, with a service of benediction, the handsome, commodious, and well-appointed parish house.

On Friday evening, April 21st, the Rev. A. J. Nock was instituted into the rectorship of St. James' memorial church, Titusville, by the Bishop, assisted by the general missionary, the Rev. L. F. Cole, the Rev. A. H. Judge who preached the sermon, and other clergymen from neighboring parishes.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The monthly meeting of the local assembly took place on April 20th, in Calvary church, Pittsburgh. Mr. H. D. W. English gave an account of the labors of Mr. John Peyton, a Brotherhood man, among the soldiers during the war with Spain, and of the work which he hopes to do in the Philippines, whither he has sailed. He carried with him as an outfit for his work, a large tent, an organ, Bible, and Prayer Books, and other necessary equipments, provided by generous Church people within and without the Brotherhood, in the city and diocese of Pittsburgh. The Rev. C. M. Young, of Washington, made an address on "Custom and right," and the Rev. Dr. White spoke on "The importance of good works."

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A fine grand piano has recently been placed in Hall memorial house, of Holy Trinity parish, Brooklyn. It is one of several gifts from a member within the past month.

The church of the Holy Apostles, Windsor Terrace, has been incorporated, and articles have been filed in the office of the county clerk. The incorporators are the vicar, the Rev. C. S. Davidson, F. C. Kinkaid, and Thomas H. Marvin.

Confirmation at Christ Church, E. D.

At this church, the Rev. Dr. James H. Darlington, rector, a class of 41 was confirmed by the Bishop on the second Sunday after Easter, in the evening. The rector, and the Rev. Messrs. J. E. Elliott, Chas. E. Cragg, and M. Collins, took part in the services.

Gifts to Church Charity Foundation

A member of Christ church, E. D., Brooklyn, has given the sum of $3,000 to the Home for the Blind. She herself has imperfect sight, and desired to help in her lifetime those similarly afflicted. The members of St. Elizabeth's Guild, Christ church, Bay Ridge, have given $100 to St. John's, for the support of a boy in the children's ward for a half year.

St. Luke's Church, Sea Cliff

This church is cleared of all debt, and the Bishop has designated June 29th as the date for its consecration. At a recent meeting of the vestry it was practically decided to build a parish house on ground adjoining the church. It will contain a large hall on the ground floor, a bowling alley, baths, and other features. The vestry has on hand a considerable sum, and plans are being made to raise more, for the building which it is expected will be erected in the fall.

Memorial Window for Grace, Brooklyn

On the second Sunday after Easter, at Grace church, on the Heights, the Rev. Frederick Burgess, rector, a memorial window was unveiled. It was placed by Mr. S. Boocock, in memory of his late wife. The subject is our Lord at the home of Mary and Martha at Bethany. Among the striking features of the work, are the extreme beauty of the countenances of the figures represented, and the force with which the subject is portrayed. The window represents the highest type of American art in colored glass work.

St. Thomas' Church, Brooklyn

Services were held daily throughout Lent, and three services on Good Friday, including the solemn devotion from 12 to 3 p. m. On Easter Day the attendance at all the services, including the Sunday school, aggregated 2,200, of which number 439 received the Holy Communion. A beautiful new chancel rail of oak and brass was used for the first time, as a gift from a parishioner. The Easter offering amounted to $800, which, in the absence of any special sums of large amount, indicated the interest and devotion of the members. The Sunday school numbers 933 by a carefully revised roll of regular attendants only. The children's Easter celebration was held on Easter Tuesday, afternoon and evening, the church being inadequate for the accommodation of all at one time. During the year there have been 125 Baptisms, and 50 persons confirmed. The work of the parish is increasing at a ratio far in advance of the facilities. If the means were available to construct a large edifice of brick or stone, the result would be powerful in its influence, not only on the immediate neighborhood, but on the Church at large. The Rev. J. Clarence Jones, Ph. D., is rector, and the Rev. George Henderson, curate.

Newark

Thomas Alfred Starkey, D.D., Bishop

The 25th annual convention of the diocese of Newark will be held May 16th, in Grace church, Orange, at 10 A. M.

Trinity Church, Newark

This church used its new $9,000 organ on Easter Day, at which time it was blessed by the rector, the Rev. Louis Shreve Osborne. At the annual meeting of the parish, the old vestry was re-elected. The rector reported about $33,000 raised the past year for all purposes, the largest amount ever raised in the history of this old and prominent parish. Various missions and parishes in the diocese have been assisted by it, and its offerings for foreign missions have been large and generous.

Debts Cleared at Christ Church, Newark

When the present rector, the Rev. Dean Richmond Babbitt, LL. D., entered on the rectorship of this parish last November, the parish was in debt to the amount of between $4,000 and $5,000. This was made up of the accumulations and deficits of many years, including a mortgage on the rectory for $1,650, and street assessments on its handsome property, aggregating $1,545, and many smaller floating debts. On Easter Day last, all these debts were cleared off by the Easter offering of $5,200. One lady gave the rector a check for $5,000 on Good Friday, to be used at his discretion for the parish. On Wednesday evening in Easter Week, the parishioners thronged the new parish house to celebrate their freedom from debt, and to witness the "burning of the mortgage." The rector called upon Mr. E. W. Bellar, the former clerk of the vestry, who had signed the mortgage, to burn it, which was done amid the plaudits of those present. The blackened ashes of the mortgage were preserved as a warning against all future debt. Christ church is now in a thoroughly prosperous condition—all of its current obligations being met from week to week, with great unity, harmony, and enthusiasm among its members; a fine brown stone church, a property extending from Congress to Prospect st., with 112 ft. frontage on each, and with a comfortable rectory, all recently improved, and the improvements paid for. It will celebrate the 50th anniversary of its founding next February.

Maine

Rev. Henry Adams Neely, D. D., Bishop

Trinity Church, Lewiston

There were nearly as many communicants at the early, as at the later, Celebration on Easter Day. Hitherto, only a very few have attended the early Celebrations; this is a development which promises much for the spiritual life of the parish. The music at the five services was splendidly rendered. The Easter offering was $328, a large amount for a congregation almost wholly made up of poor mill operatives. At the Sunday school festival service, the superintendent, Mr. Samuel Mottram, gave a report of the work of the school, which was most satisfactory; 200 potted plants were presented to the children; these they are to care for and bring to church next Easter for decorative purposes. A new carpet has lately been put in the church by the ladies of St. Monica's Guild. The Bishop visited this parish, the Rev. I. C. Fortin, rector, on the 1st Sunday after Easter, and confirmed a class of 31 persons, most of whom were adults, and several from the denominations.

Easter at Bar Harbor

At St. Saviour's church the services were rendered specially attractive by the first public appearance of the vested boy choir, which has been in training for the past two months, with Mr. Maurice C. Rumsey, formerly of St. Agnes' chapel, New York. Few of the boys had any previous training, but they acquitted themselves very well indeed, and did honor to their teacher. The Rev. Wm. O. Baker, curate, has had entire charge of the parish during the absence of the rector, the Rev. C. S. Leffingwell.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Bishop Walker made his visitation of St. Luke's parish, Jamestown, on the evening of Thursday, April 20th, and confirmed a class of 31, presented by the rector, the Rev. A. Sidney Dealey.

Delaware

Leighton Coleman, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The reports of the Easter services from all parts of the diocese were very encouraging.

Confirmations in Wilmington

The Bishop has confirmed the following classes: At St. John's, 32; Trinity, 18; Calvary, 19; St. Andrew's, 11. Calvary is to have a supplemental class confirmed on May 19th.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The quarterly meeting of the local assembly recently met in Trinity Parish House, when a paper, written by the Rev. W. Jefferis, D. D., was read by Mr. C. M. Curtis, on "Reasons why more men do not attend the Church services." The subject was discussed by the clergy and several of the laymen present.

Diocesan Sunday School Institute

The following is the programme of a most interesting and helpful session, held at Newcastle, on April 20th, the Bishop presiding: 10:30 A. M., Holy Communion and address by the Bishop; on the topic, "The live Sunday school," discussion opened by the Rev. Wm. N. Jefferis, D. D. 2:30 P. M., "Sunday school adjuncts: (1) The Library, (2) Music; discussion opened by the Rev. Messrs. H. Ashton Henry (1) and H. Ward Cunningham and Wm. J. Fisher (2). 3:30 P. M., "Two ways of teaching: (1) Word, (2) Example;" discussion by the Rev. Messrs. Francis M. Taitt, John Warnock (1), and Geo. H. Buck, and Messrs. Chas. A. Cook and John S. Grohe (2). 4:45 P. M., The question box. 7:30 P. M., "The Church's care for her children: (1) Past, (2) Present;" discussion was opened by the Rev. Messrs. Kensey J. Hammond (1) and Henry Thomas (2).

Nebraska

George Worthington, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop

The missions of St. Paul and St. Andrew, Omaha, have been transferred from the care of the Associate Mission, and placed as cathedral missions, under the care of the zealous and indefatigable dean, Dr. Fair, who has appointed as his assistant one of the deacons ordered a few weeks ago, Mr. Moore.

Easter Day in the See City

In spite of snow and storm, the congregations and offerings were very large, the number of communicants at the early services notably so. Several parishes where current expenses had run into arrears, cleared them all off, and left the finances in good shape. At the cathedral the offerings were $1,500; All Saints', $500; St. John's, $450; St. Barnabas', $150; St. Andrew's, $100; the other churches did as well in proportion to their means. At St. Andrew's a new altar, presented by the Rev. L. T. Wattson, was used for the first time on Easter Day. Preparations are being made for repainting the church and parish house.

St. John's, Omaha

The church has been greatly improved: the west end has been rebuilt, six handsome memorial windows placed in the new portion of the building, the interior redecorated throughout, and the exterior of church, clergy house, and parish house repainted; all the changes and repairs have been done without leaving any debt. Suburban missions at Florence and Papillion, under the charge of the Rev. W. S. Howard, of St. John's, who has for his assistant, the Rev. Mr. Taylor, recently ordered deacon, are making good progress. The Celebrations are especially well attended. All indebtedness for the extensive repairs and adornments of the church at Papillion executed in the fall, has been discharged.

Holy Trinity, Lincoln

Every branch of the work is increasing in numbers and interest, under the Rev. F. W. Eason, rector. The church was well filled with devout worshippers at the Three Hours, on Good Friday. Many were present at the early Celebration, Easter, and the offering of nearly $1,000 was the largest in many years.

California

William Ford Nichols, D.D., Bishop

Dr. Wakefield, in consequence of impaired health, has resigned Trinity parish, San Jose, Cal., after a rectorship of 15 years. The Doctor intends spending a year in travel and rest. He has had but two parishes in 44 years; the former, St. Paul's, Richmond, Ind., he was rector of for 29 years.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. Frank Paradise read an able paper on Bishop Williams before the Monday clerics, April 17th.

St. Andrew's church, Wellesley, at Easter, received an offering of over $3,000 for a rectory.

The Woman's Guild have raised $60 for the parish of St. Paul's, Hopkinton.

A new altar, designed by Cram, Goodhue & Ferguson, architects, of Boston, has been placed in St. Luke's church, Hudson. Archdeacon Van Buren visited the parish, April 18th, and held a devotional service.

The 75th anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of St. Anne's, Lowell, the Rev. A. St. John Chambre, rector, will be celebrated on Whitsun Day, and the two days following.

Gifts to Various Parishes

Mr. W. H. Lincoln has given 4,000 to St. Mary's church, East Boston, for a parish house. The parish of St. Andrew, Hanover, has received a gift from the widow of E. L. Sylvester of $1,000, which will be added to the endowment fund. A beautiful set of altar linen has been presented to St. Stephen's mission, Westborough. A beautiful stained glass memorial window was recently unveiled in the church of the Good Shepherd, Cortes st., Boston. It is the gift of Dr. William A. Rolfe, in memory of his uncle, John Polle Rolfe, and represents Christ in the garden of Gethsemane.

Rectory for St. John's, East Boston.

There was a happy gathering of the parishioners of St. John's church, April 19th, when the Bishop formally presented to the parish the gift of a rectory from Mrs. C. H. Taggard. It is located at 115 Tremont st., and is a large and commodious house. The Rev. W. D. Roberts, the rector of the parish, thanked the giver, and spoke of the untiring efforts of his people for the completion of the new church. A gift from the choir boys was presented to the curate, the Rev. E. J. Dennen, at the same time.

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D.D., Bishop

Bishop's Visit to Devils Lake

From Maundy Thursday until Easter Tuesday, Bishop Edsall was the guest of the Rev. C. Turner. The Bishop preached on Thursday evening, and on Good Friday conducted the Three Hours' service, his addresses on this occasion, and at Evening Prayer, being most helpful. Easter Day, Bishop Edsall delivered sermons both in the morning and evening, and addressed the Sunday school children in the afternoon. The offerings, including the pyramids, exceeded $140. At the morning service, the Bishop confirmed seven persons who, with 41 other communicants, received their first Communion. On Easter Monday evening, a reception was tendered him at Masonic Hall. Addresses of welcome were made, to which the Bishop responded. The church of the Advent is a beautiful stone structure, built during the administration of Bishop Walker. Additional pews have recently been added, thus completing the seating accommodation. The roof of the church has recently been oiled and varnished, the walls have been skillfully decorated by a member of the Church, and electric lights have been supplied both in church and rectory. The property is out of debt, the rector's salary is paid up, and the building and furniture are covered by insurance. There is a steady increase in church and Sunday school attendance. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Under the administration of the Rev. C. Turner, its spiritual growth is developing constantly.

Indiana

John Hazen White, D.D., Bishop

Three members of St. Alban's deaf-mute mission, Indianapolis, received the rite of Confirmation at the hands of Bishop Tuttle, at Christ church, April 15th. The general missionary, the Rev. A. W. Mann, interpreted and addressed the candidates.

Mrs. Katherine Truesdell, one of the oldest members of St. Paul's church, La Porte, passed away April 7th. She was largely instrumental in securing the erection of the new edifice recently erected for that parish, and will be much missed. The funeral service was conducted by Bishop White and the Rev. T. B. Barlow.

Western Michigan

George De Normandie Gillespie, D.D., Bishop
Semi-Annual Missionary Meeting

The 50th of these diocesan meetings assembled in St. Paul's church, Muskegon, April 11th, and was opened with a hearty service, led by the vested choir. The various parochial societies of the Church were considered. "The Girls' Friendly Society" was presented by St. Mark's, Grand Rapids; the Woman's Auxiliary was the subject of a paper furnished by St. Mark's, Coldwater and a paper from St. John's, Grand Haven, spoke of the good work done by the Daughters of the King. After Morning Prayer, on Wednesday, a paper was read on "Methods of Church support," and duly discussed. Bishop Gillespie was celebrant at 10:30 o'clock, and the Rev. T. H. Cuthbert preached the sermon ad clerum. In the afternoon, "Doctrinal preaching," was the title of an admirable paper, presented by the Rev. John Sword. "Life at Akeley Institute," by one of the pupils, showed the daily life of work and pleasure of a happy school girl. The afternoon closed with an address to the children by the Rev. M. S. Woodruff. Topics of interest for the evening session were as follows: "The education of the deaf," Miss Titus; "Church observation abroad," C. R. Wilkes; "The missionary jurisdictions," the Rev. Wm. Lucas. These all elicited discussion. The paper read by the Rev. C. T. Stout, entitled "How to make the Church influential in the community," was filled with good suggestions. After a visit to the high school, and the Hackley Manual Training School, the clergy gathered in the chapel to listen to words of counsel from the Bishop. His subject was "Prayer." Resolutions were passed congratulating the Bishop on the provision made for the clergy, in the Semi-Annals, during the past 25 years; congratulating the rector of St. Paul's on having the parish church free of debt, and thanking the parishoners for their generous hospitality.

West Missouri

E. R. Atwill, D.D., Bishop

St. George's Church, Kansas City

A very blessed and helpful Lent has been spent by this parish, and it is to be largely attributed to the eight days' Mission, preached by the Rev. John Molineux, immediately before the commencement of the solemn season. Although Kansas City was visited with the coldest weather in 50 years during the Mission, 26 below zero, the attendance, all things considered, was marvelous. During Lent a daily Eucharist was maintained by the rector, the Rev. P. Gavan Duffy, with an encouraging attendance. On Palm Sunday palms were blessed and distributed at the mid-day Eucharist, and a procession followed. On Good Friday, services were held from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M., with short intervals between. In addition to the Three Hours, Mr. Duffy preached the Way of the Cross, at night, which attracted a large crowd of people. There were three Celebrations on Easter Day; the number of Communions at the early services were large. Mozart's "Seventh Mass" was splendidly rendered by an excellent choir. Since the advent of the present rector, St. George's has seen great changes and progress in the direction of ritual. Altar lights, Eucharistic and vesper, have been given to the church, and vestments, wafer bread, mixed chalice, eastward position, and processional cross introduced; a new organ has been bought; $300 has been relinquished from the Missionary Board, and the parish made self-supporting. Each year shows an increase in the income of the church.

Southern Ohio

Thomas A. Jaggard, D.D., Bishop
Boyd Vincent, D.D., Bishop Coadjutor

A farewell dinner was given to the Rev. F. W. Baker, D. D., on the evening of April 19th, at the Grand Hotel, Cincinnati, under the auspices of the Church Club. Dr. Baker is soon to remove to New Haven, Conn., having accepted the rectorship of Trinity church of that city. It was a very representative gathering of over 70 that assembled to wish him farewell.

Church of the Good Shepherd, Columbus

Although the Rev. W. Bedford-Jones has only been rector a few months, the good work he has done is already manifest, as was shown by 235 communing on Easter Day, which was at least 100 more than ever communed before on one day. The pledges for the support of the parish have increased $400 per year. The offering on Easter was $380, no amount being given by any one person of more than $10.

A Cathedral for Bishop Vincent

On Sunday, April 9th, Bishop Vincent was tendered the use and occupancy of St. Paul's church, Cincinnati, for cathedral purposes, and accepted the same, and inducted the Rev. Frank Woods Baker, D. D., into the office of Dean. The Bishop preached on the subject of "The place of the cathedral in American Church life," showing first of all that it is the bishop's church, and stands in the community as the visible expression of his office. At the expiration of six months the sittings will all be made free. A generous friend of the diocese has already pledged $5,000 a year for the cathedral work. The parish has an endowment of $85,000, which yields $2,500 a year. Heretofore the income from other sources has been about $6,000, so the new cathedral will start off with an income of at least $13,000 a year. Before the close of the service, Bishop Vincent confirmed a class of 21, presented by the Rev. F. W. Baker, D. D.

Christ Church, Cincinnati

The offering on Easter was $11,760. This amount will be used toward the erection of a parish house, to cost about $20,000. On Sunday, April 16th, the rector, the Rev. A. W. Stein, presented a class of 32, which was confirmed by the Rt. Rev. Robert A. Gibson, D. D., of Virginia, who was the former rector of Christ church.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. W. C. Clapp, rector of St. John's church, Toledo, was married April 12th, to Miss Charlotte Kern, at St. Andrew's church, West Philadelphia.

Easter in Toledo

Lent brought its usual frequent services, which, especially in Holy Week, showed an increase of interest in several parishes. At the noon-day services in Trinity church, the city clergy made 10-minute addresses. The Easter offerings were in round numbers as follows: Trinity received $2,500; St. Mark's, $1,000; Grace, $250; Calvary, $110; St. Paul's, $105; St. Andrew's, $100; St. John's, $120. Last year St. Paul's Easter collection was but $35.

The Rev. Alsop Leffingwell held his first service as rector of Trinity church on Easter Day. The music of this church has reached an unprecedented degree of excellence for this region. Stainer's "Crucifixion" drew large congregations in Lent, especially on Good Friday evening.

The Woman's Auxillary

The spring quarterly meeting was held on April 5th in St. Paul's church, Toledo. The attendance was larger than usual, and reports from all the branches were for the year. Trinity, with 38 members and frequent meetings, gave in money and boxes, $284.79; the Daughters of Trinity, $18; the Junior branch, $10. St. Mark's, vacant for part of the winter, gave $50; Grace, $22; Calvary and St. Paul's, in work about $8; St. John's, $7. The missionary supply room in Trinity parish building, has received and sent out a goodly number of boxes and barrels. An able paper was read by Mrs. Jay Becker, on Indian missions.

Arkansas

Henry Niles Pierce, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Wm. M. Brown, D.D., Bishop-Coadjutor

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Brown visited Morrilton on the 4th inst., preached, and confirmed nine persons. On Easter Day he visited Fort Smith, and Van Buren, and preached at both places.

Little Rock Convocation

The spring meeting was held at Searcy on the 5th and 6th inst. It opened with Evening Prayer at 3 o'clock, Wednesday, the Rev. Caleb B. K. Weed preaching. At night, the Rev. R. W. Rhames preached. Thursday morning the Holy Communion was celebrated, and the Rev. Ivan M. Merlinojones preached. The report of the committee on by-laws was adopted with a few amendments, and the permanent organization of the convocation was effected. Thursday afternoon after Evening Prayer, the sacrament of Baptism was administered, the candidate being an adult. Thursday night, the Rev. Mr. Weed preached, and short but stirring addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Merlinojones, Rhames, and Dean Hobbs. The Church people at Searcy are taking steps to build a church edifice. They feel very grateful to Dean Hobbs for his faithful work and assistance, without which a church at Searcy would have been impossible. The members of the convocation, as well as the people of Searcy, learned with deep regret of the intended departure of the dean from the diocese. Judge Hicks, in an eloquent address, voiced the sentiment of the convocation and diocese in referring to the splendid work of the dean at Searcy and Little Rock. The convocation passed resolutions of sincere regret in losing his valuable services.

Easter at the Cathedral, Little Rock

The Very Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs officiated, together with the venerable Bishop of the diocese, the Rt. Rev. Henry Niles Pierce, D. D., LL. D. The congregations were large, many making a special effort to be present, as it was the last Easter for Dean Hobbs who after five years of faithful and successful work, has accepted a call from the diocese of Nebraska. The offerings were generous, one lady giving $200 as a token of her appreciation of the work accomplished by the dean. A large class was confirmed. Dean Hobbs has been closely identified with this diocese, and has accomplished much in the development and extension of the Church in the State.

Rhode Island

Thomas March Clark, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A new church is to be built in Centredale, and work on it has been begun. The Centredale mill management has given $1,000 towards the building fund.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop

MUSCATINE.—A farewell reception was held at the rectory on Tuesday, the 18th, when parishioners and other citizens visited the rector, Dr. Paget, and his sister, to bid them farewell on their departure for British Columbia. The long residence of both in the parish have made them a part of the community, and the regret at parting is mutual and deep. The parish of Revelstoke, B. C., to which Dr. Paget removes, is the home of his brother and family, and is a growing town.

The Bishop's Visit to Des Moines

From April 15-19th inclusive, Bishop Morrison made his primary visit to the churches of this city, all of which have been for eight months last past under the care of the Rev. Dr. J. Everist Cathell, rector of St. Paul's parish, the Rev. A. C. Stilson, honorary curate, and an efficient corps of lay-readers. On Saturday evening a public reception was given to the Bishop, attended by more than 600 persons, including Governor Shaw, the judges of the Supreme Court, other State officers and their wives, the pastors of leading Roman and Protestant congregations, etc. On Sunday, 16th, at St. Paul's church, Bishop Morrison preached a sermon of great impressiveness and power, and the rector presented a class of 47 persons for Confirmation. The Bishop also preached at Evensong. At 2 P. M., the Bishop visited St. Luke's church, in the northern section of the city, organized within the year, and addressed a Sunday school of 80 scholars, besides officers and teachers. On Tuesday evening Bishop Morrison preached at the church of the Good Shepherd, and confirmed a class of six persons. On other days of this visitation the Bishop met each of the six parochial societies of St. Paul's parish.

St. Paul's, Creston

April 14th, the Bishop visited this mission, Mr. F. A. Joseph, lay-reader in charge. In the afternoon the members and friends, as well as a number of the pastors in the city, gathered at an informal reception to pay their respects to the Bishop. The service at 7:30 P. M. was conducted by the Rev. Allen Judd, the general missionary, and the Rev. J. A. Russell. A class of six was confirmed. This mission, which has one of the prettiest mission churches in the diocese, is showing new activity, and the Bishop's visit has been productive of renewed interest and energy. It is hoped soon to place a priest in charge of the work here, as Creston is a railroad town of considerable size, a county seat, and well worth holding for the Church.

St. Paul's, Harlan

This parish continues its steady growth, under the acceptable ministrations of the Rev. G. Benson Hewetson. At the early service on Easter Day, a new chalice and paten, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Graves, were used for the first time. The Easter offering amounted to $92. On Wednesday, the 12th, the rector broke ground for the erection of a much-needed church edifice, which, when completed, will fittingly crown his faithful labors. A rectory will, some day in the not very distant future, be erected on the lot adjoining the church. During Lent the parish sustained a severe loss in the death of one of the choir mothers, Mrs. H. A. Dickinson. A rumor has gone abroad that Mr. Hewetson has resigned. This is not so, and it is the desire of the vestry and congregation that the extremely happy relations that have all along existed between himself and this community, where he is esteemed by all, should not be severed.

Kansas

Frank Rosebrook Millsbaugh, D.D., Bishop
Calvary Church, Yates Centre

On April 6th, Calvary church was consecrated by Bishop Millsbaugh. The sermon was preached by Dean Hill who, as archdeacon of Eastern Kansas, opened the mission in Yates Centre some three years ago. The small band of communicants forming the mission have been added to from time to time, and under the pastoral care of the Rev. Mr. Coote, succeeded in building one of the prettiest churches in the diocese. The altar and stained glass windows are of excellent workmanship, and add much to the appearance and Churchliness of the building. The convocation of Fort Scott spent two helpful days in Yates Centre, on April 6th and 7th, under the presidency of Dean Bennett. One interesting feature was the reading of a paper on Music, by the Rev. John Wilkinson, of Lebanon, Mo., who is a brother of the senior warden of Calvary church. The clergy who took part in the discussions were the Bishop, the dean, the Rev. Messrs. John Wilkinson, J. J. Purcell, and Martin Damer, Archdeacons Watkins and Crawford.

The mission in Cedarville is very enthusiastic in its new work, and has collected $350 towards building a church.

St. John's, Wichita, Debt Cleared

The Bishop recently visited this church on Sunday, when the congregation welcomed back the rector, the Rev. John F. Von Herrlich from the East, where he has been raising funds to pay off the debt. Bishop Millsbaugh preached both morning and evening. He congratulated the church on having the large debt finally cleared off, and he urged them to unite in the grand spiritual and moral work of the city of Wichita. The Bishop announced that the diocesan convention next September, would be held in St. John's church, at which time the beautiful church would be consecrated. It will soon have very material improvements, of which it stands in need. The largest number of people ever confirmed inside of a period of two years, have been confirmed in St. John's church.

Duluth

James Dow Morrison, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Emmanuel Church, Alexandria

For the first time in the history of the parish, daily Lenten services were maintained, and the average daily attendance was remarkable. Easter Day, a beautiful brass book rest for the altar was presented by Miss Flossie Brown and Miss May Ward, in loving memory of Ellen Venross who fell asleep January, 1899. A sedilia was also placed in the sanctuary, through the kindness of Mr. Frank Dent. The offerings were unusually large. April 12th, Bishop Morrison visited the parish for the third time during the past year, confirming 13 persons, all adults, making a total of 32 confirmed during the year. There were in the class persons from the Norwegian and German-Lutheran, Methodist, and Congregational Churches. After the evening service the Bishop made a short address to the Brotherhood chapter, expressing his pleasure in hearing of their good work. The rector, in behalf of the chapter, presented the Bishop with the gold badge of the order. The next morning the Bishop celebrated the Holy Eucharist, at which a goodly number were present, the majority of whom were men. The rector, the Rev. F. E. Alleyne, in behalf of the ladies of the parish, presented the Bishop with an elegant Trinity stole, beautifully embroidered, as a mark of their love and esteem. The Bishop, in a few well-chosen words, accepted the gift, and blessed the stole at the service following.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
April 8th was the 30th anniversary of Bishop Huntington's consecration to the episcopate. He refused any public celebration of the event, preferring that the money and energy should be devoted to other purposes which seem to him more worthy. One of the Syracuse dailies says: "The unostentatious and devout Christianity that the Bishop represents, no less than his untiring devotion and his splendid abilities, are what have won for him the permanent esteem of people of all the Churches and of no church." The Bishop is now 80 years old, but still performs the work of his diocese without assistance.

Calvary church, Utica, the Rev. E. Huntington Coley, rector, has recently paid off the mortgage upon its parish house, and the whole church property, covering a block on South st., and valued at $80,000, is free from debt.

South Carolina

Ellison Capers, D.D., Bishop
The decorations of Christ church, Greenville, on Easter Day were almost entirely memorial, and designed by the Daughters of the King. One of special notice was a crown of red japonicas, in memory of the late Rev. John Gass. Beautiful solos were rendered by members of the "Governor's Own Quartette," of the 4th New Jersey, encamped in the vicinity. The offertory amounted to $490.

The Columbia convocation was held in the church of the Redeemer, Orangeburg, April 11, 12, 13, 14. It opened on Tuesday, P. M., with Evening Prayer and sermon by the dean, the Rev. W. B. Gordon. Wednesday, 11 A. M., Morning Prayer and sermon, by the Rev. W. H. Barnwell, with celebration of Holy Communion; 1 P. M., business meeting; 8 P. M., Evening Prayer and sermon. Thursday, 10 A. Central Pennsylvania

Ethelbert Talbot, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The rector of St. Barnabas' free church, Reading, asked for $2,000 with which to pay off the parish debt, incurred chiefly in the purchase of the exceptionally good organ. Within a few weeks, nearly $2,690 has been subscribed. The Bishop confirmed 30, making 63 candidates in a little over a year.

The vestry of Christ cathedral are trying to cancel a deficit of about $4,500, and have issued an appeal to parishioners.

A special meeting of the Board of Missions of the diocese was held April 12th, in Wood chapel of Christ cathedral, Reading. The following were present: The Rt. Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of the diocese; J. P. Buxton, archdeacon of Reading; D. Webster Coxe, archdeacon, Scranton; W. R. Butler, Mauch Chunk; Guy E. Farquhar, Pottsville, and B. F. Myers, Harrisburg. The Board met for the consideration of the financial affairs of the diocesan missionary work and the deaf-mute work, under the charge of the Rev. J. M. Koehler. A lengthy report on the latter subject, showing that there are 1,700 deaf-mutes in the diocese, was read by Archdeacon Coxe, and referred to the new Board of Missions for action. The treasurer's report was read, and the secretary requested to urge upon all the clergy of the diocese the importance of sending in their offerings for diocesan missions to the treasurer as soon as possible.

Editorials and Contributions

THE meeting of the House of Bishops, which was called for June 15th, in Newport, R. I., has been changed to October, in St. Louis. Meetings of this body ought to be located with reference not only to a quorum, but with reference to centrality. The country is very large, and fifty-one of our eighty bishops in the United States reside west of the Allegheny Mountains. It does not seem quite in the line of equity to put the great burden and expense of travel upon them, and we think the Presiding Bishop may be trusted to prevent such unequal discrimination. He has shown such to be his purpose by the change which he has made, a change which indicates his intention to avoid the seriously mistaken policy of holding the meetings of the bishops at places inconvenient to the majority of his brethren.

The Mystery of Evil

MR. JOHN FISKE, in The Atlantic Monthly for April, discourses upon the subject of the "Mystery of Evil." He thinks this mystery, which has puzzled the sages of all time, can be solved along the line of the evolution philosophy. While there is nothing new in this, it is here presented with all that charm of style of which Mr. Fiske is so eminent a master. In a magazine of this stamp, moreover, which has a wide circulation among a cultivated, if not too learned a class of people, such an article is likely to have an effect upon many who are not readers of Herbert Spencer, while on the other hand, they would disdain to take their views from the cruder deliverances of the daily newspaper. The sum of the matter, according to Mr. Fiske, is this: "That moral evil is simply the characteristic of the lower state of living, as looked at from the higher state. Its existence is purely relative, yet it is profoundly real, and in a process of perpetual spiritual evolution, its presence in some hideous form throughout a long series of upward stages is indispensable." According to this, the sense of guilt, we suppose, is in reality nothing but the consciousness of the difference between the present condition or stage of spiritual existence and an indefinitely higher ideal toward which the race is tending. Thus, as a sense of guilt, this consciousness is misinterpreted.

WE are bound in such a case as this to have regard to the effect of such teaching upon the minds of people in general. Mr. Fiske considers that without the presence of evil, and of course the consciousness of it in one's self prompting to the struggle after higher and better things, progress would become impossible and evolution would come to a standstill. But what is it that impels, and always has impelled, men to this struggle? Is it not the consciousness of guilt, the ineradicable sense of responsibility, the conviction which cannot be quieted that somewhere and somehow each soul must give an account? Of course we know that these original instincts may be blunted or stifled. But it would be acknowledged that this is deterioration, not progress. How then if we say that these instinctive convictions, while they are real in themselves, have been universally misinterpreted? They have been put into concrete shape in a way which it cannot be denied has added infinitely to their force, but which, nevertheless, is not in accordance with the actual state of the case. What if we say to the soul laboring under the burden of sin: "This is unreal, there is no such burden; the truth is that you are facing the difference between what you yourself are, the point of progress to which you have attained, and the ideal of perfection to which the race of men is destined to attain at some time in the far future. What lies before you is to do your little part toward this great movement which is going on everywhere and all the time, toward a better state of the world in ages to come." There may be some choice souls who will be inspired to do a good work in the world under the influence of such a sentiment as this, though it is noticeable that even they are more concerned to promote the moral welfare of others than of themselves. But what is likely to be the effect of this teaching upon the mass of people?

WE are forced to conclude that the old distinction between exoteric and esoteric teaching is in the minds of those who hold such views of sin and responsibility. The old philosophers held that the forms and ideas of the popular religions were good for the common people, and ought to be maintained, but that in reality these popular cults concealed and misinterpreted ideas which only the higher class of minds could comprehend, and which it would be in the highest degree injurious to attempt to convey to the common herd. It is to be feared that if we should succeed in convincing the ordinary man that what he feels as positive guilt is only the consciousness of the difference between his present stage of advancement and the possibilities of attainment which await the human race, we might, indeed, relieve him of personal anxiety, but should in most cases fail to supply a motive sufficiently strong to spur him on to any determined effort for self-improvement. There is danger in this tampering with the profoundest instincts of human nature, and this endeavor to give them a philosophic explanation quite different from that which comes to men spontaneously, and which has been the basis of religion, lest we produce the very "stagnation, quiescence, unprogressiveness," which these instincts have in the past so powerfully antagonized.

IT is possible we have not fully understood the position of the article under consideration, for while the reasoning on the whole applies to the evolution of mankind from lower to higher stages of moral achievement, in the latter portion the writer glides by an unexplained transition from this point of view to that of the individual, and appears to refer to the progress of each soul in its upward striving, in such terms as seem to contemplate the idea of immortality and "the eternal joys of heaven." But we feel that there is something wanting of clearness in these passages. The evolution of the human race here on this earth from stage to stage is one thing. It is a process in which the individual only counts as contributing something to the sum of progress. Individuals pass away and are forgotten—they are but stepping stones over which their fellows press onward and upward. It is the race that lives on and is destined to attain unknown heights of perfection in the remote future. The Christian religion is not directly concerned with this. Undoubtedly religion contributes to this general progress, and that very powerfully; but her primary concern is not with the progress of the race toward some future goal in a world which, after all, is destined ultimately to perish. Her mission is not so much to aid in promoting the progress of the race here on earth, but rather the progress of individual souls from this world to another. She does not lose sight of the individual in the mass, but each soul in itself is the object of her solicitude through life and death, through resurrection and eternity. Great and inspiring to the imagination as the thought may be of the history of mankind from the savage to the civilized state, and onward to unknown degrees of high achievement in time to come, the ideas with which religion brings us face to face, are infinitely higher and more inspiring. Here the world itself, with all its history and the story of its progress, whether for better or for worse, becomes but a brief stage in an eternal order. At the same time, it is the individual human lives which become of more value than the corporate history, and each soul infinitely precious.

TWO further thoughts occur to us in this connection: Much is said of the processes of evolution and the glorious possibilities which are destined to be realized by our remote posterity. Some evolutionists would have us believe that the lofty plane men are destined to attain on this planet, constitutes the true realization of all that is real in the age-long dreams of heaven. Men shall be as angels, or even as gods. But there is in this same number of The Atlantic a scientific article which gives a rude shock to such an optimistic view of the earthly destinies of mankind. We hear the voice of the inexorable laws of the universe saying: "Thus far and no further." Professor See, treating of recent discoveries in connection with the solar system, utters the ominous warning that the time is coming when the sun will cease to give forth heat and light, and as a consequence all life upon the earth must perish, and the terrestrial globe will "thenceforth spin in its orbit as a rigid, lifeless mass." It is true, as the astronomer takes care to say, "this will not occur for several hundred thousand years, and perhaps not for several million." But a theory of human destiny such as shall inspire activity, and spur men on to high endeavor, ought to be adapted to the latest period of earth's history as well as to the earliest. The simple fact, according to these astronomical data, is this, that the progress of mankind, however great, is destined to come to an end. Either the results predicted will come as a catastrophe, as Professor See appears to think, in which case the human race will be swept away almost in a day, or they will come on gradually, under conditions which will reduce human life to a mere battle against conditions becoming ever harder and fiercer, a battle without hope. The wildest dreams of the control men may gain over the forces of nature, will hardly reach the point of imaging the possibility of contending against such odds. When it was seen that such a period was coming on, there would be no room left to rouse men to moral effort through the thought of higher progress for the race.

IF what we call the sense of sin is only the consciousness of the difference between the actual moral condition and a higher stage, an ideal state yet to be achieved, it would cease to have any significance. If such convictions constituted the only barrier against evil, the only incentive to good, their power would be gone, and the mind recoils from the contemplation of the moral condition of the latest generation of mankind. But our holy religion, interpreting the language of the human heart according to its own convictions, and offering remedies and supplying motives of action which are adapted to the state of the soul, as defined by its own instincts, makes the progress of the world or its retrogression, its perpetuity or its destruction, matters of comparative indifference. In the hardest and most hopeless conditions of earthly life, the serenity of the soul thus trained remains undisturbed, and its benevolence toward all fellow creatures would be only quickened by adversity, or even by the expectation of impending destruction. Such, at any rate, is the ideal which Christianity sets before us, and it has the transcendent advantage of remaining unshaken under all imaginable circumstances. This earth has not been thought of as a permanent abode, and, therefore, what may in the end become of it has only a secondary bearing on human destiny.

THE other thought which rises in the mind upon reading Mr. Fiske's interesting paper, is connected with the thesis that we could not have good without evil. We have no thought of denying the general validity of the reasoning by which this thesis is supported. We have never seen it maintained more forcibly than in this paper. We may admit that according to human experience we cannot know anything except by knowing its opposite. Yet we cannot but doubt whether this can be pressed so far as to insist that no particular virtue can exist in a person, unless he is familiar with the opposite vice, or that no one can be good in a certain respect unless he has been bad in that respect. But perhaps conclusions would not be pushed so far as that. Nevertheless, it seems necessary to the author's position that evil should be present, not simply as a possibility, but as an actual fact, that good and evil must exist, side by side. It seems to us that this touches a mysterious ground which cannot be fully explored. We cannot estimate goodness, as it exists in God, after this fashion. Mr. Fiske himself seems to contemplate a stage in evolution when evil shall cease to be. "In the process of evolution," he says, "evil must needs be present. But the nature of evolution also requires that it should be evanescent." The question naturally occurs, how in keeping with the previous reasoning, can goodness continue if evil ceases to exist? In answer to this, it is said that that which is worse than the best need no longer be positively bad. In the highest stages, then, there will continue to be something inferior to the best. But does not "the nature of evolution" require that this relation also should at length pass away?

THE further point is made, that while positive evil will be a thing of the past, the memory of it will abide, "in which the shadowed past shall serve as a background for the realized glory of the present." According to the original thesis that we cannot have good without evil, it would seem to follow that there must be a certain proportion, and thus that for the greatest good we must have the greatest evil. But the idea finally presented is, that when good has reached its highest development, evil will have lapsed into a mere memory. Again, if the memory that evil once existed is sufficient to secure the perpetuity of good, and to satisfy the requirement that good cannot exist without evil, why may not the idea of the possibility of evil perform the same office? This was present to our first parents in Eden, according to the narrative in Genesis, which Mr. Fiske so easily dismisses as a Persian legend. They are not represented to us as living in a state of unconscious innocence, hardly worthy of the name of goodness, because the very idea of evil is unknown, but as in a state of probation, emphasized by the existence of a positive rule. Under such circumstances, to maintain goodness becomes a matter of effort. There is a task to be performed. The possibility of evil is present. It would seem, then, that life under such conditions possesses the requisites for a moral character in at least as high a degree as that in which evil has become merely a dim reminiscence of the past. On the whole, we are not convinced that the plain, straightforward teachings of the Christian Faith are yet obsolete. The mystery of evil remains a mystery still, and no good can come to human souls from the denial, in whatever attractive forms, that sin is sin, and that the burden of guilt upon the conscience of the sinner is a real burden.

Father Austin and His Teachings--XVII.

BY THE RT. REV. DR. McLAREN,
BISHOP OF CHICAGO

(Copyright, 1899.)

IT was a fateful day, that never-to-be-forgotten day, when the Merwyn Block was burned, and three brave lads of the Fire Department lost their lives. They were fighting the flames from the roof of an adjoining building, a two-story structure, when the entire west wall of the block fell and buried them. Not one escaped. Two of them left wives and children, and one was the sole support of an aged mother. It took place on a Friday, and on the following Lord's Day Father Austin appealed for help to aid the bereaved households.

On the alms bason was a crisp new $100 note, fresh from Washington, enclosed in an envelope with the card of a parishioner.

By the next morning's delivery, the donor received a letter from Father Austin, returning the bill and saying: "Dear Martene, you know why I cannot accept this."

It is rather unusual for clergymen to refuse means to help them in "charity's sweet uses never ceasing." But in this instance it was wisely done; to demonstrate which it will be necessary to give some account of a conversation which took place about a fortnight before the fire between this parishioner and his rector. They met one afternoon on the smooth green top of a hill, to which the name of "The Dome" had been given, because of its symmetrical shape, its rise of sixty feet above the river, and its rounded summit.

John Martene was a man of forty, rich by inheritance, with a charming wife, four interesting children, a beautiful home, in which good taste vied successfully with a tendency to show and luxury. The home was not magnificently palatial, simply because they had quite as large a supply of sense as of dollars. It was almost a happy home. The madame and her children were happy enough, but John Martene did not fully share their content. The truth is, he was surfeited with success, and pleasures palled upon his appetite. He not only had means, but he had no anxiety about the care of them, nor did the risk of loss keep him awake of nights, for his investments were most secure. If his lot seemed enviable in the eyes of men, it was to him as the crater of Vesuvius was to Lord Dundreary, "there's nothing in it!"

Which wholly unreasonable state of mind was the theme of their conversation as they sat on the summit of the Dome and watched the steamers and keel-boats go by, far below them.

Father Austin called attention to the keel-boats which could go one way only, and that was the way of the river's current. "You, John, are nothing but a keel-boat. You can do nothing but float along on the bosom of your prosperity, and it is not any wonder that your pulse beats slow and your strength is sapped by ennui. There is no stern demand of necessity to compel you to exert yourself, and so you have surrendered to a passive existence, and the things that please you for a moment soon pall, and you get wretched on that which, better distributed, would make three-score men happy. The fact is, as I honestly believe, if I had one cent for every one of your dollars, I could supply the wants of more than that many score of my fellow-men, and I do not think you will ever pass out of your blues and become a happy man until you make it a part of your business to make others happy by supplying their wants."

"How can you say that, Father? Have I not given you hundreds of dollars for your charities? Have you ever called for help and I have not responded? Why, it is only the other day that I remitted a cheque for $550 for your orphanage. And yet you chide me as though I had shut you off with a growl and a five dollar bill, as old ——— did!"

"More than a thousand thanks for the more than a thousand dollars you have given me since last summer, my dear John, and I wish (here the parson's voice began to tremble), I wish that you could have seen with your eyes, as I have with mine, the good you have done through my agency. I am without words to tell of the joy of my heart when, for example, I was able, by your generosity, to move that afflicted family of Hugues out of the hovel where two of them died of typhoid, and put them in a clean little flat, and pay the rent till H. himself found work, which he did as soon as the two other sick children began to mend. I never knew before there was so much room for joy in this calm old heart of mine, and I must say that nothing makes me more happy than my personal work among the needy. There are many things I could give up, but I do want to stand by my poor until all their wants are supplied."

"What do I hear you say? 'Till all their wants are supplied?" Why, that would be the greatest possible misfortune! Do you not see that such is my sad fate? I have not a want that is unsupplied, not a desire unsatisfied, not a whim dishonored, and I am the most unhappy of mortals."

"I stand corrected, John. Your point is well taken. You want nothing, and therefore you are bored, and blase, and as weary of life as Faust. You remind me of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia, who had your complaint. The symptoms were identical. He bewailed the breaking of the day, because it put an end to unconscious sleep. He longed to have the days again seem as short as in his childhood, those halcyon days when everything interested him. He had all that heart could desire, but had no heart to enjoy them. Martene, you are another Rasselas."

"I have not read the story. Tell me, did he find relief from his malady?"

"His aged teacher said to him that if he had known the miseries of the world he would have known how to value his present state. To this the prince quickly replied that, if the sight of the miseries of the world would give him happiness, he longed to see them. And I think, my good Rasselas of the New World, that this is precisely the antidote which you need to swallow in large doses. No more cheques, but a new era of personal ministration to God's beloved poor and sick and needy children. Go take up their burdens with those soft, idle hands of yours, and minister to their wants, making those wants your own, and you shall no longer have reason to play the part of the melancholy Dane, and no longer bemoan your fate because you have not a want unsupplied. Adopt their wants, call them your own, feel pain with their pains, and poverty because they are poor, and my word for it, the iron ingots of ennui that now bend you to the dust will be transformed into wings by which you may soar into the presence of Him who is infinitely happy."

"Upon my word, this looks reasonable, and I think I will test this method of cure. There is just one difficulty. It may sound cowardly to you; indeed, I think it is cowardly, but I am perfectly certain that my friends in the directors' room of the Tenth National will laugh at me if I take to the slums. They all agree that the only way for a gentleman to go to those parts is by cheque."

"Then am I to infer that your rector is not a gentleman?"

"No, no! I do not mean that. But——"

"But you mean that you need just a little more courage to do your manly duty in the face of these imagined sneers of your fellow-millionaires?"

"Well, anything to get rid of this frightful feeling that there are no lemons left to squeeze—this deadliness in my heart which tells me there is nothing in life worth living for."

"God help you, John; but I must leave you, for it is four o'clock, and I have three sick calls to make, and there is poor old John Thompson paralyzed and ready to die—I must see him first. Martene, what would you say if—if I—if I should ask you to go with me to the house of your old gardener?"

"I?—I? Oh, I could not do him any good. He is well cared for in your hands."

"But perhaps the visit might do you some good."

"Well, I scarcely agree to that. It's getting late, and I ought to be going home.

But I'll think over what you have said to me to-day."

Nothing more was heard from Martene. Day after day passed, and Father Austin trembled, although he did not lose hope. Then came the fateful day of the fire, and the Sunday appeal, and the $100 cheque on the Tenth National from John Martene. It was Father Austine's opportunity. He returned it by the next mail.

And now I have come to the last chapter of my story.

Before the week was out, John Martene walked to the rectory with a firm step and entered the reception-room. Half an hour passed, and then the priest and the parish-ioner came out and went directly to John Thompson's house, where they gave and got blessings suited to the needs of all three. Then they saw the sad old woman whose only son was killed at the fire, and she a widow. They left much to make her joyful and hopeful, and they took away more than they left. Nor did they forget the families of the other firemen. Martene told his wife the trip cost him $100 in groceries, but he got $1,000 worth of pleasure out of it. A few days afterwards, they went to the slummy district of the city. It was the first, but not the last, visit to that odorous region, of the person John Martene. He had often been there by cheque, by charity organizations, and by paid agents, but to-day, and always after, he was there in person. And the person who had not a want unsupplied was transformed into one who had a thousand wants. Within a few weeks he was sick, he was out of work, he was hurt on the railroad, he lost a child by croup, he was in prison, he had "roomatiz" and "neurology," and ever so many other diseases, and he had no one who would sit down and let him tell the long story of all his trials and tribulations.

But the directors of the Tenth National did not laugh, for they saw that the person was also transformed into a bright, cheery, delightful man whose ever-smiling face was a joy to see, and whose happiness was a blessed contagion. They say, too, that the home where Mrs. Martene presided so graciously was transformed in like manner, and glowed with the light and warmth of love as never before. It reminded one of a mansion whose every window is brightly illuminated, casting radiance on the cold snows of the wintry night without.

As for Father Austin, one morning after the early Eucharist, he was seen to put his head on the table in the sacristy and tremble with emotion. It was also seen that he was weeping. An altar boy went to him and said: "Father, has something happened to you?"

"Yes, my boy, but nothing to be sorry for!"

The English Church Missionary Society

THE centenary of the English Church Missionary Society marks an era in Protestant foreign missions. It was on the 12th of April, 1799, that sixteen Evangelical clergy met at the Castle and Falcon in Aldersgate street, London, and founded what was at first called "The Society for Missions to Africa and the East"; a designation which was changed in 1812 to its present form, "The Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East."

Among the sixteen ministers who originated this great missionary society, was John Newton, the author of the well-known hymn, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds". Thomas Scott, the commentator, and John Venn, the author of the "Whole Duty of Man." The first secretary was Josiah Pratt whose son afterwards became Archdeacon of Calcutta. Among other active promoters of the scheme were Charles Simeon, of Cambridge, William Wilberforce, the emancipator of the slave, and Edward Bickersteth father of the present Bishop of Exeter.

The plan for the conversion of the heathen was submitted to the Archdeacon of Canterbury and two other bishops, but no answer was returned from any of them for more than a year, and the whole project was regarded with suspicion. At length Mr. Wilberforce wrote to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and reported that "his Grace had expressed himself in as favorable a way as could be well expected!" Fifteen years elapsed before the society received any Episcopal sanction, and it was not until the year 1841 that the Archbishop of Canterbury allowed his name to stand as its vice patron.

The most serious obstacle to the early progress of the society was the difficulty of obtaining missionaries, and at the end of the third year the committee felt themselves obliged to look to Protestant Germany for agents, and to employ ministers of the Lutheran Church. It was not until the year 1815, that the first two English clergymen went out as ordained missionaries.

Thus, under the most unfavorable conditions, this society began its noble work. It now encircles the globe with its missionaries. In Western and Eastern Africa, Central Africa, Persia, India, Japan, China, New Zealand, and among the North-west American Indians, as well as among the Jews of the Holy Land, and the Arabs of the Soudan, its missionaries preach Christ. Its income is more than a million dollars a year. Its English clergy number very nearly four hundred, of whom a considerable portion are laboring at their own cost. Its native clergy exceed three hundred in number, whilst the total number of laborers supported by its funds are at least six thousand. Its converts may be numbered at a quarter million of souls. Its missionary work is now held in such good report that every archbishop and bishop of the English Church is found among its patrons and presidents. Its management has been conducted with such consummate ability as to be regarded as a perfect model of organization. Its publications, The Intelligencer and The Gleaner, have a very large circulation, and occupy a very high literary standard.

Although this society started with absolutely no episcopal countenance or support, it has now on its rolls as paid missionaries not fewer than 16 bishops—Tugwell, of Yoruba; the two native Bishops Phillips and Oluwole; Tucker, of Equatorial Africa; Stuart, of Persia; Hodges, of Travancore; Burdon, of Hong Kong; Moule, of Mid-China; Evington, of Japan; Williams and Hadfield, of New Zealand; Newnham, Young, Reeve, Bombas, and Ridley, of North-west America. There is probably no society or institution in the world which has taken its growth within the century which is now closing, which has established itself more thoroughly in the public confidence than the English Church Missionary Society.

At the first signs of awakening in Protestant Christendom, "The Society for the Promotion of the Gospel in New England" was established in 1649; the "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," in 1698, and the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts," in 1701; but none of these contemplated the conversion of the heathen. The honor of sending out the first Protestant missionaries to the heathen belongs to Frederick IV., of Denmark, under whose auspices Zeigenblag Plutscho and Swartz were eminent missionaries. In the meanwhile, the Moravians began their noble work in Greenland, and Eliot and Brainard labored with great devotion among the red Indians of America. In 1792 the Baptist Missionary Society was established, and in 1795 the London Missionary Society. The Wesleyan missionaries began earlier, but their society was not organized until 1817.

The establishment of the Church Missionary Society, however, was the first attempt to draw out the sympathies of the Church of England towards heathen lands, and now its vast missionary army is engaged in the work of evangelization among people of every clime and tongue. It has had on its rolls, Johnson, the Evangelist of the West African negro; Bishop Hannington who fell a martyr in Central Africa; Stewart who died a martyr's death in China; Selwyn, the Apostolic Bishop of New Zealand; Thomas Valpy French, the eminent Bishop of Lahore, and many other great names, "of whom the world was not worthy." Its first president was Admiral Lord Gambier, in 1810; its second, the Earl of Chichester, and its third and present president is Sir John H. Kennaway whose father was an eminent Indian civilian. The office of vice-patron is held by the Archbishop of Canterbury, that of patron being reserved for the Queen, or any member of the royal family who may accept the office. It is in this way that the society stands for a great lay organization, although every clergyman of the Church of England who subscribes the sum of half a guinea a year is a member of the society, and may vote at its public meetings. It is one of the principles of the society, "that a friendly intercourse shall be maintained with other Protestant societies engaged in the same benevolent design of propagating the Gospel of Jesus Christ," whilst its laws and regulations secure its loyalty to the order and discipline of the English Church.

Bound up with the history of this society for the last hundred years is the wonderful development of interest in the great Eastern world. When those sixteen clergymen sat in that famous old hostelry in Aldersgate street in 1799, how little did the religious or literary world know of those great Oriental systems of religion with which we are now fully acquainted: Confucianism, Taoism, Shintoism, and Buddhism. But missionary societies have brought us more closely in contact with Oriental thought, and whilst the Christianity of England, Germany, and America has given much to the Orient, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that Oriental thought has exercised very considerable influence on the religious opinions of the West. April 12th was a great day in London, celebrated by large meetings and religious services, but it has passed among us in America almost without notice.

Letters to the Editor

RELIGION IN NEW ENGLAND

To the Editor of The Living Church:

The Governor of New Hampshire has stirred the religious papers and the preachers at the East to a consideration of his Fast Day arraignment of "the decline of the Christian religion, particularly in our rural communities."

Zion's Herald, of April 12th, quotes from three Methodist pastors who sustain the Governor's statement, and then adds editorially, as chief among the causes, "the introduction of a large foreign element and the rivalry of Churches in an effort to magnify denominationalism."

A wall comes from The Watchman: "The Baptists of Boston are in danger of losing much they have gained during recent years. Three of our leading churches in the city are now pastorless," etc. And still they will go on defending the divisions of Christendom, and try to keep alive a half dozen sects in our country towns where one building would hold the entire Church-going population.

The Governor suggests that "union meetings be held, made up of all shades of belief." Possibly his words may open some blind or prejudiced minds to the results of sectarianism.

That is a sad picture of the home of the Puritans: "There are towns where no church bell sends forth its solemn call from January to January; there are villages where children grow to manhood unchristened; there are communities where the dead are laid away without the benison of the name of Christ, and where marriages are solemnized only by justices of the peace."

THE ENVELOPE SYSTEM

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Every good thing has its drawback. So has "the envelope system." During my ministry there has nothing met my eyes so unlovely as offertory plates piled high with envelopes, with only here and there a lone nickel striving to appear. What a temptation to use the envelope as an offering from Sunday to Sunday does the envelope system supply! In my zeal, I said one day: "Away with the envelopes! They are not an offering to God, nor their contents. They are the weekly payment for spiritual nourishment (i. e., warmth, light, music, reading, praying, preaching, and sacraments). They prevent many from making an offering to God. I will not permit my congregation to remain without this privilege. I will provide a capacious box at the entrance to the church for the reception of the envelopes, and give the people a clean opportunity to do their duty." I sprang my scheme upon the members of the vestry at the next vestry meeting. They looked doubtful, every man of them, and I fancy they pitied their zealous rector. However, being men of parts, and having learnt long ago to respect him, they unanimously agreed to follow their rector's leading. A box was prepared (a very attractive box, of strict ecclesiastical appearance), nailed to a pillar, the matter explained to the congregation (who took to it like a duck to water), and what has happened? We now have offerings at our services, and the offerings have increased more than fourfold by this one means (simple enough as it is). Brethren, try the scheme. It will work.

St. Mark's Church, Cleveland, Ohio.

Personal Mention

The Rev. A. Sprague Ashley has resigned the rectorship of All Saints' memorial church, Meriden, Conn. and has accepted the curacy of St. Peter's church, Albany, N. Y. Address 9 High st.

The Rev. H. C. Goodman is in charge of the parish of St. John's, Dubuque, Iowa, as locum tenens.

The Rev. E. S. Hinks, with his wife, sailed the 15th of April, for a two months' tour in Europe.

The address of the Rev. C. H. Kidder is now 512 Summerfield ave., Asbury Park, N. J.

The residence of the Rt. Rev. Dr. McLaren and his family has been changed from Highland Park to Chicago, 1825 Roscoe st. This will be their fifth change during his episcopate. The Bishop's office for business will continue to be at 510 Masonic Temple.

The Rev. E. C. Paget, D.D., who has for eleven and a half years been rector of Trinity parish, Muscatine, Iowa, has accepted the parish of St. Peter, Revelstoke, B. C., and will take up the work there in May.

The Rev. Wyllys Rede, D. D., has not accepted the archdeaconry of Savannah, as was recently reported, but remains in Atlanta.

The Rev. Edward Riggs, vicar of Christ church chapel, Philadelphia, has resigned, on account of ill-health.

The Rev. Jos. H. Spearing succeeds the Rev. Dr. Dalzell as rector of St. Mark's church, Shreveport, La. Address accordingly.

The Rev. John A. Staunton, Jr., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Peter's church, Springfield, Mass.

The Rev. Wm. B. Thorn, formerly rector of Grace church, Menomonie, Wis., has accepted a unanimous call from the vestry of St. Mary's church, Napa, Cal., and will enter upon his duties on the feast of SS. Philip and James.

The Rev. S. L. Tyson's permanent address in Oxford, England, is No. 8 Norham Gardens. Address all letters accordingly.

To Correspondents

KING JAMES.—The Gospel, from St. John vi: 37-40, read at the reinterment of the remains of Bishop Claggett, as given in the "Peace Cross Book," is not from any version with which we are familiar. The construction is somewhat unusual; the word "he," for example, would be difficult to parse. The selection on the whole closely resembles the Gospel for a funeral in the First Prayer Book of Edward VI., which contains this particular blunder; but in at least one other instance it disagrees with that version as given in such printed copies as we have at hand.

Official

THE Presiding Bishop directs me to inform the Church newspapers that the date of the consecration of the Rev. Mr. Funsten has been postponed, at his request. WM. CROSWELL DOANE, Assessor.
Albany, April 22, 1899

Married

LAROM—NASH.—On Tuesday, April 18, 1899, at St. Mary's church, Castleton, Staten Island, by the Rev. Thaddeus A. Snively and the rector of the parish, the Rev. Walter H. Larom, of Saranac Lake, N. Y., and Caroline L., daughter of the late Henry Nash, Esq., of Liverpool, England.

Died

HOOLEY.—Entered into life eternal, on the octave of Easter, April 9, 1899, at her home in Davenport, Ia., Elizabeth Poole, wife of Thomas Hooley, in the 75th year of her age.

"Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

FAULKNER.—Entered into Paradise, at Philadelphia, Pa., on Friday, April 21, 1899, John Spalding Falkner, only son of the Rev. Wm. Howard Falkner and Mary Spalding Falkner, and grandson of the Rev. John B. Falkner, D. D., and the late Rev. Henry Whitehouse Spalding, D. D., aged one month and twenty-two days.

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Acknowledgments

The Rev. A. W. Mann thankfully acknowledges the receipt of $45 from "Anonymous," towards the expenses of the Mid-Western Deaf-Mute Mission.

Appeals

(Legal title [for use in making wills]: THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.)

Domestic missions in seventeen missionary districts and forty-one home dioceses: missions among the colored people; missions among the Indians; foreign missions in China, Japan, Africa, Greece, and Haiti; support of the clergyman of this Church appointed to counsel and guide the presbyters and readers in Mexico.

Provision must be made for the salaries and traveling expenses of twenty-four bishops, and stipends of 1,700 missionary workers, besides the support of schools, orphanages, and hospitals. Contributions are, moreover, asked specifically for the salaries of workers and support of schools in Mexico. One thousand dollars per month is the estimate of such expenses.

Remittances should be made to MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer, 281 Fourth ave., New York. At present, please address communications to the REV. JOSHUA KIMBER, associate secretary.

WITH this issue THE LIVING CHURCH completes its twentieth year under the present management. It was a healthy infant of six months when it came into my hands from Drs. Harris and Fulton, May 1, 1879. The subscription price was then $3.00 a year, and the amount of reading was about one-half that which is now supplied at $2.00 a year. There was only one Church journal of national circulation at that time, and THE LIVING CHURCH had a fair field and made a good record of growth. In the early days there were few diocesan and parish papers, and the clergy were generally interested in the circulation of the weekly Church press. It was much easier to secure both subscribers and advertisements, during the eighties, than it has been since.

As to what the paper has done, or has tried to do, during these twenty years, perhaps we may let it speak for itself. The many letters of appreciation received are most encouraging. I trust it may fulfil the expectations of its readers, in the future. It is scarcely possible that I should live to announce the completion of another vicennial period, but as I am permitted to hold my "trick at the wheel" a while longer, I desire to thank all who have aided me or have kindly criticised my course, and to express the hope that the record of the past may show that THE LIVING CHURCH is deserving of the confidence of both clergy and laity. Without their co-operation "their labor is but lost" who seek to establish a Church paper.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

NORWEGIAN legislators propose that girls who do not know how to knit, sew, wash, and cook should be refused permission to marry. Daughters of wealthy men are not to be excepted.

FREEDOM of the press does not exist, to any great extent, in Germany. Professor Delbruck who fills the chair of history in the University of Berlin, has been reprimanded and fined five hundred marks for daring, some months ago, to write, in a scholarly journal which he edits, that the recent decree of the German government in expelling Danes from Schleswig-Holstein was a "disgraceful intolerance, unworthy of nineteenth century civilization, and opposed to all precedents of international law." The authorities, says The Congregationalist, hardly dared to remove him from his post or imprison him, but they have made him feel the iron heel of that incarnation of mediæval self-sufficiency who sits on the throne of the Hohenzollerns.

RECENT reports of Church services give us the following intelligent statements: "In many of the churches to-day the rite of Confirmation was administered to classes of catechisms, and services incident to the reception of new members were held." It is presumable that the reporter had in his mind an indefinite impression of the word "catechumens." In a report of a bishop's visitation, the local paper states that "there was an informal gathering, which afforded the Bishop the opportunity of meeting the members of his laity!"

VISITORS to Rome will appreciate what Arthur Symons says of it in Harper's Monthly:

Rome, properly apprehended, seems to shut one in, as with its own walls, upon the greatest moments of art, of history, of religion, of humanity. Every road does not lead to Rome, but every road in Rome leads to eternity. It is quietly prodigal of itself, like the air about one which is part of one's breath. In this large Rome one has room for one's self; within these walls one is shut in from others, and from what in one's self is the reflection of their image; one's energies are not torn into little ineffectual pieces, as they are in the rapid drawing this way and that of the daily life of all other great cities. One has time to discover that, while there are many interesting, and even intoxicating, things in the world, there are very few things of primary importance.

OF London, Mr. Symons says:

To will and to receive are, in London, simultaneous. There are too many people, too many books, too many museums, too many theatres; the spectacle of this feverish unslackening life is too absorbing. I cannot escape the newspapers, for even if I do not read them there is always some one to tell me what they have been saying of my own or my friend's last book. . . . And, above all, I have not time to live. Life scatters into waves all over the rocks, falling back broken and dispersed into the seething trouble of the ocean. Yesterday is to-day, and to-day is to-morrow, before I have been alone with myself for an hour.

THE German government has undertaken a remarkable experiment in taxation, in a bill compelling the large shops to contribute a larger proportion than the small ones to Germany's revenue. It divides the branches into five groups, food and drugs, clothing, furniture, glass, and jewelry. Establishments trading in two or more of these groups, and employing more than twenty-five persons, come under the new law. Those engaged in two groups pay ten per cent. of their profits in taxation; three, fifteen per cent.; four, twenty per cent.; five, twenty-five per cent. Shops engaged in three groups and employing twenty-five persons, pay an annual tax of twenty marks for each one of the twenty-five, and ten marks for each additional employee. Stores with branch establishments will be treated as if all were under the same roof. Co-operative stores will not be taxed under the new law.

IN a review of the Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning in The Quarterly Review, there is the following fine bit of analysis: "Written out of the heart of a woman to the man she loved, the poet's soul informs them, raising love from 'an emotion to a motive,' changing it from a fire that burns to a light that illumines, subduing the wail of desire to the chant of endurance."

HERE also is a clever distinction between men and women poets:

Sincerity, as it is the prevailing characteristic of women's writings, is also its chief merit. More egotistical in their subject-matter than men, more concrete in the manner and substance of their thought, more impulsively emotional, it is rare to find a woman poet who has not some message to declare, some conviction to lay down or emotion to vent; some distinct thing to say, if not about the world she lives in, then about herself. The men minor poets of the day would seem to spend themselves chiefly in the effort to attain perfection of form. . . . The substance is thin, the thought conventional, and there is little suggestive stirring, alive, behind the dainty utterance, the carefully modeled form.

THE late Henry Reeve, for many years leader-writer of the London Times, was dining one night at a house where the other guests included Macaulay and Sydney Smith. Macaulay was at that time laying society waste with his waterspouts of talk. At length, dinner being over, Sydney Smith, Reeve, and a few others went away by themselves, and immediately got on the overpowering subject of Macaulay, "He confounds soliloquy and colloquy," said Reeve. "He is a book in breeches!" Smith declared. "The very worst feature in Macaulay's character is his appalling memory," said Reeve. "Aye, indeed," said Sydney Smith; "why, he could repeat the whole 'History of the Virtuous Blue-Coat Boy,' in three volumes, post 8vo, without a slip." After a pause, as if of consideration, the witty divine added: "He should take two tablespoonfuls of the waters of Lethe every morning to correct his retentive powers!"

The Mountain

BY FRANCIS HALLEY NEWTON

Ten thousand weary years have pressed,
Relentless, o'er my lofty crest,
And wind and rain and snow have driven
Against my mighty sides, and striven
To hurl me downward from my place—
In vain, for steadfast is my base.
With turret, battlement, and tower,
A citadel against Time's power,
I stand eternal. Far below,
With noise and tumult, to and fro,
The petty tribes of mortals run,
As fleeting as the cloud and sun.

The azure arches of the sky
Rest lightly on my forehead high.
Twixt cliff and cliff adventurous trees,
Clinging, are shaken by the breeze;
My feet the fretful river laves,
Chafing and foaming as it raves
And rushes headlong to the sea.

And if the earth God's footstool be,
I am the carving, fashioned there
To make His handiwork more fair.

Days With the Sisters of St. Mary

BY ABBY STUART MARSH

II.

IT was my privilege, during the past holidays, to see the interior workings of that noble institution, St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children, in New York city. Commodiously housed by the gifts of loving friends, from a hundred to a hundred and twenty sick and suffering children, from the lower walks of life, are here being cared for, with all the skill of which medical science, with its perfect appliances can boast, and with all the tenderness which inspires the heart and makes gentle the hands that work from love for the Master. Children of all creeds and nationalities are here, the open sesame being that of needy suffering.

The wards, St. Mary's and St. Elizabeth's, for the larger and smaller girls; St. Christopher's and St. Raphael's, for the larger and smaller boys, and Holy Innocents, for the babes (they are seldom taken under two years of age) are ideal places for sick children. The pretty tiled floors, marble wainscoting, and white walls; the little white hospital cots, or cribs, each with its white covering, give an attractive air of sanitary perfection. With each ward is connected a quiet room, where a very sick child is placed. Wide windows at either end of the wards, with plants, or a globe of fish, give a bright aspect to the whole. A tiny rocking chair is beside each bed; wheel chairs are for those who need them; while braces and high-soled shoes seem not in the least to impede the motions or dampen the pleasure of these happy-faced children. It is seldom that a child does not regret leaving St. Mary's Hospital; and some of the little ones cling to the kind nurse or Sister, with cries of "mamma, mamma," when the time comes for them to leave. An instance was told me of a mother's not knowing her own child, so greatly had it improved while under the Sister's care. Sisters, nurses, and young ladies who can give an allotted time to the work, care for and amuse the children. Some of New York's finest talent, both in the surgical and the medical line, is freely given. Weekly clinics are here held, in both departments, before the students of Columbia College's medical department; and the little sufferers have every chance that skill, science, and nursing can give to counteract the evils of poor sanitation and heredity.

But to a more attractive side. On Christmas Eve, I had the pleasure of watching the distribution of gifts in St. Mary's ward, by a kind lady who had previously ascertained each girl's wishes. Every motherly little heart was gladdened by dolls with the daintiest belongings. Trunks for the tiny wardrobes, bureaus, beds, and tiny kitchens, with appropriate furniture, were piled upon the children's beds, or on the tables for those who were able to be dressed. Kind friends, in the name of Santa Claus, filled the stockings and remembered the children of every ward with a Christmas tree. One of the pleasantest features was the children's singing of carols. Early on Christmas morning, all who could, came into the hall and sang the sweet old English carols—boys who, many of them, before coming to the hospital, had heard little but the lowest street songs. Canon Knowles who talked to the boys of St. Christopher's ward at their Christmas celebration, complimented them very much upon their rendering of these old songs. One can hardly estimate the power for good of the lessons that come into the lives of these boys and girls, often from the streets, or the lowest haunts of the city. We know how tender the heart is in sickness; then imagine what, to these children, are the comforts and the care which they receive, the gentle, kindly voices which, perchance, they never hear elsewhere. In the babies' ward, God bless them, one dear little fellow, surfeited with happiness, fell asleep during the distribution of gifts.

It is pitiful indeed to see the patience of these tiny sufferers. One dear little fellow who was wasting away without any apparent disease, opened and closed long-fringed eyelids over the most beautiful brown eyes with evident content, while held in strong and comfortable arms; but the poor, emaciated little face frowned when it became necessary to lay him down, although his one treasure, the woolly dog, was hugged fast in his arms. When we remember how one sick baby oft claims the attention of a household, it seems almost a miracle how these little waifs are cared for in such numbers.

There is no limit, I believe, to their stay, simply till the attending physician pronounces the recovery complete. One bright little girl, Gladys, the daughter of a priest in Newfoundland, is about to leave after a stay of more than two years. In the meantime, all that is possible has been done for her complaint, hip disease, and she steps about very quickly on a high-soled shoe and a brace.

Many of the beds are endowed, or supported; for, indeed, what mother whom God has blessed with means, can visit this hospital and fail to leave a mark of her presence as she thinks of the rosy-cheeked children in her own nursery, or of the jewels that were lent her only for a season?

I must tell you of the appointments of the hospital, although one is tempted to linger with the children. The hospital, besides containing these wards, operating rooms, rooms for the Sisters and nurses, and ample reception rooms, has an exquisite little chapel where many memorial gifts find their appropriate place; as the altar, a fine window, a beautiful statue, and two or three choice oil paintings. Here the life of Sisters and nurses is crowned with the highest act of worship, and here the deeper life which shows itself in such beautiful deeds is forever fed; and here many of the children receive the sacrament of Holy Baptism, as one little white-veiled maiden who was led in after the early Celebration on Epiphany morning.

A few rare gems of art have been given to the hospital, and numerous pictures enliven the walls of the wards. "Our pictures represent the taste of our friends," said the Sister, in reply to my admiration; indeed, the atmosphere of the whole house, from the soft, devotional air of the chapel to that of the exquisitely kept wards, was that of simple and elegant refinement.

On Ninth avenue, is the Wilke's Dispensary. Here sick children are brought for examination, for treatment, for some operations, and here medicines are dispensed—by no means is this a small part of the good done under the hospital auspices. The building is admirably adapted for its purposes; rooms are provided where cases of possible contagion are secluded while waiting examination. Here is the autopsy room and the mortuary chapel. One can think more pleasantly of the tiny body resting in this spot than in the surroundings of its birth. Upstairs are rooms for resident physicians, when they become necessary, and for a resident priest.

No mention of the Sisterhood of St. Mary can be complete without the name of its venerated foundress, the Rev. Mother Harriet. Of few women can it be so truly said that "her works do follow her." Possessed of rare executive ability, she laid the foundation lines on bold and far-reaching planes, and it was granted to her to see every institution which I have named, save the Home for Mountain Girls, in Sewanee, which has been founded since her death, fairly started and successful. Able hands took the work at the close of her long and well-spent life; no part of which will suffer, if devotion and love can solve the many problems which the changing times bring to perplex. The numerous Orders which have arisen, and the eager calls for workers in new fields, should make more fervent the daily prayer, "Increase, O Lord, their numbers according to their needs," for we know that they are "in their several works, a great blessing to Thy lost and sick and sorrowful ones."

Banded to the Sisters by the tie of sweet sympathy and daily prayer, are associates, ladies living in the world, those whose paths have been so directed, by God's providence, that the full religious life is not for them. Those who have of this world's goods can aid in answering the daily prayer: "Turn the hearts of many to help them by prayer and alms, and grant that the spirit of self-devotion may deepen and widen in the Church, beautifying her," in our Saviour's sight.

In the little graveyard at Peekskill, rest the mortal remains of the Rev. Mother Harriet; the mound marked alone, as all others are, by the nameless wooden cross, while family love has claimed the right to place, in the centre of the enclosure, a monument, a granite cross, to the memory of her to whom the American Church owes so much.

Book Reviews and Notices

The Age of the Maccabees. With Special Reference to the Religious Literature of the Period. By A. W. Streane, D. D., Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. London and New York: Eyre & Spottiswoode; New York agents, E. & J. B. Young. Price, $2.50.

Strictly speaking, the period of the Maccabees covers about sixty years, from the revolt of Mattathias, B. C. 168, to the death of John Hyrcanus, B. C. 106. Dr. Streane, however, has wisely included the whole interval, from the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity to the accession of Herod the Great, B. C. 538 to B. C. 37. The first part of this period is treated by way of brief retrospect, while from the year 168 onward the narrative is more detailed. Our author nowhere approaches anything like eloquence, or even vividness, of style, even where the subject-matter might have inspired some enthusiasm, but he has succeeded in putting this vexed period of history into intelligible and not unattractive shape, thus making the path of the student somewhat easier. The book contains eighteen chapters, of which nine are devoted to the history, the remainder to the literature. The latter is the best feature of the work. The seventeenth chapter, on the Septuagint version of the Old Testament, gives the facts and the most trustworthy conclusions with great clearness and full appreciation of all that is involved. There is no longer much room for doubt that this translation was the work of various authors of different dates, and that it was accomplished by Hellenistic Jews to supply their own necessities. Three valuable appendices deal, the first, with the Pharisees; the second, with the succession of Jewish teachers, from Ezra to the destruction of the Temple by the Romans; the third, with the vexed subject of the date of the Book of Daniel. The last is a simple statement of the arguments on both sides, presented with studied impartiality. At the close the author gives his opinion that at the present stage of our knowledge it is not possible to attain positive proof. If such is the case, the presumption is still in favor of the conservative view.

The Martyrdom of an Empress. With portraits from photographs. New York: Harper & Bros. 1899. Price, $2.50.

This anonymous romance of real life is said to be written by one of the ladies of the Austrian court, an intimate friend of the august lady whose death "by an assassin's hand, in Geneva, thrilled the world." One wonders how so much could have been permitted to see the light of day. The whole story has material enough in it for a library of sensational adventure of the Ouida type. There is the youthful heroine, a young fawn in a forest, discovered by the coming prince. The story of Cinderella is reproduced at Posenhoffen castle. The nuptials take place. There is the bitter disillusioning of the young bride, the intrigues of court life are seen, until at last the Empress takes flight from all the incidental wrongs of her wedded life, and hies away to her palace in Algiers. Despite, however, the real tragedy in the narrative, one cannot but smile at much of the contents and style of the recital. In the most harrowing places, the lady writer stops the story to give us details of the costume in which the victim is arrayed. Again and again one is reminded of the reckless prodigality of Ouida. Another curious trait of the production is, that all the sins of the lords of creation are passed over in the most airy way possible, while from the dowager Empress down, all the real evil is ascribed to the meddlesomeness and wickedness of the women. It is a painful history, the story of a misplaced life; but the redeeming feature in it all is the heroism of the Empress in her declining years, her reconciliation with the Emperor, and their mutual dependence on each other. This is human, yes, divine! All the lurid romance of the Archduke Rudolph, and the horrors of the double death at Mayerling, are brought out in hints and coincidents, which the reader is expected to understand and put together. It forms one of the darkest pages in modern history. While one cannot but shudder at the awful scene on the borders of Lake Geneva, when the Italian anarchist cleft the heart of the ill-fated Empress, yet it would seem as if it all were the dramatic and fitting climax of a sad though exalted life.

Two Men of Mendip. By Walter Raymond. New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. 1899. Price, $1.25.

We have here a well-told tale of life in Somersetshire in the sombre days when a man was hanged for stealing a sheep, and the hatred of class for class was intensified by the gross injustice of the law. The story is a tragedy of country life. The characters are firmly drawn, from sturdy John Winterhead and thick-headed Solomon Moggridge to feather-brained Patty, John's daughter, whose sad fate must elicit all the sympathy that one can spare for a misled girl; as her honest father's sacrifice of himself to the demands of conscience and justice when he has avenged her and his own wrongs, will demand the noble sympathy which one cannot withhold from a strong man who suffers for his acts, under a fate as relentless as that of Oedipus.

Rachel. By Jane H. Findlater. New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. 1899. Price, $1.25.

This is a strong story, full of interest. The hero is a student for the ministry of the Kirk of Scotland, the incidents of whose life are, to some extent, if not entirely, modeled upon those of the founder of the Irvingite body, Edward Irving. Rachel, the heroine, is a character altogether attractive and lovable, in spite of some glaring faults—perhaps even because of them. She does not marry her hero, and the pathos of the love story is affecting; but to tell the tale even in outline would be unjust to the reader, as it is a simple tale, without much of a plot, and indeed a plot is not needed, for the simple tragedy of the story is sufficient without it.

The Conjure Woman. By Charles W. Chesnutt. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 1899. Price, $1.25.

Seven stories of negro superstitions, and memories of life "befo' de Wah," all held together by the connecting link of the adventures of a gentleman and his wife in their efforts to make a home in the "sunny South," give us telling pictures of slavery days, and evidently truthful delineations of the negro character. There is a great deal of the deeply tragic in much that is told us; told, too, without heat or prejudice, so that one sympathizes with the awful tangle resulting from those, happily, past and gone relations. These stories have also a rich store of genuine folk lore, told in the negro dialect, and glowing with the mysterious, the weird, and the inevitably comic, which is ever near at hand in the childlike souls of the dark race.

Lights and Shadows of American Life. By the Rev. A. C. Dixon, D.D. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.

Dr. Dixon has a pleasant, readable style and a sensible way of looking at the conditions of our various classes of society. The range of subjects treated of in this volume embraces "Our Homes," "Breadwinners," "Amusements," "Politics," "Cities," "Dangers," etc. While we cannot fully agree with the writer in all his opinions, we have found much that is suggestive in his book, and believe that it is a useful addition to the literature on America and its people.

UNDER the title, "The Warden," Henry A. Fairbairn, M.D., will publish, through Mr. Whittaker, a biographical sketch of his father who for many years was head of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., and was widely known in the Church as an author and educator.

THE latest volumes of the new issue of Sadler's Commentary that have come to hand, are the volume containing the Epistles to the Galatians, Ephesians, and Philippians, and that of The Revelation of St. John the Divine. With three more volumes, the whole series (of twelve) will be complete. It is not too much to say that it is the best commentary on the New Testament. It gives no uncertain sound on doctrinal questions, and is written from a Churchman's point of view. [Price, $1.50 per volume. Geo. Bell & Sons, London. CLOSED QUESTIONS.—In the realm of religion something is fixed, some teachings stay. It is not all a matter of varying forms, it is largely, also, an exhibition of agreeing and abiding faiths. Though our syntax and vocabulary are not precisely those in which an Augustine or a Clement wrote, the Christian world is thinking to-day by the same rules of logic as did the Fathers, and to a large extent the same thoughts. In other words, there has always been, and there is to day, a significant and extensive consensus of opinion as to the vital, structural truths of the Christian religion. It may be that they cannot note the evangelical unity who are not of it, who are outside it, since this sort of thing is spiritually discerned; it is doubtless the case that the varieties of minor interpretation seem very numerous and important to those who have an interest in setting Christianity, if possible, at war with itself, but to the candid student of historical Christianity, it will be perfectly apparent that certain great leading ideas have dominated the centuries, and commanded the devotion of countless multitudes which belong to the very structure of the Gospel, and are as continuous in history as the life of mankind itself.

The Advance (Congregationalist)

THE ANTI-CANTEEN LAW.—It must have required more than ordinary legal convolution to twist a law which endeavored to emphasize and fortify an absolute prohibition of liquor-selling, by providing that not only should officers no longer act as bar-tenders, as at present, but that no person of any description should sell liquor upon any military premises whatever—to twist this double-guarded prohibition into a permission to sell liquor. That this was the intent of the law, we know not only from its plain statements, which are perfectly clear to the unprejudiced mind; but from the statement of Dr. Crafts who drew the original provision for the law; by the remarks of Senator Hansbrough who endorsed it in the Senate, and by the entire debate upon the subject. We venture to say that a different interpretation never occurred to any one who had anything to do with passing it, until it was suggested by the Attorney-General. As is well-known, Secretary Alger was opposed to the liquor prohibition in the new law, and it is claimed that it was he who first suggested this interpretation. Religious bodies are protesting against this new process of nullification of law by opinion, and the agitation should be kept up until the law is enforced according to its spirit and intent.

The Household

The Queen's Glebe

BY FREDERICA EDMUNDS

CHAPTER X.

CAPTAIN Dalton whose bold blue eyes had turned momentarily from Evelyn's face, spoke: "Methinks your son and I have met in foreign parts, Mr. Underhill. He has told me much of the Queen's Glebe, which I thought not then to see, and of his fair kinswoman here."

"Where saw you my son?" inquired the clergyman, while Evelyn busied herself again with the tray.

"'Twas in London, at Lady Fortier's reception. She is sister to the Lord Bishop of —, a Scotch see. My lady can have much interest in your son's preferment."

"Griffith's work is here, when he sees fit to return to it," replied Mr. Underhill stiffly.

"He hath much excuse for delaying, honored sir. Lady Fortier who is a kinswoman of mine own," young Dalton stroked his fair mustache complacently, "hath a sister whom report saith hath enslaved Mr. Griffith Underhill."

Mr. Underhill's reply was forestalled by Evelyn: "Report? Ah, sir, mine ears are weary of reports in these days. Methinks they distance the little birds which are said to carry them. I doubt not but there will come a time when men shall think out some flying monster, which shall bring us news yet more speedily. The retreat of a Highland regiment will be reported before the last man shall have turned right about face."

The mirth of the officers over this sally was broken into by a sudden sound from the back of the house. It was a crash as of falling crockery. "The maid's sweetheart hath stolen a kiss to the damage of the china," suggested Captain Dalton, quite recovered from his momentary discomfiture.

"'Tis the dogs, no doubt," said Sir John.

"Perhaps Philo—" began Evelyn, "the preserve pots draw him as they do the bees."

But when Mr. Underhill, passing quickly into the next room, looked from the window, naught was to be seen but an uncertain figure skulking in the distance towards the herder's quarters. Could Karl have been filching sweets, or had there been some unknown eavesdropper present during the talk with the baronet.

A full, January moon looked down upon the valley of the Mohawk, making the deep snow-drifts heaped up about Johnson Hall to glitter with an icy whiteness. The fine oaks that stood guard before the entrance creaked and snapped under the snow which lay on their hardy boughs, while the tall poplars seemed to draw closer their stiffened limbs denied such covering. In strange contrast to the white desolation of the winter night, appeared the square-built house, thoroughly illuminated from the dormer-windowed roof to the open hallway, where the massive doors now swung wide on their huge hinges. Within, the lights flickered on checkered wainscoting and broad balustrade, while without they scattered their beams on icy-coated shrub and smoothly crusted snowbank. Two lesser buildings loomed up on either side of the central mansion, one dark, spectral, suggestive of unknown terrors, the other with portholes that gleamed with a fitful glow, like the light in dying eyes.

Within the hall was gathered an assembly not large, but sufficiently gay, for Sir John and Lady Johnson were entertaining their friends to-night by a dance in the block-house, formerly used as a storeroom, but recently put in a condition of defence. Among the company were Colonel Guy Johnson and his lady, Colonel Klaus with his wife, the nearest of kin to the present baronet, and many others of high military rank, or of county fame. There were also a few guests of Lady Johnson's, chiefly officers' wives and daughters, with grand toilettes and manners, and here, too, was Evelyn Darcy! For the baronet had himself urged the matter in person upon Mr. and Mrs. Underhill, and had gained their somewhat reluctant consent.

Evelyn herself, however, had betrayed a strong desire to attend this rare festivity. Perhaps she wished to show to Griffith, from whom little had been heard in these last months, that she too could play with edged tools, could handle fire, and not be singed. And so she had come under the escort of the party from Guy Park, and followed by Dutch Karl as her own special retainer. And now she was standing in the centre of the brilliantly lighted reception room, very complacent over her white damask silk petticoat, flowered with primroses; her pale blue bodice, and her wonderful satin slippers, stitched with gold thread. But after all, she did not know, until Captain Dalton told her, how bewitching looked her radiant eyes under the mass of curls piled high above her forehead and lightly powdered. And yet even then, down under the pale-blue bodice and a certain surface enjoyment, Evelyn's heart ached strangely for the sight of a bonnie face over the water. Well, she was playing Griffith at his own game, but would he ever know or care?

Across the spacious hall with its fine stairway, across the keeping room beyond, catch a glimpse of Sir William's study, now filled with gay cavaliers, Evelyn was led by Captain Dalton. Then carefully wrapped by her assiduous gallant, she was conducted over the bark pathway which surmounted the frozen earth works, to the lighted block-house. Within all was festive in the impromptu ballroom. Torches or flambeaux stuck in the walls contrasted with the clear light of candles in silver sconces, which were set about here and there. The portholes were now used as niches for bright blossomed plants, from Lady Johnson's boudoir, against backgrounds of evergreen boughs. Two or three oaken benches and chairs were disposed about the room, and a couple of regimental musicians were established in a corner, with fife and drum. A portrait of Sir William looked calmly down upon the incongruous scene, under which, with almost more lifeless rigidity, stood the influential Indian, Brant.

"Looks it not well?" queried young Dalton of his companion. "By my faith, I have seen less proper setting out in Lady Fortiers London house!"

Evelyn winced. "Aye," she responded, carelessly, "'tis well enough for the backwoods and the civilization of the valley."

Captain Dalton regarded her curiously. "You have spent much time in the large cities? Perchance, New York or Boston?" he inquired.

"I have seen New York but once," responded Evelyn, "and as I had just landed, methinks banquets and balls would have gone somewhat amiss. Of the entertainments of Boston I cannot speak either, but I have heard that they have had there a tea party."

The captain laughed. "By my faith," he cried, "you did not leave your wit behind, when you made that landing spoken of!"

Evelyn looked up gravely. His light words had given her a new cue.

"You stake much on your faith," she said. "These are the days to try it. I wonder if I and you and all this brave assembly here will be loyal to our Faith and to our king."

"You will, 'tis written in your eyes. As for me, I know naught else than loyalty; it is no virtue in me, and mayhap 'tis easier to fight with sword in hand than to maintain the Faith at home."

While talking, they had been slowly sauntering through the room. Now the music struck up, and the dancing began. The ball in all respects was much like one in our own day, though minuet and quadrille took the place of the modern waltz and polka. Evelyn enjoyed it all, though her better self was vexed at taking any pleasure in the sentimental flatteries of her companion. She honestly liked him better when he laid aside his affectations, and laughed with her in hearty good comradeship.

Hours passed and other partners sought her out, among them Walter Butler whose handsome, sinister face, first met in that June twilight at the ford, was now familiar to her. The company had been ushered to supper in the dining-room of the mansion, and had returned to the blockhouse, all but a few chosen spirits who still lingered over their wines. The torches burned dim in the low room, and their smell became offensive and rank in the air now heavy with the scent of wine and the perfume of the flowers. The noise of the revelers in the dining-room at times broke in upon the flagging efforts of the musicians. The feeble rays of dawn began to struggle in through the port-holes, and faces grew pallid and weary in the confused light. Evelyn was thoroughly tired of the whole scene, and could no longer find anything but contempt for Captain Dalton who had drunk somewhat heavily.

It was at this point—the hour of depression which comes before the day—that a loud and strange outcry startled the gay revelers.

"'Tis the war-whoop! Great God, have the Iroquois come down upon us?"

"A rebel plot! We shall all be massacred!"

Such were the outcries. Women shrieked, and fell fainting into their partner's arms. Evelyn's heart beat painfully, and in that brief moment of suspense she wished herself within the Queen's Glebe. There at least the household would meet death with prayer on their lips, not with shrieks and curses. Nearer came the dreadful sound. Indians in paint and feathers appeared on the very threshold.

Then Joseph Brant stepped quietly forward into the midst of the panic-stricken assembly, a grim smile on his heavy face. "My pale brothers need have no fear," he said. "The white men make a very bad war-whoop. They drink too much what my people call fire-water."

These few words had indeed the effect of restoring confidence, but even the unmasking of the false Indians could not bring back gaiety. Sir John himself seemed anxious to bring the revel to a close. His nerves too had been shaken by his over-hilarious guests.

Evelyn begged permission to return to the Glebe with Karl who was to start in the early morning. Lady Johnson demurred to this, but at last consented, herself attending while the young girl exchanged her ball dress for a riding habit.

Nothing Better than the Best.

Pillsbury's Best Flour is the standard. The claim often is made for other flours that they are as good as Pillsbury's Best, but never that they are better. You are told that it is dearer. That is not so. It may cost at times a little more per barrel, but a barrel of Pillsbury's Best will make more loaves of bread than will a barrel of other flour. Pillsbury's not only is the Best but also the Cheapest.

"Nay, child," she replied to Evelyn's remonstrances, "I am not sleepy. I have a gruesome feeling, as though this festivity had been a time of ill-omen. Belike the fictitious war-whoop hath shattered my nerves."

Presently she spoke again: "You favor not much your brother Griffith, though in truth you are not the less comely."

Evelyn colored. "He is not my brother," she began.

"Oh, aye, I remember, and I note your blushes. I have seen something of the young man before his going to foreign parts, and did never tire of looking at his winsome face. Methinks 'tis a pity the commandant should have spoiled his bargain, and taken him so soon from your side."

"His bargain, madame?"

"Aye, he has told me himself. A young man likes to confide something to an older woman, and mayhap Sir John's Madeira hath unloosed his tongue. But surely you know that he bargained to postpone his ordination?"

"No, madame, there you are wrong. The temptation has been put in his way, and he has refused it."

"Aye, to surrender altogether his ministry, but he hath agreed to wait a year, when Captain McKaye's arrival has made bargains unnecessary. Tut, child, do not look as if it were a Doctor Faustus' compact with Satan himself."

"There must be some mistake," said Evelyn gravely.

The baroness laid one hand soothingly on the girl's shoulder. With the other she pressed her own brow. "'Tis my bad memory," she said, "this anxiety about Sir John is weighing on me."

An hour later and Evelyn was on her way in the morning air. Never had it felt so delightful to her. Never had her horse's feet, now ringing on the frozen snow, borne her on a more welcome journey. She felt as if she had escaped from some unwholesome hot-house influence, and as she looked back at the closed shutters of the hall, behind which Dalton and his friends were sleeping off their night's potations, she smiled to think how she had given them the slip. Under Karl's escort she felt supremely independent.

But even as she rode toward the rising sun, Evelyn felt that one little shadow obscured the brightness of her day. What dreadful thing had Lady Johnson told her of Griffith? Could he indeed have made and then have boasted of such an unholy bargain? No, she would not, could not, believe it, and yet she could not drive the doubt from her own loyal heart. Was it this which she had seen in Captain McKaye's face when they had spoken of Griffith? Then she called up the picture of her lover as she had last seen him, handsome, winning, and a very genuine tenderness for her melting the brightness of his dark blue eyes. Captain McKaye? Alan? yes she would stake her life on the honor of either, but it was to Griffith that her heart went out in a rush of yearning affection. Tears sprang to her eyes, and a spasm contracted her throat. She broke into a little caroling song to relieve the pressure, and as suddenly stopped it. For riding rapidly behind her in her own direction was a solitary figure on horseback, whom she soon recognized as Sir John Johnson.

"You venture too much in riding with but one follower," he said. "'Tis well that I have received a message from the valley which demands my early attention. My people are to follow me as soon as they have rubbed the fumes of liquor from their eyes. We will take the Caughnawaga road, as you will," continued the baronet. "It will serve my turn better, and be the same to you."

Evelyn assented readily, but Karl, riding up, insisted that the road by the Tribe's Hill was better. "There are so bad snow-drifts," he said, "up to a horse's shoulder, maybe."

"They were not there last night! What folly does the fellow talk?" cried the baronet.

Karl scratched his shaggy head, and assumed an expression of more than usual stupidity. "'Tis not what you call a drift, but a snowbank fall in," he said.

"Call it an avalanche, a glacier, or a volcano, an you will, but I mean to see it myself," asserted Sir John.

Karl did not protest further, but shielding his face from the sun with one huge hand, rode forward cheerily enough. They had passed into the hollow beyond the first cross road which skirts the hills, when their ears caught the sound of horses' galloping hoofs to the right. The next instant a party of about half a dozen men dashed from the narrow forest cut road into the broader highway. One look showed that they were wearing the now familiar garb of General Schuyler's troopers.

"They are after me!" exclaimed Sir John, with an oath. "I have been decoyed, but I back my thoroughbred against all their cattle!" He caught Evelyn's bridle as he spoke, and struck her horse with his whip as he dug spurs into his own, so that in spite of the young girl's entreaties that he would leave her, and save himself, they dashed on together. Evelyn's pony, a fiery young filly, caught the spirit of the chase, and stretched the muscles in her slender legs to the utmost.

On and on, faster and faster, they galloped. Evelyn flung her arms forward on her horse's neck and clung blindly. She could see nothing for the flying ice and snow showered up from the road, which stung and cut her face; hear nothing but the clattering of hoofs, and her own throbbing heart-beats. Then a harsh voice rang through the crisp air with the word "halt!" She heard Sir John at her side click his pistol trigger. The pursuers were gaining on him, handicapped as he was by her company.

"Halt," again cried the voice. They were now nearing the long hill which led into Caughnawaga. "Halt, or I fire!" came the third summons.

Evelyn pulled in her own horse with all her strength. "Go on, go," she cried to Sir John, "they will not dare to fire while I am in their range."

The baronet, with another fierce oath, dashed forward alone. Evelyn still rode rapidly on, keeping the middle of the road, and covering Sir John's flight. But Karl was gaining on her, as well as the posse. Now he had overtaken her and had seized her bridle. Evelyn struck at him with her whip, but he swung his heavy body under her horse's neck, and brought the panting creature almost to its knees. "Tausend duynil!" he breathed, "dost want to be shot?"

Evelyn made no answer. She was watching the troopers who had already passed her, give chase to Sir John. "They will not get him!" she cried, triumphantly. "See! 'tis impossible." But even as she spoke the leader's bullet went whizzing through the air, striking the blooded horse, which leaped and plunged wildly. Sir John discharged his pistol barrels rapidly, but his charger was already rolling under him, and his shots went wide of their mark.

"Stop!" he cried, "I surrender," and as the party neared him: "'Tis an unwarranted capture, for which ye shall answer, and had I but now my sleeping chivalry of the Hall—"

The men were closing in about him, when Karl's riderless and maddened horse dashed forward toward him. In a moment Sir John, with an almost impossible spring, flung himself into the empty saddle, and leaping the roadside runlet at a frightful height, crashed straight through the snow-encrusted forest.

Evelyn knew by the curses of the troopers, that they were balked of the prey which they had hoped would be most welcome to Gen. Schuyler. They skirted the stream a few moments, trying to force their horses to the same leap, but fresh voices from the rear betokened the coming of Sir John's Highlanders, and the little posse immediately dissolved in the forest.

Karl took the loss of the horse and his mistress' upbraiding for his strange conduct, with equal philosophy, "The domine not wish you to be shot," being all she could get out of him.

When Evelyn at last reached the Glebe farm in safety, still exultant over Sir John's escape, she found the interest in her story quite superseded by the contents of a packet just arrived from Griffith.

The Distinguishing Characteristic of the Vocation is its Exquisite Tone

ORGANS BUILT on the Vocation system are preeminently fitted for church services. They have a full, rich diapason tone and a peculiar delicacy in the string registers which make them of inestimable value as an accompaniment to the human voice. This, with their great variety of registration and superior carrying powers, renders them remarkably well adapted for leading congregational singing.

Their superiority of tone is a subtlety more easily appreciated than described.

Oh, What a Pity!

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY

Little Maud Marian lives in a city;
Her head is a tousele of frizzles and curls,
She wears gold beads, and a ring with pearls,
And an empire dress of lace and silk,
And hat with feathers like foamy milk,
And satin slippers, and mousquetaires.
Little Maud Marian lives in the city,
And Dorothy says, "Oh my, what a pity!"

Dorothy lives among country joys,
Her hair is shingled like any boy's;
She has no lace, nor a silken gown,
But she only laughs at living in town.
Her dress is flannel, or, do you know,
In summer the plainest of calico?
And spring-heeled shoes; but she never tires,
Her feet seem shod with electric wires.
"When there's only one May in the year, what a pity,"
Dorothy says, "to live in a city."

Dorothy gambols the whole of the day,
By meadow and brook, like a lamb at play;
She rolls in the scented hay in the mow,
She hunts the eggs, and she milks the cow.
She rides her horse in the wildest race,
She climbs a tree to the nestlings' place,
She picks the currants and cherries, and then
She pets the brood of the speckled hen.
"When there's only one June in the year, what a pity," Dorothy says, "to live in a city."

CHAPTER III.

THE SHADOW OF THE LILACS

"Say, Jerry."

Eleanor waited patiently for an answer from the shadow of the lilacs, but there was none forthcoming; not even the crackle of a twig, or the rustle of a leaf, to betray the fact that she had been either seen or heard.

"Oh, Jer-ree!"

The appeal was made forcible this time by a well aimed peach stone, which, judging from the prolonged "Ow-w-w" that greeted it, well fulfilled its mission, and a dark head hobbled around the corner of the bushes to look at her as she sat above, on her favorite seat, the veranda rail. It was afternoon, and Eleanor felt as though she had started the S. D. S. on a road of brilliant success. The girls had gone away in the morning, each full of high resolves, and earnest promises, and altogether, she felt very happy over the probable outcome of her scheme.

"Quit, Nell," said Jerry aggrievedly; "you hit my solar plexus."

"Bother your solar plexus," laughed his sister. "Wake up, and tell me something."

Jerry closed his book with a deep sigh, and rolled out of his shelter lazily, to lie at full length on the grass.

"Fire ahead," he said.

"What do you boys do when you initiate members into the Excelsior Club?" asked Eleanor, with grave anxiety.

Jerry looked up at her for a moment in blank, open-eyed astonishment, and then suddenly went off, like an alarm clock, in a succession of good round laughs, while his sister watched him roll on the grass in dignified silence.

"Got 'em again?" shouted a cheery voice from the garden fence, and Arthur Gray vaulted over.

Jerry sat up, wiping his eyes on his coat sleeve.

"S-say, Art," he gasped, "Nell wants to know—wants to know—oh, jiggits," and off he went again.

"Ought to try something powerful when he's as bad as all that," Arthur said solemnly, gazing down on Jerry, his hands in his pockets, but Nell saw the twinkle in his eye, and was unmollified.

"I don't see why you boys act so crazily every time any one says initiation," she said slowly. "I only wanted to know what you do."

"Y-yes, Art, she—she only wanted to know," Jerry repeated explosively. "Tell her all about it, can't you?"

Arthur cleared his throat nervously.

"Why, you see, Nell," he began apologetically, "we'd like to tell you like sixty—just dying to oblige a lady, you understand, but we have to take the most awful, ironclad vow—"

"'Nough to make your hair curl, that vow," murmured Jerry.

"Never to reveal the secrets of the club. So that whatever our private sentiments may incline us to, we have to sacrifice them on the shrine of—the shrine—"

"The shrine of honor," finished Jerry with a flourish. "Say, can't the old boy make a dandy speech, though, Nell? We let him run on like that at the club, and when he's through, all the other fellows just vote, 'Me, too, Art,' and it goes. In other words, short and sweet, we'd like to tell, but we dissent, as Bobbie says. What are you so peppering anxious to know for?"

"Perhaps to find out how you got red, white, and blue paint on your ears the other night, young man," said Eleanor loftily, and master Jeremiah subsided.

"Where's Mollie?" asked Arthur, suddenly. "Mother didn't worry about her not coming home to dinner, because she thought, of course, you had kept her here."

"Why, no, we didn't," Eleanor said wonderingly. "She went home long before the other girls did."

"What other girls?" asked Jerry, curiously, but Arthur looked so worried that he did not wait for an answer. "I saw Mollie on her wheel about eleven, pedaling for dear life towards the bluff."

"Oh, I know where she is, of course," Nell cried, her face clearing. "How stupid of me not to think at first. She's gone to see Virginia Hardy."

"Whew!" whistled Jerry. "Getting swell, aren't we? I wonder if Mollie—" edly. "Look at what's coming around the corner."

The rest followed his glance, and there, coming along the poplar shaded street, was the handsome little light trap and cream colored ponies that Virginia always drove. Eleanor saw in a moment that Mollie was in it with the new member, and that they were coming to see her.

"Run away, boys, please," she said eagerly, for it would not do to have any witnesses to a Sisterhood conference, and above all, Excelsiors.

"Humph," said Jerry, huffily, "don't suppose we're going to wait to be froze out, do you? Come on, Art. Oh, and Nell," he called as an afterthought, "if you should want to know about that initiation ceremony—"

But Eleanor was already out of hearing as she hurried down the path to greet the girls.

"Virginia wanted to talk to you about a plan to raise the first money," Mollie said, after she had managed the introduction successfully, and had helped Virginia carefully out of the trap. "She says she will join us, Nell."

"Oh, I am so glad," Eleanor said, trying not to look too happy over the conquest. "We do need some practical ideas badly."

"Maybe you won't think this a bit practical," Virginia said, with her swift smile, that seemed to change the expression of her whole face. "But Mollie likes it, and I will do my best to make it a success."

They were seated on the veranda now, and Virginia unfolded her plan to eager listeners. "It's a moonlight masquerade to begin with," she said.

"What's that?" asked Nell.

"Why, like a moonlight lawn party, only we will have it all in fancy costume," Virginia explained. "Only charge ten cents admission, you know, and then sell ice cream and lemonade, and have some music, and a lot of colored lanterns, and play games. I think it would be a great success, don't you? It has never been done here in Ottawa."

Nell drew a deep breath.

"I should say not," she said. "It's lovely, if we can only do it. But where's the lawn, and where's the ice cream, and all that coming from?"

"Never you mind, ma'am," said Mollie, with a majestic wave of her hand. "The only thing we have to bother our heads over is whether the moon will shine or not. That is absolutely the only circumstance beyond our control."

"But with only six members—" Nell began doubtfully.

"Too many cooks spoil the broth," Mollie interposed. "Six are plenty. I forgot to tell you, Virginia, that we only started this morning, so there are only a few of us."

"And no boys allowed," laughed Eleanor, adding, in her most decided way: "They are only a nuisance bothering around, and a distraction generally; so we want to have the S. D. S. a distinctly rival affair from the Excelsiors, without one atom of help from any of them. Don't we Mollie?"

"Mollie took off her cap, and ran her fingers through her curls ruefully. It was a mighty hard law, she thought, that deprived the new club of the assistance of the Excelsiors, and when Mollie said Excelsiors, she meant Dave and Arthur, but it was Nell's exclusive right, as founder of the order, to do pretty much as she pleased, so there was no help for it.

"I suppose so," she replied regretfully,

"only I don't think we'll have much fun without them. Now, Dave and Art—"

"Oh, bother Dave and Art," said Eleanor, merrily, as she rose. "Come into the library where it's cool, and there we can make all our plans. I wouldn't have anyone of the boys hear us for the world, because all this is of course sub rosa."

Virginia and Mollie followed her, and then a most peculiar thing happened. All was silent for the space of a minute, and then the lilac bushes swayed and rustled from the force of some mysterious internal convulsion, and two figures crawled out from their shelter, on their hands and knees, like a new kind of strange quadruped. Cautiously they peered up on the veranda, and seeing that the coast was clear, trod softly over the lawn, climbed the back fence, and then, with one accord, started on a run cross lots, towards the old white house where the Grays lived, and in whose barn the Excelsior Club held all secret sessions.

Birthday Trees

BY ALICE MAY DOUGLAS

A NUMBER of the students of Mrs. Barton's Boarding School had planned a social evening for Arbor Day, and each had agreed to read up something in regard to the custom of planting trees on the birth of children, and to repeat the same as a part of the evening programme.

Arbor Day at length came, and the party was assembled in the cosy sitting room which went with Alma Allen's suite of rooms. The girls had been given permission to invite a few of the students from a neighboring preparatory school for boys, and it was a merry company that came together, you may be sure.

After the usual festivities had been gone through with, and reports of the day's tree-planting in each of the schools fully discussed, the young people turned their attention to the topic of the evening.

"Did you ever think of how many trees Arbor Day is the birthday?" began Frank Turner. "I shouldn't be surprised if a hundred trees had been set out in just this little town."

"Does a tree's birthday date from the day it is set out?" queried Ellen Dunn, as she helped herself to a flower from a bouquet on the table.

"I suppose a tree's birthday is the day when it springs up," ventured Ellen Barclay.

"Or the day when the seed is planted," laughed Cassie Smith; "but we won't quarrel over this. Who is to speak his little piece first about birthday trees?"

"I will," answered her brother Bertram. I can introduce you to the Mbengas of Western Africa. There, when two babies are born on the same day, two trees of the same kind are planted. Then Mr. B's—I cannot afford to pronounce their names but once a day—come and dance around the trees. After that, each tree determines the life of its child, and if it dies, the child will die, too."

"My anecdote is about my friends, the Papuans," said Harriet Wills. "When a child is born to them they drive a pebble into the bark of a tree. If the tree is cut down, they believe the child will surely die."

"Many of the European natives in the past planted trees wherever a child was born, so I have read," observed Alma. "It is said that when Virgil was born, his parents planted a poplar. They said, 'As the poplar will overtop all other trees, so will our son's greatness that of others,' and how true did their prophecy prove?"

"Too true for my comfort," put in Bertram who was not particularly fond of his Latin.

"I have heard that poplars are still set out in the neighborhood of Turin, when a baby girl is born," remarked Cassie, "and that when she is grown, her tree becomes her dowery."

"Well, that is more of a dower than girls get nowadays in America," exclaimed Donald. Then noticing the looks of surprise upon the faces of his audience, he added: "That is, more than they get by custom, for custom accords them nothing excepting rice and old shoes, when they set out upon their wedding tour."

"My uncle used to live in Switzerland," said Alma, "and I have heard him say that when a boy is born, an apple tree is set out, and when a girl is born, a pear or nut tree; and it is believed that if the tree grows well, the child will, and if it languishes, the child will."

"I'd choose to be a boy, if I were in Switzerland," laughed Cassie, "for I always preferred pears and nuts to apples."

"I have been studying up for this meeting, too," observed Donald, dryly, "and I have learned that in Aargan, if you know where that is—I don't—it was the custom, a few years ago, to plant a fruit tree on the land of the commune for every child that was born. If a father got angry with his son who was away from home, and thus beyond the power of his rage, he would go and cut down the son's memorial tree."

"I have been turning my attention toward the Zulus," said Ellen. "Did you know that the Zulu father always plants an euthorbia tree near the door of his hut when twins are born?"

"What sort of a tree is that?" inquired Harriet.

No one was able to tell.

"Since we are so ignorant," laughed Frank, "I think we had better go back to our books and make the acquaintance of that Zulu tree."

"By the way, it is time to adjourn," said Ellen, "so good night, all. I'm off for my quarters."

The company soon broke up, and ever after the trees had a deeper meaning for them.

John Phillips' Ride

REPRESENTATIVE OSBORNE has submitted, from the House Committee on Claims, a favorable report on the Senate Bill to pay Mrs. Hattie A. Phillips $5,000 in full compensation for the services of her husband, John Phillips, in the Indian war of 1866. The story of the gallantry of John Phillips, for which it is proposed to pay his widow this sum, is a remarkable one. Fort Phil Kearny was invested by the Sioux, under Red Cloud, in December, 1866. It stood in the shadow of the Big Horn Mountain, was the extreme outpost in that part of the North-west, and 200 miles from a telegraph station. On December 21st, a train was attacked by the Sioux, and a detachment of seventy-eight men and two officers, under command of Lieut.-Col. Fetterman, made a sally to protect the train. They were surrounded by the Indians, and, after their ammunition was exhausted in defending themselves, were massacred.

The triumphant Sioux then surrounded the fort, and sat down to starve it out. The weather was intensely cold, the thermometer hovering about twenty degrees below zero. The snow lay on the ground from three to five feet in depth. Rescue seemed impossible, and the Indians delayed their attack, knowing that while awaiting it, the garrison of the fort would experience the keenest mental anguish in contemplating their ultimate fate. The women and children begged to be placed in the powder-house, to be blown up in case of a successful attack.

At this crisis, when none of the soldiers dared to undertake the ride to Fort Laramie, John Phillips, scout and hunter, volunteered to make the attempt. At midnight, he left the fort with a few biscuits in his pocket and a little feed for his horse. Over the plains he rode at night, hiding in the day, with no opportunity to replenish his store of food. Five days later he reached Fort Laramie, falling into a faint when he had delivered the dispatches.

The Indians never forgave him for snatching their prey from them, and in after years continually harassed him by shooting his cattle, and several times attempted to capture him for the purpose of torturing him to death. He put in a claim for $2,210 for his cattle, which was awarded by the Court of Claims, but it was never paid because he was not at the time a naturalized citizen of the United States. He died soon afterward, in the prime of life, from the results of his exposure on his famous ride.—Baltimore Sun.

AT a philatelic exhibition opened at Birmingham in December, there were on view the two most valuable stamps in the world—a penny and a twopenny Mauritius. Only twenty-three specimens of the 1848 Mauritius stamp are known to exist, and the market value of the two on exhibition at Birmingham is £2,100. They belong to a Parisian collector, who has loaned them for the exhibition.

WOULDN'T BE PUT OFF.

Went to the Kitchen and Made it Herself

Husband said to me one morning, "It seems to me, my dear, that it will pay you to make a trial and see whether it may not be true, as your physician says, that the cause of your persistent dyspepsia and head trouble and palpitation of the heart, is coffee."

He said: "Suppose we stop coffee and try this Postum Food Coffee!" I agreed to it, and so a package was sent up that day.

In the morning we had the new food coffee, and after filling my husband's cup, I filled my own. I sipped a few spoonfuls, and I am ashamed to say that my eyes filled, too. I could not drink it.

Husband suggested that, inasmuch as this was the first trial, the cook had not made it properly.

I took the coffee pot to the kitchen, poured it out, and examined the package carefully, then followed directions exactly (an easy thing to do, by the way), and after I had got the coffee pot to boiling, I left it in the cook's charge, saying that I would send out for it in fifteen minutes.

When it came in and I poured out some fresh cups for husband and myself, what a revelation! I could not have believed it possible that there was such a difference between an article poorly prepared and properly prepared. Here it was a black-brown, clear and delicious. The addition of a little cream turned it to that perfect color that an epicure delights in.

This was several months ago, and I attribute my gain in flesh and my perfect health to the use of Postum, as it has served me as an ideal food. My friends frequently say something like, "I never saw you looking so well. What are you taking?" I reply: "I am taking no medicine, but I am drinking hard just now; drinking Postum Food Coffee," and the results are very real indeed to husband and myself. Mrs. Jennie Knight, Washington, D. C.

Anyone Can Have a Trial Package by Sending Name and Address

A new remedy has been discovered that is odorless and tasteless, can be mixed with coffee or food, and when taken into the system a man cannot use tobacco in any form. The remedy contains nothing that could possibly do injury. It is simply an antidote for the poisons of tobacco, and takes nicotine out of the system. It will cure even the confirmed cigarette fiend, and is a God-send to mothers who have growing boys addicted to the smoking of cigarettes. A free trial package of the remedy will be mailed prepaid upon application to Rogers Drug & Chemical Co., 461 Glenn Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. This will help any woman to solve the problem of curing her husband, son, or brother of a habit that undermines the health, leaving the body susceptible to numerous lingering and dangerous diseases.

Finance and Commerce

ALL the tests by which the volume of business is measured, continue to show it to be large beyond any former period—nearly one-third greater than last year. In our foreign trade, while the volume is larger, the balance of trade in our favor is not as great as a year ago. For March our exports of merchandise exceeded our imports by $31,000,000, against $38,000,000 in February and $57,000,000 in January. For the nine months ending with March, our excess of exports over imports were considerably under those of last year. The deficiency is due both to a decrease in exports of agricultural products, principally wheat, corn, and cotton, and to an increase in imports. The indications are, in the absence of complete figures, that our exports of manufactured articles for the above period were the largest on record.

With the advent of seasonable spring weather, reports from all branches of trade are satisfactory. The forces of distribution are kept busy, and the forces of production are everywhere hurried to keep pace with them. In these processes prices are the registers, and in no places where the mercurial influences of speculation are missing, is there a tendency towards lower prices. In iron, prices have again advanced and have exceeded the high marks of this last winter; and this, notwithstanding a steadily increasing production and a manifest disposition on the part of buyers towards conservatism. In copper, too, another high mark has been reached. The exports for the first quarter of the year are the largest on record, and are 30 per cent. more than last year. While the speculative market for raw cotton has dragged dull in liberal supplies and unsatisfactory export demand, the demand for manufactured cotton is good and prices are strong. In the boot and shoe trade prices are tending strongly upward, on a demand for distribution that is most satisfactory.

On the whole, the market for money is about steady, and previous rates are about maintained. The higher rate of interest in New York recently brought in money from Philadelphia, Boston, and other neighboring cities, causing easier rates, and the last bank statement was more satisfactory. There was an increase in legal reserves of about $4,000,000, but this was partially brought about by decreasing the loans. Foreign exchange is strong, and prices higher. In the stock market the quotations are steady. The volume of business has materially decreased. Wheat took a sharp turn up early last week, but since then prices have been dragging. Although foreign buying improved somewhat, the controlling factor was the outlook for the growing winter wheat crop. Although the reports from five of the principal producing States are bad, the usual optimism of the trade is endeavoring to maintain the hope that with favorable conditions for the spring wheat crop in the North-west, an average total crop may yet be secured.

There is no doubt that several million acres of winter wheat will be plowed up and reseeded to other grains. While this probability has failed to sustain the advance in wheat, it has easily served to create weakness in the market for corn, which has declined sharply.

Provisions have ruled firmer and a shade higher. The backwardness of the season has so crowded farmers' work that receipts of hogs have been small. It is not thought the decrease will be permanent.

South American Trade

THE field for American goods in South America, and the opportunity for its enlargement, is the subject of a letter just received from the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department. It points out the popularity of American goods, and the fact that American merchants and manufacturers are not apparently making the effort to extend their trade in South America that those of other countries are making. Imports into Argentine Republic from Germany increased from 8,045,000 pesos in 1886, to 13,895,000 in 1896; those from Italy increased from 4,647,000 pesos in 1886, to 11,395,000 in 1896; those from the United Kingdom, from 38,433,000 in 1886, to 44,730,000 in 1896; while those from the United States, which in 1886 were 7,673,000, were in 1896 11,210,000, out of a total importation in 1896 of 112,164,000 pesos in value. An examination of our own export figures, by countries, shows that our exports to Argentina, which in 1889 were $9,293,856, were in 1898, $6,429,070.

The letter in question says: "A statement in a periodical, referring to the commerce of Argentina, in regard to the manufactures which Europe exploits exclusively for its own benefit, is worthy of consideration when it is clear that the United States, for many reasons, should supply the South American merchants with its manufactures of a quality superior to the German, similar to the English and French. One advantage of the United States is the possession of the raw materials—cotton, wool, etc.: although it may not have wool in sufficient quantity, it can procure that of other places, as Europe has done, in exchange for its merchandise. To obtain satisfactory results, it is necessary that the North American manufacturers should put themselves in direct contact with competent persons who should be natives of the country where they wish to plant their business, in order that the dealer may understand the needs, tastes, and customs of the consumers, and all necessary modifications of which the trade may be susceptible—width, design, color, etc., in which each country has its own customs and tastes, which vary, but do not change. In this country, preference is given to French fashions, but imitations from other sources are accepted. From England some American textiles are brought for domestic use—pack thread, dimity, satinet, canvas, and some others, which sell at a price higher than those made by them (the English), the preference being given them by the connoisseurs for the fineness of the material, evenness of the weave, and greater durability. As all things begin for something, the manufacturers of American goods, in order to make their wares known, could secure an establishment for general merchandise of their manufacture at wholesale and retail, sending a case of each article. The result of the sale, and the quantity and price returned, would serve them as a guide for the development of future trade in that locality. It is well understood that the person who takes the lead will have the entrance into the provinces of Paraguay, Bolivia, and Chile, as they are united by the railroad which will pass across the cordilleras of the Andes, which is already advanced, and which in a few years will be completed. The nationality of the person who should take the lead in this place has no radical importance, since Europeans who represent the manufacturers of their respective countries, manage to promote the interests which their constituents have confided to them.

Suggestions as to Flowers

A florist advises, as a means of preserving the freshness of cut flowers, that any one which shows signs of fading should be quickly taken away from the bunch. One dying blossom will quickly infect the others. Cut flowers, too, ought never to stand where the sun shines directly upon them. It is a mistake, also, in putting flowers in the refrigerator, to keep for the few hours before using, to have them come in contact with the ice. This caution seems almost unnecessary, but experience proves that thoughtless persons, imbued only with the idea that flowers should be in a cool place, will lay the blossoms on the ice itself, which freezes them. They can be wrapped in a wet paper, or damp cotton, and put in the lower part of the ice-box, though too serious chilling, even without reaching the freezing point, makes them droop very rapidly when brought into heated air. Probably the greatest enemy of cut flowers is gas, and if one is trying to preserve a bunch for several days, they should be removed to an unlighted room as darkness descends.

JAPAN PINK—A word to beginners in flower growing may prove of benefit and show them how to make an inexpensive garden, very beautiful and lasting, and all from a package of seeds of Japan pinks; more than one package, if space will permit. A cigar box will make a very good seed bed; sow the seed in March or April, and the plants will be ready to set out the middle or last of May, blooming in July and continuing until after all other flowers have succumbed to the rigors of the frost-king. The second season finds them more perfect than the first, beginning to bloom at least six weeks earlier than those from spring-sown seeds. Although the plants are called biennials, they flower well the third summer. Of the double-mixed variety some were in solid colors, others veined and mottled. As they differed in color, so they differed in size and shape; some were large and loose, deeply cleft and widely margined; others closely set with regularly laid petals, with only a narrow thread of border. Out of over fifty plants only two were similar. One word as to sowing the pink seeds: One need not be blessed with the patience of Job to start them; they will germinate in from five to seven days, and then must have light and air. Remember, they are hardy plants and will endure more cold than most seedlings. They must be hardened, not only to the day air, but also to the night-air, by leaving them out doors a few nights before transplanting.—Vicks' Magazine.

THE SINCEREST—FLATTERY—IMITATION.

A Western firm, in their newest, very recently published, catalogue, under the preface of "none but new and original designs," plagiarized eighteen designs that we published for the benefit of our customers over twenty years ago. A New York firm (started up not long ago) plagiarized over 200 of our designs, and were so eager in making the appropriations that they failed to erase on a large number of the designs the above illustrated trademark, or our initials, R. G. Others have done so. Can you expect of imitators equal work, either in spirit or execution? We may answer for you—NO. Have our designs become standard of ecclesiastical art?

After the publication of a list of some work in progress of execution in several Church papers in February last, it was intimated to us whether or not that list of work was bona-fide. We say yes, it was. The following unsolicited testimonials, received since the last Easter Day, will verify, to a certain extent, our assertions:

CALVARY PARISH HOUSE,
TAMAQUA, PENN., April 9, 1899.

Dear Sir:

The Cross arrived in good condition, and is much admired. It was used first on Easter Day. I like especially the tasteful way in which the inscription is engraved.

Very truly yours,
Rev. FREDERIC C. LAUDERBURN.

HONEY FALLS, N. Y., April 3, 1899.

Dear Sir:

Circular Window was rec'd on Friday and looks well in place. All are well satisfied. I enclose draft for amount of bill.

SOUTH GROVELAND, April 4, 1899.

Dear Sir:

The Font and Cover arrived duly and on time. In all respects satisfactory. It is well finished, massive, and expressive. We commend the work, the promptness of delivery, and the careful instructions for its handling and putting in place.

Yours truly,
Rev. C. H. SEYMOUR.

SAINT JOHN LAND, KING'S PARK, N.Y., April 14, 1899.

My Dear Sir:

The Prayer Desk you have just made for us in brass and oak from special design has arrived, and we are delighted with it. It is even handsomer than we thought it would be when we saw the design.

Thanking you for the care with which you followed my instructions in the detail work, believe me, sincerely yours,

Rev. N. O. HALSTED (Superintendent).

ALEXANDRIA, VA., April 6, 1899.

Dear Sir:

Yours of the 5th rec'd. I enclose my check for amount of your bill. The window has given entire satisfaction, as I learn from Mrs. L. W. Reid.

Sec. Young People's Guild, of St. Peter's Church, Brockville, Ontario, Canada.

VICKSBURG, MISS., April 4, 1899.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed find P. O. order for Altar Cover, etc., just sent. I wish to thank you for your promptness in executing the order. It fits beautifully, and was very much admired. We are all well pleased with it, and when we wish anything else will let you hear from us.

Yours truly,
HAMILTON WRIGHT.

CHRIST CHURCH RECTORY,
BINGHAMPTON, N.Y., April 10, 1899.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed find my check to your order for payment of brass Litany Desk. I am delighted with the desk, and every one who sees it thinks it a beautiful illustration of Ecclesiastical Art.

Very sincerely yours,
Rev. R. G. QUENNEL.

EMMANUEL CHURCH,
BALTIMORE, April 13, 1899.

My Dear Sir:

The Pulpit is much admired everywhere. The admiration grows, and I think deservedly. The pulpit is exceptionally handsome.

Very Respectfully,
Rev. I. HOUSTON ECCLESTON.

WARRENTON, N. C., April 3, 1899.

The windows are all in, and we are all very much pleased with them. We will do all we can to give you more work.

Notes of the World's Progress

WISCONSIN'S RECENT LEGISLATIVE session was marked by two important reforms which for years it seemed impossible to effect. The absence of requirement of a marriage license was a serious evil, in that an opportunity was thus afforded for hasty, and in numerous instances, ill-advised marriages. Being contiguous to Chicago, certain cities in Wisconsin—Milwaukee, for example—were favorite objective points for couples who wished their nuptials kept secret. A thriving industry was built up in Milwaukee for cabmen and justices of the peace, and one denominational minister earned the sobriquet of "the marrying parson." But all this is done away with under the new law which requires that a license be issued at least five days before the ceremony is performed. Another law prohibits officials of the State and members of both branches of the legislature from using railroad passes. The "pass" industry had assumed wide proportions. In urging passage of the prohibitory law, it was not asserted that legislation had been seriously influenced, but rather that the acceptance of a pass placed a legislator under some obligation to the road, and that railroad questions were treated with greater liberality than should be the case. During legislative sessions, railroad representatives were stationed at the capitol city, and passes for friends of legislators could be obtained in plenty. Many of the State solons were at heart in favor of the abolishment of passes, as at times the opportunings of constituents were well nigh unbearable. The passes, however, furnished excellent material for building political fences.

ADVICES FROM THE PHILIPPINES foretell the beginning of the end of organized resistance to United States supremacy. Being routed in every engagement, it has dawned upon the Filipinos that further opposition will be futile. Their strongholds, impregnable to Spanish arms, have been successfully stormed, and the valor of American troops has been an ocular demonstration of the strength and stability of the country whose domination they are unsuccessfully refusing to accept. Accordingly emissaries of Aguinaldo sued for peace, but attached terms which the United States could not accept, particularly terms which accorded recognition of the Filipino Republic. General Otis freely offered complete amnesty to those rebels who would lay down their arms. The Filipinos asked for an armistice pending the assemblage of the Filipino Congress, on the ground that that body only could arrange for cessation of hostilities, but General Otis held that if Aguinaldo had authority to declare war, he could also discontinue it. There is every prospect that the struggle will soon be history, and that modern civilizing influences will be actively at work.

NEWG OF GREAT IMPORTANCE IN FOREIGN cables the past week, was the announcement of a settled policy to be pursued by England and Russia in the Chinese Empire. The present agreement puts an end to the Anglo-Russian struggle in China, and is tantamount to a settlement of the question of the spheres of influence of the two countries. Under the agreement Great Britain has undertaken not to press railway or other concessions in North China, while Russia agrees to the British demand that no part of the basin of the Yang-Tse Kiang shall be allotted. Russia also recognizes explicitly that British commercial interests are supreme in the Yang-

Tse basin, which is understood to extend a considerable distance north and south of the river, though no attempt has been made to define the region. Everything recently has pointed to Russia's desire for a settlement in order to allow the successful exploitation of the Siberian railway, and also with a view to raising money in Great Britain for the development of the industries of Russia. The activity of Russian bankers and agents of the Russian Ministry of Finance in London, has borne testimony to the financial end that Russia has in view. With the conclusion of a long diplomatic struggle, the matter of Chinese concessions, which more than once has threatened serious complications, is happily ended. It may be renewed in other parts of Asia, particularly if it be true that Russia has obtained control of a port on the Persian Gulf. With England, Russia, and Germany firmly fixed in spheres of influence, and with other countries awaiting an opportunity for a foothold, there is little prospect of the Chinese having much left to govern.

THE LITTLE REPUBLIC OF NICARAGUA, of hardly sufficient importance to warrant a place on the map were it not for the Isthmian canal project, has placed itself in the position of a fractious child. During the recent "revolution," the insurgent chieftain levied taxes on American merchants in territory which he controlled, and now that the government is again in authority, demand is made for taxes, on the ground that they were not paid to proper officials. The merchants rightly declined to submit to double taxation, and the Nicaraguan official threatened to seize goods to the value of the tax claimed, whereupon the merchants closed their shops and raised the American flag. So far the Nicaraguans have not thought it wise to interfere with their emblems of protection, and the matter is now left to diplomatic settlement. Instances of injustice and arrogance to Americans have created a considerable score to adjust, and the presence of a war ship will likely do much toward securing favorable terms.

INVASION OF ENGLAND BY AMERICAN manufacturers is causing considerable uneasiness in Great Britain. The recent award to an American firm by the British government, of a contract for a large bridge for the Nile river, called forth critical comment, but it was held that British manufacturers were unable to fill the requirements within the time stipulated, and at a price as low. The Midland and Great Northern railroads have placed orders in the United States, it is reported, for 130 locomotives of the Mogul type, because of superiority and lower price. It is claimed the American locomotive is delivered quicker, and costs $2,500 less than the British one. Existing industrial conditions in England are not attributed entirely to unionism, but rather to apathy. England is not behind in labor-saving machinery, nor is the British mechanic deficient in ability. But it is a fact the country has fallen behind in the production of electric apparatus and other machinery. The London Mail commenting on the question says: "It is not a question of wages. The American workman is paid double the wages of the Britisher. His cost of living is greater, it is true. But he works strenuously, and has the best machinery at his service. If we are to recover our place in the world as the great engineering and metal-working nation, we must be less conservative in our methods, and we must, above all, recognize the necessity of machinery of the best and newest pattern. We must be more attentive to our customers, and we must understand the all-importance of the prompt delivery of goods."

IN LINE WITH THE TRUST EPIDEMIC IS the announcement emanating from an apparently authentic source in New York, of the proposed consolidation of many of the great steel trusts into one company, with a capitalization of one billion dollars. It is stated the combine will embrace among others, the American Steel and the American Tinplate Companies, the Carnegie interests, the American Steel Hoop Company, and possibly the Federal Steel and American Steel and Wire Company. There seems to be absolutely no limit to the ambitious schemes of the promoter. Fortunately for the public, a good portion of the trust industry is confined to paper. The small boy is about to be grasped, if the reports of the formation of chewing gum and peanut trusts be true. It is stated the price of gum will not be advanced, but being able to govern the supply of one important ingredient, the trust can control the manufacture and sale of the only real simon-pure article, consequently, small producers are to be forced out of business. It is not quite clear how the peanut trust is to be managed, as there is no possibility of preventing those who may wish from engaging in peanut production, particularly in sections where nature does everything but plant the seed and harvest the crop.

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF LORD CROMER on the finances, administration, and condition of Egypt and the Soudan, has made a favorable impression in Great Britain. Not only are the revenues increasing, but the cost of administration is gradually being reduced. The railroads, built as a part of the military campaign against the Khalifa, are, now that peace has been restored, adding to the revenue. Great Britain has gone energetically at the work of reclaiming the Soudan. The railroad from Atbara to Khartum will be completed by the close of the present year. By the beginning of 1900 a railroad from Khartum to Abu-Haraz will be commenced. This road will be 122 miles long, and will place Khartum in communication with the wheat-growing regions of the Blue Nile. The Soudan telegraph system south of Khartum is being constructed up the east bank of the Blue Nile to Abu-Haraz, thence to Gidoref and Kassala. Another line will pass from Abu-Haraz to Senaar, thence to Abba Island, in the White Nile, thence south to Fashoda and Sobat, the whole line being 1,000 miles long. According to Lord Cromer's report, further railway enterprises in the Soudan are not in contemplation at the present time. It is certain, however, Great Britain's next step will be to push the railroad south from Khartum, through Uganda, to the north shore of Lake Victoria Nyanza. This road will be built by Great Britain if Cecil Rhodes' proposed Cape to Cairo route fails to materialize.

THE LAST MOVE IN THE NEGOTIATIONS terminating the war with Spain was accomplished this week, when Secretary of State Hay handed to M. Cambon, French Ambassador, acting for the Spanish government, checks for $20,000,000, provided for by the treaty of peace for the cessation of the Philippine Islands. Diplomatic relations between the two governments are speedily to be restored.

The News of the Church

Centenary of the Church Missionary Society of England

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

CENTENARY services and sermons were begun on Sunday, April 9th. Monday, April 16th, the Holy Communion was celebrated at 11 A. M., at St. Bride's church, the Rev. Herbert James, preacher. In the afternoon a meeting for confession and thanksgiving was held in Lower Exeter Hall. The Bishop of Liverpool presided. In the evening there was a grand service at St. Paul's cathedral, the sermon preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Bishop of Minnesota was there as representative of the Church in the United States.

Tuesday, April 11th, was the day for review of C. M. S. missions. Chairman: the Bishop of Durham. Address on "The successive advances of the C. M. S. into the lands where its missions have been established," the Ven. Archdeacon Long. Address on "The beginning of the Persian mission," the Rev. Canon Bruce, D. D.; on "The beginning of the Japan mission," the Rev. G. Ensor, M. A.; "The beginning of the Uganda mission," the Rev. C. T. Wilson, M. A.; F. R. G. S.

Wednesday, April 12th, was the centenary of the Church Missionary Society. A breakfast was given in the society's birthplace, the Castle and Falcoln Hotel, where the founders gathered on April 12, 1799. The Rev. H. E. Fox, honorary secretary, presided. The most conspicuous figure in the interesting assembly was that of the Bishop of Minnesota whose presence is always an inspiration and a benediction. He made a brief and spirited speech which was greeted by enthusiastic cheers. He began by saying that in this 40th year of his episcopate, he had been delegated to bring the greetings of the sister Church in America, and to express the heart love of that Church for this venerable society. The Bishop of Derry said that he brought the hearty and unanimous greetings of the Hibernian Church Missionary Society of the Church of Ireland.

At 11 o'clock, a great meeting was held in Exeter Hall, at which over 4,000 men were present—bishops, clergymen, laymen, and guests from foreign lands. Sir John Kennaway presided. The Rev. H. E. Fox said that a large number of telegrams and letters had been received from India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Germany, France, Sweden, and Switzerland; from organizations at home and abroad. Sir John Kennaway read letters of sympathy from Prince Oscar, of Sweden, the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Harrowby, Viscount Wolsley, Lord Roberts, the Prime Minister, and others. After a speech from Sir John Kennaway, the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke in answer to Resolution I., That the Church Missionary Society would record their humble thanks to God for His goodness manifested to the society during the hundred years; for the victories won for Christ; for the precious memories linked with the names of those who had given their lives for Christ; and to give expression to the sympathy felt for missionaries in heathen lands.

The key-note of the Archbishop's address, which was delivered with great force and earnestness, was his passionate love for missions. He said that the society's history had been marvelous, and great faith had been given to the founders when there seemed so much to prevent them from winning. That the list of their workers would almost fill up another eleventh chapter of Hebrews. If there were any slackness now, it would be a refusal to acknowledge what God has already done for them. There was a great work to be done, not only in the mission field, but in the Church of England here, to convince men that the carrying forward of the Gospel message was an essential part of the ordinary Christian's life.

The Earl of Northbrook, ex-Viceroy of India, and First Lord of the Admiralty, seconded the resolution, and dwelt upon the work which had been done in India, both by the British government and missions. Between 1851 and 1890, the native Indian clergy had increased from 20 to 800; native lay agents, from 500 to 3,500; Christian congregations, from 250 to 5,000, and individual Christians, from 90,000 to 670,000. By the Queen's proclamation, the people have been told that the government is a Christian one, and its officers are free in their private capacity to give the utmost support to Christian missions.

The motion having been carried, the Bishop of Minnesota arose, amid a storm of applause, the entire audience rising, and moved the second resolution, confessing sorrow and humiliation that the Church had not more earnestly fulfilled the command of all commands, and lamenting the unhappy divisions among Christian men, which retarded the coming of Christ's Kingdom. After presenting in a graceful way the greetings which he brought from the American Church, and paying a tribute to the C. M. S., he went on to plead with marvelous force and eloquence for Christian Unity and the extension of missions. At almost every sentence he was answered by enthusiastic cheers. He said that the greatest missionary in the world's history was Jesus Christ, and all that the infinite love of God could do for His suffering children was done when He gave Himself for them. If Christ was the Head of the Church, it was bound to be a missionary Church, and unless that, although her orders were perfect, her ritual beautiful, like the Church of Sardis, it could be said of her, "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." Referring to the "unhappy divisions" spoken of in the resolution, he said that the things which separate Christians are not the questions which lie near the hearts of the people. The re-united Church would be a Catholic Church, recognizing that narrowness, bitterness, and strife were treason against its life. It would concede to its children the liberty which is its heritage. The ritual of the Church would be beautiful, but the fair linen of the Lamb's Bride would be the righteousness of the saints. Their sister Church in America was learning, in the spirit of Christ, to recognize all as brothers who were winning souls to Christ. When thousands were asking, not which faith they should hold, but whether they should hold any faith; when the Church was confronted with problems such as it had never had to face before, with envy and hatred between class and class, the destitution and sorrow of the poor, with multitudes in Christian lands to whom God is but a name, with eight hundred millions of men who have never heard that there is a Saviour—for the Church at such a time to be wrangling over rites and ceremonies, was a sight to make angels weep! The best and only cure for schisms was in consecrated lives banded together for the world's redemption; in grappling for a brother's life there would be no time to quarrel over shibboleths which many a poor soul could not speak.

After the applause had subsided, Lord Cranborne, M. P., eldest son of the Prime Minister, arose, and moved the third resolution. He made an earnest speech in behalf of toleration between brethren, and for aggressive missionary work. He began by saying that he had no words to express the profound respect and admiration with which he had listened to the Bishop of Minnesota's noble and grand appeal for charity and unity. He asked the meeting to pledge itself to the Christianity of British rule; he did not care what they might do in the countries they conquered, what secular colleges they might found; unless they carried with these institutions the definite teaching of Christianity, they had done nothing at all.

The Rev. H. E. Fox, in seconding the resolution, said that western civilization in India and Africa was making it impossible for the natives to believe in their own religions, and no greater wrong could be inflicted on a people than the destruction of its religion, if no religion were given to fill the vacant place. The Bishop of Newcastle closed the meeting with prayer.

On Thursday, the 13th, another great meeting took place at Exeter Hall. The special subject for discussion was, "Church Missions Other than C. M. S." The Bishop of Exeter presided. Sir John Kennaway read a letter of greeting from Count Bernstorff. The chairman said that the keynote of the day's meeting was, "The unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

The Bishop of Newcastle said that in China the success achieved had been quite as much as could reasonably be expected, considering the deep-rooted prejudices of the people. The S. P. G. was at work in the North, while the C. M. S. and the American Church Mission worked together in mid-China. He spoke at some length upon the missions in Japan, Burmah, and Delhi.

The Bishop of Minnesota spoke on American missions, foreign and domestic. He said that the Church in the United States had organized its missionary society in 1832; that in 1835 they sent their first missionary bishop, Dr. Kemper, to the West, which was then a wilderness. He gave an interesting account of the missionary bishops, and the missions in foreign and domestic fields, under the care of 85 bishops. One of the Church's great problems is, how to deal with the multitude of peoples of all races; of moulding these races of widely different religious antecedents, into one brotherhood. He mentioned a city in his diocese of 200,000 people, 50,000 of whom were Scandinavians. He said that one of the oldest Church rubrics is: "Do all things unto edifying"; that they had ordained Swedish priests and permitted them to use the ritual of the Church of Sweden; their last General Convention had authorized the action of the diocese of Minnesota. He spoke of the laity of the Church in the United States having a voice in all questions which affect the work of the Church. They have a representative in the parish, in the diocese, and in the National Council of the Church, and are the conservative element in the Church, sustaining the clergy in all aggressive work. He said that the strength of the bishops of the Church in the United States is in the fatherhood of their office. That to no one agency were their bishops more deeply indebted than to the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions, their offering at their last Triennial Convention having been $82,000. He spoke of the negro problem. To-day there are 1,460,000 black children in free schools; and since 1870, the sixteen Southern States have expended one hundred millions of dollars for the education of the black race. He spoke of the North American Indians, for whom he had been permitted to work, and gave a few thrilling examples of Indian character. In 1897, out of 250,000 Indians, not including Alaska, there were 23,574 communicants of churches; 23,000 children in schools; 268 more births than deaths; 348,218 acres of land cultivated by Indians; 1,716,918 bushels of grain were raised by them, and the value of products sold by them was $1,033,047. He said that there had been no failure in missions. That the only failure would be when a Christian nation would give heathen folk civilization without Christ.

The Bishop of Rochester highly eulogized the Universities' missions, dwelling upon the Christ-like devotion and faith of their leaders. He spoke of the direct service of the mission to human progress, but that all the civilizing, moralizing results were not the heart of the matter; the real agent was spiritual power. The Bishop of Bath and Wells enlarged on work in Australia and Melanesia.

Simultaneously with the Exeter Hall gatherings, great meetings were held in Queen's Hall and Albert Hall, morning, afternoon, and evening; all were crowded to overflowing, the addresses given by distinguished bishops and clergymen of the Church.

Missionaries to the Philippines

THE first missionaries sent from the Church in the United States to the Philippine Islands, sailed from San Francisco, April 20th. The party was composed of two clergymen, the Rev. Hugh Nethercott, lately of Jamaica, W. I., and the Rev. James L. Smiley, of the diocese of Washington, and two lay members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Mr. John Howe Peyton, secretary of the Brotherhood, for work in the army, and W. H. J. Wilson, of St. James' chapter, Bristol, Pa. Mr. Peyton is sent as a lay missionary by the chairman of the Board of Managers of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society, to investigate the opportunities for missionary work by the Church. It is expected that he will return in the autumn, and make a report to the Board of Managers, for its guidance in planting mission stations in the islands.

The work of the other three members of the party will be chiefly confined to caring for the religious welfare of the soldiers. There are now about 40,000 troops in the islands; a very large proportion of these are regulars; they are almost entirely without chaplains, as the office of chaplain in the regular army is a post office. When a regiment takes the field it is rarely accompanied by its chaplain. There are now two chaplains of our Church in Manila, the Rev. C. C. Pierce, of the regular army, and the Rev. David L. Fleming, of the 1st Colorado Volunteers. Both have been unsparing of themselves in their work on behalf of the soldiers, and will gladly welcome recruits.

This branch of the work is under the auspices of the Army Committee of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. The Rev. Messrs. Nethercott and Smiley have received the commission of the Presiding Bishop, and have been placed under the ecclesiastical supervision of the Bishop of Washington. The work they have undertaken to do has the cordial approval of the President of the United States and the Secretary of War. The latter has furnished the party with credentials, requesting all United States officers to render to the representatives of the Brotherhood such assistance as may be possible. The equipment of the party for work among the soldiers includes a large tent, to be used for services and as a reading room, a 500-volume library, a large supply of stationery and writing materials, 1,000 Prayer Books, many Testaments and Gospels in both English and Spanish, and requisites for celebrating the Holy Communion.

A large portion of the money needed to carry on this work for one year has already been raised by the Brotherhood's Army Committee, with the co-operation of individuals and parishes. St. George's parish, New York, has been particularly interested in the work. The Sunday school contributed $600, while the Woman's Missionary Society gave $260. The committee hopes to be able to raise an additional $1,500, in order to insure the maintenance of the work upon a proper basis for a full year.

The New Diocese in Indiana

ON the morning of St. Mark's Day, the primary convention of the new diocese in Northern Indiana, permission to establish which was accorded in the General Convention last fall, was opened with a full choral celebration of the Holy Eucharist, at which the Rt. Rev. John Hazen White, D. D., Bishop of Indiana, was celebrant. The Bishop spoke of the significance of this convention, and made a strong and vigorous plea for harmony and co-operation in the work of the new diocese.

The Bishop called the convention to order. At the calling of the roll, it was found that a majority of the parishes and missions which lie within the territory of the new diocese, were represented.

The Rev. Walter J. Lockton was unanimously chosen secretary of the convention. After considerable discussion, it was determined that the name of the new diocese should be "the diocese of Michigan City." It was decided that the annual convention be held in November of each year, at such time and place as may be designated by the proper ecclesiastical authority.

The Committee on Constitutions and Canons submitted its report, which was considered seriatim. One of the noticeable changes made, was the provision for a financial secretary of the diocese, whose duty it shall be to secure pledges and collect all diocesan and missionary funds. The Bishop appointed Mr. Stuart MacKibbin as chancellor of the diocese, and the matter of the incorporation of the diocese was referred to him, with power to act. Resolutions were adopted expressing the profound gratitude of the convention to the wardens and vestrymen of Trinity parish, Michigan City, for their generous offer of the use of their parish property for the cathedral of the diocese, and the revenues of the parish for the maintenance of the see, which offer has made possible the erection of the new diocese.

The tentative agreement arrived at by a committee appointed by Bishop White, in conjunction with the trustees of the diocese of Indiana, with regard to an equitable division of the funds of the old diocese, was stated by a member of the committee, and was approved by the convention, which authorized the committee, with the chancellor of the diocese, to continue to act in this matter, and empowered them to select a trustee on behalf of the diocese of Michigan City, to receive the funds and property due this diocese, and to hold the same in trust until the annual convention. Bishop White appointed as his examining chaplains, the Rev. Walter Scott, the Rev. J. H. McKenzie, Ph. D., and the Rev. William Galpin. On the recommendation of the committee on new parishes, St. Paul's mission, Hammond, was admitted into union with the convention as a parish.

The convention elected the following officers: Treasurer, Mr. Walter Vail, of Michigan City. Trustees, Messrs. E. L. Kuhns, Chas. H. Truesdell, R. H. Carnahan, Walter Vail, and the Hon. Jas. S. Dodge.

Standing Committee, The Rev. Messrs. A. W. Seabrease, Walter Scott, J. H. McKenzie, Ph. D.; Messrs. H. B. Morris, James S. Dodge, Robt. O. Law.

Registrar, the Rev. Walter J. Lockton.

The Bishop appointed the following Committee on Constitution and Canons: The Bishop and the Chancellor, ex officio; the Rev. Messrs. A. W. Seabrease, W. W. Raymond, E. W. Averill, F. M. Banfil, and the Hon. Jas. S. Dodge.

The question of the finances of the new diocese was referred to the Bishop and trustees, with power to act.

After the adjournment of the convention, the board of trustees effected its organization by the election of Mr. R. H. Carnahan as secretary, the Bishop being ex officio chairman of the board. The Standing Committee also organized, electing the Rev. A. W. Seabrease as president, and the Rev. Dr. McKenzie, as secretary.

During the session of the convention, delegates representing the various parishes and missions of the diocese met, and organized a diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, electing Mrs. John Hazen White as president, Mrs. Albert Cook, vice-president, Mrs. A. S. Wheeler, recording secretary; Mrs. James F. Murphy, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. E. F. Case, treasurer.

The various sessions of the convention were characterized by the greatest harmony and unanimity, and a most lively interest in the new diocese was manifested throughout.

As a preface to the primary convention, the ladies of Trinity church, Michigan City, tendered a delightful reception to Bishop and Mrs. White, and to the delegates to the convention.

Canada

Services and meetings were held all over Canada, the second week in April, to commemorate the centenary of the Church Missionary Society. In Toronto, a public meeting was held on the 12th, the centenary day. St. George's Society in Toronto attended service on St.

George's Day this year in St. James' cathedral, Canon Sweeny preaching. The diocesan board of the Woman's Auxiliary held the annual meeting April 26th-28th. The 13th annual meeting of the Ministering Children's League was held in Toronto, March 21st. Reports showed what really good work has been done by the children. The cot in the Hospital for Sick Children, and the bed in St. John's Hospital, is still supported, and, in addition, several children of missionaries are clothed, and one branch supports a woman in the Church Home. The reports of the Easter vestry meetings in the Toronto city churches are, on the whole, encouraging. The financial statements show in most cases a prosperous state of affairs. In more than one case there was a surplus after all liabilities had been paid. One of the chief topics discussed by St. George's vestry was the question of free seats. The members present were all in favor of the plan, provided the funds did not suffer. The report of the church of the Ascension showed the free-seat plan working well in every way. Several ladies were present at St. Thomas' vestry meeting. The Bishop will hold his next ordination in St. Alban's cathedral, Toronto, on Trinity Sunday.

Diocese of Huron

Bishop Baldwin went to Winnipeg to be present at the C. M. S. centenary celebration there, at which he was to speak. The Bishop held a Confirmation in St. Paul's cathedral, London, April 4th. Much regret is expressed at the departure of Canon Richardson who has been rector of Bishop Cronyn Memorial church, London, for 22 years. He was inducted into the Crown parish of St. John's, April 9th. The Rev. C. C. Owen, of Holy Trinity church, Winnipeg, has accepted the call to take Canon Richardson's place at Memorial church. The reports of vestry meetings in the diocese are satisfactory, so far as yet heard from. St. James' church, St. Mary's, has received a gift of a beautiful font of Italian marble, from a lady of the congregation. The Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese held the annual meeting in London, the first week in April, the session lasting three days.

The Rev. Lennox Williams, son of the late Bishop, has been invited to take the position of rector of the cathedral and Dean of Quebec. He has consented, under certain conditions, which are all to be fulfilled, one being that the free-seat system be adopted in the cathedral. A new church is to be built at Sherbrooke. Work on the chancel will be begun at once, as this portion of the work must be finished by Jan. 1st, next, in order that the $5,000 donated by the S. P. G., London, Eng., on that condition, may be obtained. When completed, the church will cost $30,000, and will be one of the finest in that district. The present building was erected about 50 years ago, and is now not suitable or large enough. About $15,000 has been already collected.

The Bishop held a Confirmation, on Easter Day, in St. Thomas' church, Montreal. The attendance at the Easter vestry meetings of the city churches was exceptionally large this year. As a rule, the reports were very satisfactory. The vestry of St. James the Apostle adjourned till April 10th, when, amongst other matters, it was decided that a new organ was necessary. A meeting to celebrate the C. M. S. centenary was held in the Synod Hall, Montreal, April 14th, the Bishop in the chair. Principal Hackett, of the Diocesan Theological College, gave an able address, on "One hundred years of missionary work." Arrangements have been made to enlarge the church of St. Matthias' this year, and to build parish rooms. The board of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society met in Montreal, April 12th and 13th. At the April meeting of the diocesan board of the Woman's Auxiliary, arrangements were made to have a fund for expenses started. The Rev. Thomas Moore, a prominent member of the English Church Union, passed through Montreal in April, on his way to Vancouver, where he is going to reside.

Restoration of the Kingston Cathedral

The Rev. Buxton B. Smith, dean of Ontario, writes: "In your Canadian items of Church news, it is very correctly stated that the $10,000 asked for the restoring of St. George's cathedral, Kingston, after the disastrous fire of Jan. 1st, has been subscribed; but that does not mean that such sum will completely restore the building. To effect this, and to provide the necessary furnishings, will require well on to another $10,000, and so we would still gladly welcome the assistance of those friends who may desire to give practical effect to their sympathy."

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The annual meeting of the Chicago branch, Woman's Auxiliary, will be held on Thursday, June 1st, in St. Peter's church, Belmont ave., not on Thursday, May 25th, as heretofore announced.

The Lord Bishop of Niagara was associated with his son in the reception at St. Peter's guild rooms, on the evening of the 27th. The assemblage was a thoroughly representative one, and it appreciated the neat address of the Bishop, who was to leave for Hamilton on Wednesday of this week.

St. Paul's, Kenwood, suffered a severe loss on the 18th, in the death of Mr. Myers, senior warden, whose active interest in the affairs of the parish, contributed so materially to the erection of the beautiful parish house. He was buried on the 21st.

The members of the Clerica will hold their next monthly meeting in Oak Park, on the invitation of Mrs. C. P. Anderson, on the afternoon of the 10th.

The Southern deanery convocation is postponed for a few weeks, when the laying of the corner-stone of the new St. Paul's, Kankakee, will be made a leading feature of the proceedings. The plans of Messrs. Morrison & Fuller, of Chicago, have been accepted for a very Churchly building to cost, finished, about $20,000.

Confirmations in Oak Park and Elgin

The Bishop made his visitation of Grace church, Oak Park, on the morning of the 4th Sunday after Easter, confirming a class of 14 males and 9 females, presented by the Rev. C. P. Anderson, rector. The Bishop also preached in the roofed-in basement of the new church that is to be, and which has been so satisfactory in the use and proved so much of a necessity, for the smallest congregation therein assembled during the four months of its occupation could not have found sitting room in the old church. In the evening, the Bishop preached in the church of the Redeemer, Elgin, and to a large congregation, after which he laid hands upon a fine class of 14 (6 being choir boys), presented by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Fawcett. This is the second Confirmation class here since last May, so that the total for the conventional year just ended will be reported as 26.

Confirmations by Bishop White

The class presented to Bishop White on the 20th, at Hinsdale, by the rector of Grace church, the Rev. W. R. Cross, numbered 6. The Bishop of Indiana was also a visitor at the Church Club on Monday, having just returned from Sycamore, where, on the morning of the 30th, he confirmed a class of 7 in the chapel of Waterman Hall, presented by the rector of the school, the Rev. Dr. Fleetwood, and in the evening one of 17 in St. Peter's, Sycamore, presented by the rector, the Rev. N. W. Heermans.

Church Club Lecture

Bishop Wm. Montgomery Brown, coadjutor of Arkansas, delivered the fifth and last of the series of lectures under the auspices of the Church Club, in Grace church, on Monday evening, April 24th. The subject, "Seabury and the American period," with so scholarly a treatment by the lecturer, deserved a larger audience than heard this able Southern Bishop.

St. James' Church, Chicago

The Rev. Dr. Stone, the rector, returned, on Friday last, from his visit to Canada. On the 28th he buried Mr. Wirt Walker, a prominent lawyer and a member of St. James'. The music at the afternoon service of last Sunday was uncommonly fine. It marked the close of Mr. Wheeler Fletcher's connection with the church as choirmaster, and that of Mr. James Watson as organist. In the congregation was Mr. Smedley, just returned from New York, who resumed on the Tuesday following his old position in charge of the choir. For a time, Mr. Lutkin will preside at the organ, and until an organist is obtained for the Ascension which Mr. Breden will leave to become organist of St. James'. On Whitsunday next, being the 350th anniversary of the putting forth of the Prayer Book of the Church in 1549, a special commemorative service will be held in St. James', and a special sermon preached by the rector.

Church of the Epiphany

On Monday afternoon, the Rev. Mr. Hopkins addressed the monthly meeting of the parochial branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, on "Missionary Ideals." On Tuesday evening, the organist, Prof. Francis Hemmington, presented a fine programme at his organ recital; he will give another on the evening of the 16th. There will be two Celebrations in Epiphany on Ascension Day, and a festival evening service; 23 individuals were baptized in Epiphany, by Bishop Morrison, on Easter Day. Four memorial mosaics are being placed to fill the panels of the re-aredos. An interesting letter from the late assistant, the Rev. G. B. Pratt, now doing missionary work in Puerto Rico, reports a congregation of 120, and 35 communicants, at the first Easter Celebration on the island by a clergyman of our Church. The use of the Hall of the Atheneum, a native literary society, is given for the Church services, free of charge, but it is intimated that government land may soon be obtained for a church.

The Mission at Harvey

On Sunday last the Rev. E. J. Randall had at morning service at Harvey, 15 communicants, but in the evening the congregation of this new mission, not yet named, and in charge of Mr. Knickerbacker, a seminarian, numbered 250, filling the opera house. The occasion was the anniversary service of the Odd Fellows. There is here a flourishing woman's guild with an attendance of 25, and at the recent annual meeting of the G. F. S., it was reported, as a unique occurrence, that, without solicitation, an application had been sent in for the formation of a chapter in this promising mission.

Clerical Movements

The Rev. B. F. Matrau surprised his friends of St. Bartholomew's, Englewood, by returning sooner than expected, from the South, much improved in health; but he goes away again, this time East, in a month.

His brother clergymen were glad on Monday to welcome back from Florida the Rev. J. T. McGrath, who took the service at Pullman last Sunday evening.

The Rev. Harold Morse moves to Morgan Park this week.

The Rev. Alf. Lealtad is reported to be so much better for his short vacation and rest, that he may be able to resume his work at St. Thomas', Dearborn st., on Sunday next.

We regret to be informed that the Rev. Percival McIntyre, of the church of the Redeemer, South Park, is very ill.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At St. Matthew's church, the Rev. Dr. Krans, rector, a reception for men was held in the parish house, April 25th.

At Trinity church, Sing Sing, a handsome font was unveiled Sunday, April 30th, as a memorial of the late Miss Mary Churchill.

At St. Philip's church, the Rev. H. C. Bishop, rector, special services were held Sunday, April 30th, being the eve of St. Philip and St. James' Day. A supper was served in the parish rooms on May 1st.

At Grace church, April 25th, were married the Rev. James Le Baron Johnson, one of the curates of the church, son of the Ven. Archdeacon Johnson, D. D., to Miss Mabel Van Rensselaer, daughter of Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer.

A new organization composed of Pennsylvanians, and to be known as the Pennsylvania Society of New York, was organized April 25th, with Bishop Potter as president, and the Rev. Samuel D. McConnell, D. D., D. C. L., chaplain.

Anniversary of the Rev. Arthur Ritchie

At St. Ignatius' church, the annual reception, under the auspices of the Men's Guild, was held in the parish hall, April 26th. It was the 15th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. Arthur Ritchie.

New Edifice for Church du St. Esprit

The edifice of the French church du St. Esprit, in W. 22d st., has been sold, and the congregation intends to build a new church. The sale of the former building bought $60,000. Land has been purchased near the junction of 4th ave. and 27th st., as the new site for the parish.

Confirmation at St. Augustine's

At the Confirmation just held at St. Augustine's chapel, Trinity parish, the Rev. Arthur C. Kimber, D. D., vicar, Bishop Kinsolving, of Brazil, officiated for Bishop Potter, and made the address. The rector of the parish, the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, presented the large class, and both he and Dr. Kimber made addresses.

Return of the Rev. Dr. Van Kleeck

Grace church, White Plains, is much rejoiced by the approaching return of its rector, the Ven. F. B. Van Kleeck, D. D., Archdeacon of Westchester, who, with Mrs. Van Kleeck, has been traveling in Europe for the past six months in search of renewed health. The archdeacon sailed from Liverpool, April 26th, on his return voyage.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

The Junior branch held its annual meeting in the church of the Holy Communion, April 22nd. At the afternoon session, Messrs. T. B. Nichols and Herbert Welsh spoke on county and city aspects of the question, "What can the Brotherhood do this summer for the Brotherhood of St. Andrew?" At night, addresses were delivered by the Rev. Thomas H. Sill and the Rev. W. H. Potts, Ph. D.

Church Periodical Club

The last meeting of the season has just been held at the Church Missions House. Addresses were made by the Rev. Thomas C. Wetmore, as the representative of the newly consecrated Bishop Horner, of the missionary jurisdiction of Asheville, N. C., and charged with collecting funds for the building and sustaining schools there; the Rev. R. L. Paddock and Mrs. J. L. Chapin, secretary of the club. The latter gave an account of her recent visit to Florida on the work of the club.

St. George's Day Dinner

Anglo-Saxon unity was the pervading spirit of the dinner, April 24th, in celebration of the 113th anniversary of the St. George's Society. Men of American and British birth vied with each other in singing the praises of each other's country. The American and English colors were intertwined everywhere in the hall. Among the guests of honor were the Rev. Dr. C. Walpole Warren, D. Parker Morgan, and the Rev. Dr. Geo. M. Christian. The Rev. Dr. Warren made an address.

Sisterhood of the Good Shepherd

At the 30th anniversary celebration just held in its chapel, Bishop Potter was the celebrant of the Holy Eucharist, assisted by the chaplain, the Rev. Thomas Gallaudet, D. D. The 29th and 30th annual reports were read by Dr. Gallaudet, noting the appointment of Sister Ruth as successor to the late Sister Adella, as head of the order. The proceeds of a legacy from the late Miss Caroline Talmann have been used to pay off $2 000 of mortgage heretofore resting upon the house of the Brotherhood at Asbury Park, N. J., devoted to educational and fresh-air work. Bishop Potter made a congratulatory address referring to the faithful labors of the Sisterhood during its 30 years of existence.

Annual Supper of C. A. I. L.

The annual supper of the Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor was held May 1st. The Rev. Joseph Reynolds presided and gave an address of welcome. Addresses were also delivered by Bishop Potter, Commissioner Henry C. Johnson, of the State Board of Mediation and Arbitration; F. F. Mackay, president of the Actors' Association; Edward A. Moffat, editor of The Bricklayer and Mason, and Miss Mary Maloney, president of Local Union No. 50, of the United Garment Workers. In accordance with the plan adopted last year, Sunday, April 30, was selected for a "Labor Mission." Clergymen in this vicinity were asked to preach sermons in the interests of labor. The official service of the Association was held at St. George's church, the preacher being the rector, the Rev. William S. Rainsford, D.D. Seats were reserved for delegates from labor organizations.

Protest Against Dr. Briggs' Ordination

The rector of St. Peter's church, Westchester, the Rev. F. M. Clendenin, D.D., has addressed an energetic protest to Bishop Potter, objecting to the ordination of Dr. Briggs in his parish church, on the ground that since his ordination as deacon he has issued a rewritten edition of his book on the Bible, which it is claimed is at variance with the doctrines of this Church. The book represents the extreme views of Biblical criticism, in an enlarged form, which occasioned the writer's discipline by the Presbyterian denomination. There is no public claim that Dr. Briggs, though seeking the priesthood, intends to forego his present work as a teacher of future schismatic preachers in a theological school having no affiliation with the Church. The Rev. Dr. Clendenin ends his letter in these words:

It grieves me, my dear Bishop, to add any trouble to your already overburdened life, but I feel there is nothing left for me to do, but to ask you kindly to withdraw the ordination from St. Peter's church. For some two hundred years this venerable parish has stood by the Holy Scriptures, "as this Church hath received the same." I have no right to involve its record. Lastly, Reverend Father in God, until he has renounced his errors, I solemnly protest against Charles Augustus Briggs, doctor in divinity, being ordained anywhere by our Bishop to the priesthood of the Catholic Church.

This letter, which was given to the press, was followed by the publication of a letter from the Rev. Dr. Wm. R. Huntington, April 28th, in which he deprecated the attack on Dr. Briggs, and announced that he had offered to Bishop Potter the use of Grace church for the ordination. The following day Bishop Potter allowed it to be known that he had withdrawn the ordination from St. Peter's church, Westchester, at the request of the Rev. Dr. Clendenin, and that he had declined the offer of the Rev. Dr. Huntington, having made other arrangements, but not specifying of what nature.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Mr. George W. Jacobs, treasurer of the Lenten and Easter offerings, reports that up to 28th ult., he has received from 110 Sunday schools, $12,263.

The memorial church of St. Paul, Overbrook, Philadelphia, has taken title to property on Lancaster and Overbrook aves., 340x198 ft., for $10,200. Ground will be broken in the near future for the new church edifice.

At the unveiling of the heroic bronze equestrian statue of General Grant on the 27th ult., in Fairmount park, Philadelphia, Bishop Whitaker invoked the Divine blessing, concluding with the Lord's Prayer and lesser benediction.

On Wednesday morning, 26th ult., at St. Simeon's memorial church, Philadelphia, the Rev.

Edmund Burk, rector's assistant of that parish, was united in holy matrimony to Miss Blanche Alena Clark, of Swedesboro, N. J. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Jesse Y. Burk, father of the groom, with the assistance of the Rev. Edgar Cope, rector.

Mahlon N. Kline, accounting warden of the church of the Saviour, West Philadelphia, on Sunday afternoon, 23d ult., assumed charge of the Sunday schools of that parish, vice Col. O. C. Bosbyshell who, after a service of nearly 40 years in Sunday school work, has resigned, on account of failing health. The school has a membership of over 700.

St. Mark's Church, Frankford

The men of this parish were entertained at the annual supper which was given in the parish house, on the evening of St. Mark's Day. There were about 150 present. Toasts, speeches, and music by the choir, enlivened the evening. The Rev. John B. Harding, rector, responded to the toast, "Our parish," and Francis A. Lewis, Esq., a guest, spoke on "The advantages of a large parish." The Rev. Robert Bell, rector's assistant, also made an address.

Sons of St. George

The society held their 127th anniversary banquet at St. George's Hall, Philadelphia, on the 24th ult., when nearly 200 members were in attendance. The Rev. Dr. James S. Stone, of Chicago, responded to the toast, "England," and, in the course of his remarks, pointed out that the century practically opened with Nelson's victory at the battle of the Nile, and it closes with the victory of Dewey, at Manila, in whose veins flows Nelson's blood. "The same spirit still animates the Anglo-Saxon race, and there is not a man here to night who does not wish to have his children love this country as dearly as their fathers were taught to love the land of their birth." The Rev. Dr. H. Richard Harris responded to "The pulpit."

Girls' Friendly Society

The annual diocesan council and conference of associates of the G. F. S., was held at the Church House, Philadelphia, on the 21st and 22d ult. There was a large attendance on both days. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the chaplain of the society, the Rev. Dr. J. DeW. Perry, who also delivered an address. The reports read showed a membership of about 1,300, and the working associates—all of whom are communicants—number 259. The annual election resulted as follows: President, Miss Helen J. Wright; vice-president, Miss M. A. L. Neilson; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Arthur Wells; assistant secretary, Miss C. R. Hensell; and also 15 new members of the council whose names had been approved.

Daughters of the Revolution

Nearly 300 members of this society assembled at Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') church, Philadelphia, on Sunday afternoon, 23d ult., where, after Evensong had been said by the rector, the Rev. S. B. Simes, the anniversary sermon was preached by Archdeacon Brady, on "The value of self-sacrifice." The quaint old church was appropriately decked in blue and gold, alternating with the national colors. The Daughters, on retiring, were each presented with a card containing the history of the church since its organization, in 1677. On Tuesday, 25th ult., the Daughters, among other localities, visited the Betsy Ross house, where the first American flag was made by that noted old Churchwoman; old St. Peter's church, old Christ church, and Franklin's grave, in Christ church cemetery, which they decorated with flags and flowers.

New Parish House in Norristown

Ground was broken on the 22d ult., for a parish house for All Saints' church. The rector, the Rev. W. Herbert Burk, officiated, assisted by the Rev. Isaac Gibson, rector emeritus, and the Rev. Harvey S. Fisher, rector of St. John's church (of which All Saints' parish was formerly one of its chapels), the Rev. John W. Kaye, a former minister-in-charge, the Rev. Messrs. A. A. Marple and W. McGlathery. The Rev.

Jesse Y. Burk, father of the rector, delivered the address. The new edifice is to cost \$20,000, and is the gift of Miss Elizabeth Swift. It will be built of rough-dressed marble, to correspond with the material in the church, but will be an entirely separate building, joined by a portico affording a common entrance to both house and church, and producing the appearance externally of one building. The parish house will be $2\frac{1}{2}$ stories high, 55x65 ft. The basement will be used for Church society purposes, including a dining-room and kitchen. On the first floor will be five rooms for the Sunday school. The assembly room, in the form of an amphitheatre, with sittings for 450, will include the entire second story, and is to be so constructed as to be easily divided into class rooms. The semi-story will consist of a balcony for the assembly room.

Nebraska

George Worthington, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop

The offerings in St. Barnabas' church, Omaha, on Easter Day, were $425, not $150, as reported in our last issue.

At Trinity cathedral parish meeting, held on Easter Monday, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved: That Trinity cathedral, Omaha, in its annual parish meeting assembled, this third day of April, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine, hereby expresses its profound sorrow that the critical condition of Bishop Worthington's health necessitates his prolonged absence from the diocese; but most sincerely his cathedral indulges the fond hope that by perfect rest and the skillful treatment of the specialists, under whose care he accedes to the contemplated change, Bishop Worthington may secure once again that strength of which he is now deprived in his extraordinary exertions as the Bishop of the diocese of Nebraska.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

North-Western Convocation

The spring session was held in St. Mark's church, Toledo, April 18th and 19th. On Tuesday evening, Miss Mary Hutcheson, of Columbus, read an admirable paper, on "A resume of Sunday school matters and methods," Churchly and up to date. It was made clear that when our Sunday schools use all the most improved modern methods in vogue in our public schools, they will then be simply applying the principles of the Prayer Book. Discussion followed the paper, and Miss Hutcheson answered questions put by clergy and laity. On Wednesday an address by the Rev. F. E. J. Lloyd, Mus. Doc., pointed out under six heads, lettered C. H. U. R. C. H., that music must be, 1st, C., Churchly; 2d, H. Hearty; 3d, U., Universal; 4th, R., Reverent; 5th, C., Congruous; 6th, H., Holy. The subheads and illustrations were well worked out, and it was an interesting and profitable address. Hymnology was the next theme, and in a paper read by the Rev. A. R. Taylor, received very full treatment. The Rev. George S. May, the oldest member of the convocation, read an interesting autobiographical account of his very successful work during 18 years in Delfance and parts adjacent, where his parish has secured during his time $10,000 of property (a fine church and rectory), and become a live Church centre, providing services for Hicksville, Napoleon, Bryan, and other places. The Rev. J. W. Thompson preached on "The mutual duties of clergy and laity towards missions." At the annual election, the Rev. W. C. Hopkins, D.D., was nominated to the Bishop to be appointed dean; the Rev. W. C. Clapp, secretary and treasurer. The convocation nominated to the convention for the diocesan missionary board, the Rev. E. V. Shaler and Mr. Walter Hodges, a vestryman of St. Andrew's church, Toledo.

The North-Eastern Convocation

A successful meeting was held at St. Paul's church, Conneaut, April 17th-18th. The Rev. Dr. Peirce, president of Kenyon College, made an address on Church colleges. On Tuesday, at 7 A. M., Holy Communion was celebrated; at 9, Morning Prayer, and an address by Dean Frazer, on convocational work. A business session was held, 12 clergymen being in attendance. It was decided to hold a summer meeting at Boardman. The Rev. Messrs. Frazer and Kell were re-elected dean and secretary. Dean Frazer was elected as clerical nominee for the missionary committee, and Mr. W. W. Scupholm, of Cuyahoga Falls, the lay member. The Rev. F. B. Avery read an interesting paper on parochialism. The usual mission prayers were said at noon. After an excellent luncheon, served by the ladies of the parish, a conference was held, the Rev. Dr. Burrows reading a helpful paper on "The Bible class," and the Rev. H. M. Ingham making an excellent address on "The teacher's responsibility in Sunday school work"; these topics were also discussed by the members of convocation. At 7, evening service was held, and the Ven. A. A. Abbott made an address on "Church extension in Ohio."

Rhode Island

Thomas March Clark, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Easter at Auburn

Easter was a notable day at the church of the Ascension, for several reasons. It was the first Easter with the new chancel arrangements; it was the last Easter with a debt on the organ; and the church was the recipient of a beautiful silver chalice, which was used then for the first time. The organ was marked with the silver cross of the King's Daughters, and inscribed as follows:

To the glory of God. Presented to the church of the Ascension by the St. Cecilia Circle of King's Daughters, 1890-1899. "Praise Him upon stringed instruments and organs."

The new chalice was given by the St. Agnes' guild, and is of solid sterling silver, gold plated. It stands nine and a half inches high, and around the knob of the stem is set six garnet carbuncles, and in the front panel of the base is a cross with with carbuncle in the centre and a pearl in each arm. In the other two panels are chased in high relief the symbols of the Sacrament, the sheaf of wheat and the grapes.

South Dakota

William Hobart Hare, D.D., Bishop

The Eastern Deanery

The Bishop lately made a round of visitations, in which, by the use of a carefully prepared plan, he was able to have service during two weeks, ending Easter Even, in three of the most important towns in the State—Watertown, Huron and Aberdeen—as well as in nine smaller towns—Arlington, De Smet, Redfield, Mellette, Groton, Bristol, Madison, Howard, Flandreau. In only three of these smaller towns have we church buildings, but in all of them there are a few Church people who value the services of the Church, and keep together "in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship and in the breaking of bread and in the prayers," notwithstanding drawbacks and discouragements. In those in which we have as yet no regular services, over 20 persons have been confirmed during the last 18 months. During the month of March the Bishop was in a different town each day for 13 consecutive days, occupied 11 different beds in 13 nights, and had occasion to remark that nobody, no bed, had a chance to get tired of him.

Easter Offerings.

In Yankton, the services during Lent were well attended. Easter Day 70 communed. The offering was $107; the Sunday school offering for missions, $19. Many representatives of the Masonic fraternity were present in the evening. Seven persons were baptized during Holy Week, and a large class is preparing for Confirmation. In Huron five were confirmed at the Bishop's visitation in March. The Easter congregations were large; the offering, $175, to be applied towards paying the debt on the church building. At Mitchell, the Sunday school Lenten offerings for missions averaged 35 cents for each pupil. At the annual parish meeting, the reports showed a balance in the treasury, after paying all obligations, and an increase in the number of communicants during the year. The interest in work in this mission at Vermillion, which is in charge of a lay-reader, is steadily increasing. A large number of students from the State University attend the services, sing in the choir, and in many ways assist in the missionary work.

Visit to Aberdeen

The Bishop visited this important parish March 26th; 21 were confirmed. Easter was "a red-letter day." The Sunday school offerings were $26. Four were confirmed in Groton on the 27th. The outlook here is very encouraging. The same may be said, indeed, about every place in which services are held regularly.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Grace Church, Elmira

The Rev. Wm. Harman Van Allen reviewed, on April 23d, his two years' work in this parish, with satisfaction at the progress made in all departments, but urging the need of improvement in some directions. During the last year 76 communicants have been added, 10 adults baptized, and 46 infants; Confirmations have been 47, as against 40 the year before.

Centennial of St. Luke's, Harpursville

This was observed in connection with the spring meeting of the convocation of the Third District, April 17-18th. Addresses were made by the Rev. J. H. La Roche and the Rev. Dudley Chase; sermons by Dean Quinell and the Rev. E. W. Colloque; and Confirmation administered by the Bishop. Letters were read from former rectors, and papers presented by Mr. Emerson Demeree and the present rector, the Rev. H. M. Brown. The Rev. Mr. Chase's address was about his father, the Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, and was read by the Rev. Ernest Melville.

Death of Rev. Henry Dows Stebbins

The rector of Emmanuel church, Norwich, died early Sunday morning, April 23d, at Cornwall on the Hudson. Mr. Stebbins had been in poor health for a year or more; typhoid fever, followed by pneumonia, caused his decease. He was a graduate of Amherst College and Berkeley Divinity School. His rectorship at Norwich covered ten years, and was marked by increasing efficiency and good fruits. The funeral was held in Emmanuel church on the 25th ult., conducted by the Bishop, and attended by the clergy and a large sorrowing congregation.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Choir Guild of Long Island

The ninth annual choral festival was held April 27th. In the morning there was a choral celebration of the Holy Eucharist in St. Luke's church, Brooklyn. In the evening the service was in Grace church on the Heights. The Bishop was unable to attend, but a large number of clergymen were present. Preliminary to the service proper, the orchestra and organ played Verdi's Seventh Symphony, and then the choirs, comprising about 350 voices, advanced up the main aisle, the processional, "Brightly gleams our banner," being inspiringly rendered. The choirs were from ten of the principal churches of Brooklyn, and that of the cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City. The Rev.

G. Calvert Carter was cantor, and Frank Wright, precentor. Evening Prayer was read, Henry Gadsby's Magnificat in C major being sung between Lessons. The anthem, "My soul truly waiteth," in D flat major, by Bruce Steane, was sung by all the choirs with fine effect. At the offertory, Haydn's hymn, "Glorious things of Thee are spoken," followed. "Blessed be the God and Father," S. S. Wesley, introduced a solo soprano boy voice, and fine fugue effects. Most effective, however, from the point of grandeur, was the singing of Haydn's chorus, "The heavens are telling," from the "Creation." An address was made by the Rev. Frederick Burgess, giving an outline of the history and progress of the Choir Guild, and setting forth the importance of high grade music in places of worship. The Te Deum, by G. C. Martin, followed, and after prayer and benediction, the processional, "O what the joy and the glory must be."

Archdeaconry of Queens and Nassau Co.

The annual meeting was held at the cathedral of the Incarnation, April 26th. A service at the cathedral was conducted by the Rev. Wilmer P. Bird. An address was made by the Bishop, on "The motive for missions." Luncheon was served at the See house, Mrs. Bird and Mrs. Bryan acting as hostesses. After luncheon, the guests visited St. Paul's School. At the business session, the Bishop presided. Mr. G. Webster Peck was unanimously re-elected secretary. P. R. Jennings, of Meyrick, was elected treasurer; Augustus Rapelyea and W. R. Griffith, lay members of the missionary committee; Rev. Messrs. G. W. Davenport, Kirkland Huske, and W. Wiley, members of the executive committee. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $237 50. It was decided to begin mission work at Hicksville.

St. Peter's, Brooklyn

The Rev. Dr. Lindsay Parker, the rector, has sailed for Europe, where his presence is needed to arrange business of a family and personal nature, his mother having lately died. In advance of Easter Day, Dr. Parker requested an offering of $3,000 to meet the requirements of the parish, and the response was something over the amount asked for.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

The Massachusetts Altar Society gave away the last conventional year 146 articles, valued at $662.68.

The City Board of Missions closes the conventional year with a balance of $1,200.

St. Paul's church, Beachmont, is about to build a rectory.

The rector of St. Peter's church, Beverly, the Rev. E. J. V. Huiginn, was married, April 26th, to Madeline Clinton O'Brien, daughter of the late Mayor O'Brien, of Boston, a well-known friend and adviser of the R. C. Archbishop of Boston. The family have recently renounced Romanism for the Church Catholic. Mr. Huiginn was formerly a Roman Catholic priest.

St. James', Amesbury, Destroyed by Fire

The rector, the Rev. R. LeB. Lynch, is making a strenuous effort to rebuild. There was $5,300 insurance on the building, but the mortgage amounts to $2,350. The people have already subscribed $800, and probably $2,500 will be raised in the town itself, including the amount promised by the parishioners. This will leave a large sum to be furnished by the diocese or outside sources, so that the church may be rebuilt free from debt.

The Episcopalian Club

The new president, Mr. J. W. D. French, presided at the dinner in Hotel Brunswick, April 24th. The topic for discussion was neighborhood Church work. The Rev. Dr. Cunningham, rector of St. Mary the Great, Cambridge, England, made the first address, in which he outlined the difference between charity work in England and the same work in America. In England, the clergyman never gives relief per-

This institution is under the care of the Sisters of Bethany. The grounds are very extensive, affording plenty of play room for the children. There are four Sisters in charge. At present, 77 children are cared for. On Sunday afternoon, April 10th, there was a large gathering of clergy and laity at the home to witness the Easter commemoration of the children. Bishop Sessums gave an address, and the singing of the Easter carols by the children was very enthusiastic. The Rev. Dr. Warner said a few words, and distributed books and medals to the children.

Editorials and Contributions

St. Philip and Samaria

TO say of the Church that it is the Church of a class in society, is to utter the severest criticism possible.

If it is founded in fact, it is of little avail to hang our heads in shame unless we also seek to relieve the Church from the dreadful imputation. We must renounce the ambition, if it is ours, to minister only to the respectable and the cultivated and the wealthy. We must cultivate the spirit of St. Philip who (Acts viii: 5) "went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them." In other words, he went whither his feelings as a lordly Jew forbade him to go. Had the old Hebrews' arrogance been uppermost in his mind, he would sooner have died in Jerusalem as St. Stephen died. Had he consulted flesh and blood, he would have preferred to bear the Gospel to African heathen, or to the ancient scenes of his nation's captivity by the rivers of Babylon. But the grace of God in his heart moved him to seek out the despised and the execrated, and bring the power of the Gospel to bear upon those who for centuries had been the enemies of the Jew.

OUR attainments in the way of race-hate are not slight, but we can scarcely imagine the intensity of bitterness which existed between the Samaritan and the Jew. When a Jew would exhaust the malignity of his heart against another, he would say: "Thou art a Samaritan and hast a devil!" If a Samaritan had touched anything, that thing was to the Jew as swine's flesh. The Samaritan was publicly cursed in their synagogues, could not be summoned as a witness in Jewish courts, could not be admitted to any sort of proselytism as other heathen could; and, in fact, so far as the Jew could affect his position, he was excluded from the remotest possibility of future happiness. St. Philip was born and bred to this ineffable hate. There is no temper of the human soul more inexorable than hereditary prejudice. Nothing but the philanthropy which is learned at the feet of the Nazarene can eradicate it, and even this expulsive force made slow progress in the minds of some of the Apostles who would have called fire down from heaven to avenge an inhospitable slight put upon Jesus Christ by a Samaritan village. But the Lord rebuked them and said: "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of, for the Son of Man is come not to destroy men's lives, but to save them." St. Philip had a tenderer heart than they, perhaps. At any rate, impelled by love of souls, he went down even to Samaria.

AND this is the genius of our holy religion. It inspires the breast with a fervent evangelism which leads men to go down—down to the lowly and despised—down to the outcasts of society—down to those needy souls who will not come to us—down with the cup of cold water and the word of love and sympathy to the suffering children of poverty and irreligion! And the Church is beginning to feel more profoundly that her mission is not to spread banquets for clusters of privileged saints gathered in splendid temples, but to go out with Christ-like zeal and invite the masses to come and partake of the Bread which nourisheth unto everlasting life. There are Churchmen who have remained in Jerusalem too long—too long worn the fetters of a narrow Jewish exclusivism; and the effects are manifest in the ecclesiastical pride and the spiritual lethargy which so largely prevail. But the music of breaking and broken fetters is beginning to be heard in the land, and Christian hearts and hands, emancipated from long bondage, are leaping forth, eagerly, to Christian work. The Church is confronting herself with the terrible destitution which can be seen from her very doors, and putting the question whether she must not go down in the name of God to the mighty conflict of good and evil, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," and win to the standards of Immanuel a great host from the multitudes of those who now "care for none of these things."

Necessity for a Standard Bible

A PAMPHLET has come to hand, entitled "The Peace Cross Book." It is very beautifully printed in red and black, and contains a number of illustrations. Besides an account of the exercises at the unveiling of the Peace Cross on the site of the cathedral at Washington, and the addresses made on that occasion, it contains an account of the reinterment of Bishop Claggett's remains, and the order of service used thereat. This took place at St. Alban's church, in close neighborhood to the site of the future cathedral. "The Peace Cross Book" will be a pleasant souvenir for those who had the privilege of witnessing the ceremonies which it commemorates, and will be useful by way of drawing renewed attention to the great enterprise of establishing a cathedral worthy of the American Church, at the capital of the nation. A beautiful sketch of the unveiling of the cross is contributed by Thomas Nelson Page. A sermon by Dr. Dix is also printed, in which an account is given of the proceedings of the General Convention and the events associated with it, among the rest, the ceremonies of the Peace Cross. These, with a few other interesting papers, make up a little volume which has a true historical interest.

OUR attention has been drawn to a feature of "The Peace Cross Book," which has an interest of its own altogether apart from the purpose of the book. On page 55 are printed the Epistle and Gospel which were read in the service at the reinterment of the remains of Bishop Claggett. An esteemed correspondent asks from what version this Gospel is taken. The passage is St. John vi: 37-40. A moment's glance shows that, although it is apparently translated from the received text, it is not the King James Version. Neither is it from any of the modern revised versions known to us. It is possible that it may have been taken from one of the older English translations, such as the Geneva or the Bishops' Bible. But those we have not at hand. Can it be a translation made to hand for the occasion? Whatever its source may be, it is a poor substitute for the familiar rendering. The slip in grammar, especially, in the first verse, "he that cometh to Me I will not cast away," is particularly unfortunate. But we do not cite this for purposes of criticism, but as an illustration of certain possibilities. If the doctrine were to prevail among us which the English bishops have recently enunciated for the Church of England, that there is no authorized version of the Bible, and no law to prohibit a clergyman from using any translation he may prefer, we might come to witness a widespread freedom in this matter. Let us imagine for a moment a state of things which would allow one clergyman to read the lessons from the Authorized Version, another from the English or American Revised Bible, another from the Douai Version, and still another from a translation of his own. Yet such a license as this becomes distinctly possible under the principle laid down in England. The conservatism of the English character may be a sufficient protection against such dire confusion there, but let no one imagine that there would be no advantage taken among ourselves of so broad a principle when its bearings were once seen.

NOW that we are approaching the era of multiplied English versions, and more than one are demanding recognition already, it is high time for the American Church to take this matter in hand, and by definite legislation, to protect her people, at least in the liturgical use of the Sacred Scriptures, against individualism. Many object to the use even of different hymnals in our churches, and the General Convention has done much to forward the cause of uniformity in this department of worship, notwithstanding it remains a matter of mere choice whether hymns are used at all at our regular services. How much more objectionable, then, that in the reading of Holy Scripture, which is an integral and very important part of our daily offices, the door should be left open for indefinite variation. We do not believe, to be sure, that there is any such license under our present law, but it must be confessed that that law is not in a satisfactory position, so long as there is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any single Convention from adopting a special version, or authorizing more than one, or giving general liberty, after the manner of the English bishops. We have the old version, the English Revised Bible, the American Revised Bible, the Baptist Bible, the Bible for Modern Readers, and on the way are the new American Bible and Mr. Stead's Bible. Others might be added to the above list, but they are of an eclectic character, and probably need not be seriously counted. While the work of amending the Constitution is in progress, we trust this matter may receive the attention its importance deserves. In fact, a committee was appointed at the recent General Convention to deal with the subject and report in 1901.

IT appears that some persons are opposed to the idea of a special standard to be set forth and sanctioned for exclusive use as the source of the lessons to be read in the services of the Church. They contend for the liberty of choice, on the ground that if things are left to take their natural course, the "fittest" version will, in the end, survive and supersede all others. They appeal to the precedents of the Anglican Church from Elizabeth's reign onward. In Henry the Eighth's time, the Great Bible of 1539 was authorized as the Standard Bible for use in the churches of the realm, to the exclusion of previous translations. But in the early part of Elizabeth's reign, the Genevan Bible, which was in point of scholarship much in advance of previous translations, attained a very wide circulation in England. It was the work of the most extreme wing of the English Calvinists who, during the Marian exile, took refuge in Geneva. Both in the words employed in the translation and in the running commentary of explanatory notes, it fulfilled the purpose of a "Calvinistic manifesto." Archbishop Parker was much dissatisfied, and saw the necessity of setting forth a version for use in the churches which should be free from sectarian bias. As a recent writer has said: "To have silently acquiesced in the free circulation of the Genevan Bible, side by side not only with the Great Bible, but with Coverdale's and Matthew's Bibles, would have been to condone a medley of authorities that fell little short of spiritual chaos." The outcome of Parker's endeavors was the Bishops' Bible of 1568. Yet this failed to receive the Queen's formal sanction, without which it could not be ordered, under penalty, for exclusive use. She still refused, as she had done before, to allow any version to be "either abled or disabled." Archbishop Parker has indeed been recently quoted as agreeing with this policy. In a letter written in 1565, giving license for the printing of an edition of the Genevan Bible, he used these words: "It shall nothing hinder, but rather do much good, to have diversity of translations and readings." But it is overlooked that in this same letter he indicates his intention of bringing this condition of things to an end. "Though one other special Bible for the churches," he says, "be meant by us to be set forth, as convenient time and leisure hereafter will permit." He thus makes it plain that he does not intend to allow such a loose condition of things to continue indefinitely. Perhaps the good which he contemplates as coming out of "diversity of translations," is partly that it will help to make men see the necessity of one authorized version. The policy of the Queen, however, thwarted the action of the Archbishop and convocation, and the Geneva Bible continued to be used by the Puritan faction. To one who considers the history of the period, it can hardly be regarded as a fortunate policy for the Church. Unquestionably it greatly aided in developing and strengthening the Puritan movement until it reached such a height of power as to accomplish, for a time, the overthrow of the Church itself. If we appeal to precedents, it is instructive to observe just how this particular precedent came to be established. Its results, also, were of such a nature that it would seem very far from a desirable thing to adopt it as a perpetual rule. Certainly the danger of something like "spiritual chaos" in the presence of a medley of versions was never so great as at the present time.

— x — Brief Mention

THE tenth anniversary proceedings at Fond du Lac made a fine showing of progress. The interior of the cathedral is said to be a perfect repository of art. The Grafton Hall buildings are very impressive. The episcopal residence is quite beyond anything in the West.

HERBERT SPENCER does not take to Socialism. He sneers at "these days of rampant Socialism when the great mass of legislative measures extend public agency and restrict private agency; the advocates of such measures being blind to the fact that by small steps they are bringing about a state in which the citizen will have lost all freedom." Mr. S. knows very well that Socialism is an attempt to make up for the loss of individual morality. If men will abuse their freedom, they must lose it. When the private conscience is corrupt, the common conscience of society steps in to regulate matters. But who has done more to corrupt conscience than the man who makes men believe that it is altogether uncertain whether there is a God or no?

HERE is something fine from the German poet, Claudius (1740-1815): "Above all do I like to read the Gospel of John. There is something truly wonderful in it; twilight and night, and athwart flashes the vivid lightning. A soft evening sky, and behind the sky, in bodily form, the large full moon. Something so sad, so sublime, so full of presage, that one can never weary of it. There is a great deal that I do not understand when I read, but I often feel as if John's meaning were floating before me in the distance. Even when my eye lights on a dark place, I have, nevertheless, a presentiment of a grand and glorious sense that I shall some day understand. On this account I grasp eagerly at every new exposition of John's Gospel. But alas! the most of them only ruffle the evening clouds, and the bright moon behind them is left in peace."

THE latest form of immorality is this: "The principle of liberalizing interpretation may be carried a little further than can be justified by strict insistence upon the rule that words must be taken to mean what they are generally understood to mean." That is, it is better to be "liberal" than to be honest.

OF John Neill who died in Philadelphia, one of his acquaintances said: "I like John Neill because he brought his religion down town"; and another said, "John Neill was a Christian seven days in every week." The open secret of his manly and unselfish life was that he not only professed the Catholic Faith, but lived it, in humility and gentleness and truth.

THE Rev. H. B. Pratt, sent to San Juan, Puerto Rico, has done brave work in establishing the Church in that island. It is believed that a church will soon be built. Mr. Brown, late chaplain of the "Rough Riders," is now of a regular regiment on the island. An English priest officiates at Ponce, and a colored priest from North Carolina, on the island of Vieques, to the east.

THE recent Funsten case is likely to bring up the advisability of making changes in the canons with regard to the office of presiding bishop. It is a pity to burden the most venerable of our fathers in God with troublesome details of business and questions difficult to solve.

Father Austin and His Teachings--XVIII.

BY THE RT. REV. DR. McLAREN,
BISHOP OF CHICAGO

(Copyright, 1899.)

A COMPANY of the clergy were discussing the relative value of sermons, and one of them exalted the efficacy of preaching above all other instrumentalities.

"Well, yes," said Father Austin, after a pause, "great is the sacrament of talk! I admit it; but it is not for you or for me to say how much our sermons accomplish. I imagine they share the fate of the sacraments of the Gospel, which are often neutralized by sin and indifference. I imagine a large proportion of our talk is water spilled upon the ground."

"But," replied the other, "you often hear from the people how much good such and such a sermon has done them, but do they ever come to you to tell of the benefit they have received from the sacraments?"

"Most distinctly they do; and often have I heard trembling lips tell of the blessedness of the Communion. Only last week a man said to me (his eyes suffused with tears) that he never could forget the day when episcopal hands were laid upon his head, and he received the Holy Ghost. Do you see this ring? A lady gave me that as a token of gratitude for her Baptism. Yes, when God's sacraments are received as they should be, they tell with power upon souls, though not always emotionally. You cannot have missed seeing the pretty remark of the humble woman who said she did not know much of God's ways of doing things, but her Communion always made her think of sheep-washing in the brook hard by; the sheep goes into the swift-running waters stained and soiled, but comes out white, while the little stream flows on and on. She did not know quite how it was done, nor did she seem to have any great stir of feeling about it, but this she knew, that her Communion always made her stronger of will to do God's Will. And so it is with thousands, although they do not find any need to say much about it. But, on the other hand, there are many vain oblations through folly and carelessness, and there are many sermons that are idle pratings, for the same reason."

Then he compared the honest simplicity of this old woman with the frivolous and superficial tribute paid to the value of a sermon, of which he remembered to have read somewhere. The parishioner said:

"Some weeks ago you preached a sermon, I might say a great sermon, and never shall I forget it. It was an extraordinary effort, and made me think about things, don't you know? Oh, it did me a lot of good!"

The clergyman did not remember this particular sermon, and so he asked what it was about. "About! Why, you remember what it was about, don't you? It was about—about—er—let me see; what was it now? H'm, h'm-m-m; why, the fact is,—Oh, yes, it was about—er—acting up to things, you know, and—er—yes, that was it—acting up to things." The clergyman said he had preached many sermons along that line, but what was the text? "Oh, the text! Yes, the text! Well, I think it was out of—of—of— (curious, isn't it, that I don't recall it?) It was out of one of the Epistles, or, was it out of the Gospels? Strange that my memory fails me; or was it in Revelation? It must have been, for I am almost sure it was in the New Testament. My dear, what was the text of that sermon we all admired so much?" But neither could "my dear" remember it!

"There is a vast deal of that type of appreciative listening going on all the time," said Father Austin, "and I sometimes think too much preaching accounts for the number of spiritual dyspeptics among us. People want to enjoy sermons as the epicure does his delicatessen—not for nutrition, but for pleasure. Is it not curious how some of them will rebel at flowers and lights in honor of our Lord's Presence, and yet demand sermons full of fireworks and oratorical bluster? It is a vitiated taste, and does not at all stand for religious aspiration and growth. You might as consistently stock the diet-kitchen of a hospital with 'angel food' and 'cracker-jack' as seek to interest men in their souls' well-being by such preaching. We must return to simplicity and instruction. There are hundreds upon whom the 'fine' sermon has palled, who will stay away from church until the pulpit begins to meet their real needs. Here is a poor soul that wants to know some of the methods which mature disciples have discovered of resisting the temptations of the flesh. He knows what they are, but the preaching he has heard for a lifetime has not told him anything practical about overcoming them. He hungers to hear how to do it, and the sermon tells him all about the pictures at the academy, and the lovely pessimism of Ibsen, or perhaps informs him that there were two Isaiahs, and that our Lord's miracles were successful hypnotism. Rather sickly provender that for a hungry soul! No wonder there is such a plethora of emptiness in the pews!"

"Do you remember Lachlan Campbell's rebuke of the young minister's pedantic sermon? The latter was surprised, and asked what was wrong with it. 'There was nothing right, for I am not thinking that trees and leaves and stubble fields will save our souls, and I did not hear about sin and repentance and the work of Christ. It is sound doctrine that we need, and a great peety you are not giving it.'

"We will all agree that the great need among Christians is reformation of life. Well, then, the preaching must be reformed. There must be a stop to fireworks and flowers, and the endless flow of hortatory drivel, and the benumbing monotony of those little moral essays; and there must be a return to simplicity and instruction, for the Gospel is not a fountain of sanctimonious gush, but a treasure-house of ideas, golden, clear-cut, eternal, made to meet the spiritual need of man. Of course those who have contracted the sermon-habit will squirm and demand their usual doses, but after a while their pains will pass, and they will be quite satisfied with plain, substantial teaching."

"Beg pardon for the interruption," said one of the clergy, "but that reminds me of a parson who laid aside philosophy and began to preach the words of Jesus, and was in due time honored with a visit from a parishioner who entered the complaint that she did not enjoy his preaching as she used to, for, to be frank, his sermons now were too easily understood!"

"And that reminds me," rejoined Father Austin, "of the old Scotch woman whom the minister questioned about the doctrine he had preached the last 'Sabbath,' and who replied: 'Dear meenister, it's not for the likes of me to be understandin' your sermons. It wudna be verra ceevil.'"

Then Father Austin resumed his talk about simplicity and instruction, and urged us to persevere in spite of obstacles and protests, for much depends upon pulpit courage. He believed the people who are tired of the fireworks and the tinkling platitudes far outnumbered the victims of the sermon-habit, and they had a right to be heard in the matter. He was quite out of patience with the kind of sermons the reporters want. He remembered that it was said of Archbishop Leighton, gentle, tender, and pious, from his earliest years, that when he was criticised for not preaching "up to the times," he replied that he wished one poor brother might be permitted to preach Jesus Christ.

After the company had dispersed, one who was present amused me very much by telling me of an incident in Father Austin's earlier experience. A man of large business activity and much wealth, but deplorably vulgar and ignorant, called on him one day, and undertook to give him some advice for the betterment of his sermons. The good priest tried to restrain himself, but did not make a brilliant success of the effort; so, when he could endure impertinence no longer, he burst out—

"Look here, my friend, if I should call at your counting-room to-morrow, and propose to you to make radical changes in your methods of conducting your business, what would you say?"

"Say, sir? Say? I would say nothing. I would point you to the door!"

The answer was so brusque and violent that Father Austin at once became calm, and determined not to answer a fool according to his folly; but he leaned that way when he said: "There is a remarkable similarity between your office and my study. Each has a door!"

Bishop Grafton on English Church Issues

THE Bishop of Fond du Lac thus writes to The Chicago Tribune, under date of April 12, 1899:

Allow me, as a subscriber, to protest against what seems to me to be a gross misrepresentation by your English correspondent concerning the English Church issue. He states, as if it was a late event, "that the extreme party, under Lord Halifax, has formed a Church Union." Now this Union has been in existence thirty years. It has about seventeen bishops for its vice-presidents, over 4,000 priests, and over 30,000 lay subscribing members. There are double the number of priests, and many times as many laymen, who sympathize and agree with the principles of the Union. If the American newspaper editors would exchange with The Church Times, London, which has the largest circulation of any Church paper, or with The Guardian, which represents the conservative Church party, fewer mistakes would be made.

The English Church Union, or High Church party, has no wish to revive mediævalism or reunite with Rome. They have no wish to undo the work of the Reformation in delivering the Church from the Papacy. They are thoroughly loyal to the Reformation settlement as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer. They do not attack Low Churchmen, but claim that their own rights within the comprehensive limits of the Church should be respected. It is a slander to say that the Union has "incited the clergy to disobey the rulings of the bishops." Lord Halifax and all those acting with him have decidedly taken the opposite ground. They have counseled and urged obedience to the bishops, and by their work and actions the Catholic Churchmen have shown a loyal spirit.

What is true is that they are not willing to obey "the Judiciary Committee," which is a new court appointed by the State, which is not in accordance with the Reformation settlement, as Gladstone declared, and which has no ecclesiastical authority. The High Churchmen are contending, while admitting that coercive jurisdiction always lies with the State, that Church matters should be determined by Church tribunals. And it is noticeable that their contention was recognized as a proper one by Mr. Balfour who said that, "in his opinion, the English Church, like the Scotch Established Church, should enjoy greater autonomy than it does at present, since it is evident the Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council is not capable of deciding spiritual matters."

The effort to stir up Parliamentary interference against the Catholic or High Church party has, both in the Commons and House of Lords, signally failed. The two Archbishops have announced that they will themselves hear the ritual and other matters in dispute, and have announced that they will hear them independently of any decisions heretofore made by the Privy Council; and the Catholic party, by the advice of Lord Halifax and the English Church Union, have consented to their jurisdiction.

There is not the slightest danger of any disruption in the English Church. Only those may think so who do not know the Church or the character of Englishmen. The more probable result will be that the two parties in the Church, after hammering each others' heads, as Englishmen are wont to do, will arrive at a better understanding, and the High Church party will practically lose nothing, but emerge triumphantly in gaining for the Church a greater freedom from State control.

CHARLES C. GRAFTON,
Bishop of Fond du Lac.

Letters to the Editor

"IS THERE ROOM?"

To the Editor of The Living Church:

I want to thank Dr. McConnell for his timely article, the timeliness of which is evidenced by the amount of discussion provoked, and from which we may hope much good may result. For the most part, however, those who have spoken look on from afar. It would be well if we could hear from some of the rank and file—men who are making the sacrifices which all preach, but many never experience; men who are enduring the hardships entailed by present conditions.

The question, as I understand it, is not one of theory, but of fact, and business methods, not sentiment, should prevail. It is not whether we have a sufficient number of men in the ministry to furnish the ministrations of the Church to every town and hamlet in the land, but has the Church at her disposal more men than she can properly care for and utilize for the most efficient service? If so, is it wise to go on increasing the number by ordaining young men, not to go into mission fields, but to take the places of older men who are turned out on the common?

This, together with the large influx of denominational and foreign clergy, is likely to produce an unhappy condition, creating a body of mendicant priests, supported by scanty alms, oftentimes extorted from those who despise the Gospel, or by moneys secured by questionable methods. Fancy St. Paul urging men to attend a fair, dance, minstrel show, or such like, for the purpose of raising money to preach the Gospel of the Son of God! It is a misfortune beyond expression when money for the support of the Church has to be raised in any other way than by the consecrated liberality of her children. The Church calendars for 1899 report about twenty per cent. of the clergy as non parochial, and an examination of diocesan and missionary statistics reveals very few vacancies of any kind. My own Bishop told me very lately that there was scarcely a day that he did not receive application for work, and I can not believe that Western Michigan is such an attractive field as to be distinguished in this respect.

Now, it may be said that many of these non parochial clergy are employed—still they are employed in work which does not require a priest of the Church, and many of them, I doubt not, are so employed from necessity. It may be said that some of them are not fitted for the work. Then greater care should be taken in the selection of men. The responsibility rests on those who stood sponsor for them. It is time to recognize that grace is not an all-sufficient qualification for success in the ministry, and that symptoms, at least, of the other elements should be manifest before ordination. Certainly something must be wrong, and I cannot believe that all the wrong is with the clergy, when there are forty or more applicants for every vacancy, however small. I have heard, in one instance, of as many as a hundred, and in the case of a parish to which I was afterward invited, I read a number of applications, with letters of commendation and newspaper clippings. Candidating, about which much is said, however unfortunate, is in my opinion hardly worse than the political methods sometimes adopted, not only in filling a rectorship, but the episcopate. Success in one case rests at least on some merit, while in the other it is secured by obtaining some one of influence to manage the wires.

The Church must have the power to limit or increase, and direct and control her forces, to obtain the best results with the least expenditure. Three suggestions occur to me, which might be a partial remedy for present conditions.

Let every young man seeking Holy Orders be subject to the ecclesiastical authorities for five years. Then a bishop could select strategic points with some guarantee that they would be occupied more than a few months. Many a mission, now dead, would have become a good parish with five consecutive years of faithful service.

Let some of our clergy whom God has blessed with means take up their residence, without charge, in some promising field where only the best can succeed. Such a spirit of self sacrifice would be contagious and far-reaching in its consequences. The Gospel of sacrifice cannot attain the full measure of success, when sacrifice is the result of necessity.

Let preferment and promotion in the Church be based upon merit, length and efficiency of service, and not on influence, social, family, or financial, none of which things especially qualify a man to preach the Gospel of the kingdom of heaven. The Church is the only field where prizes are offered for immaturity and inexperience. I have even heard it said that a mitre may be won by ineffectual parochial administration, or through the influence of those who do not appreciate the dreamy somnolence produced by soporific preaching.

THE PEACE CROSS BOOK

To the Editor of The Living Church:

The Gospel from St. John vi: 37-40, as given in the "Peace Cross Book," is taken from the English version of the Holy Scriptures of 1539, sometimes called "the Great Bible," and also, from Archbishop Cranmer's association with the work of its translation, "Cranmer's Bible."

Here--There

BY VIRGINIA C. CASTLEMAN

Here, beauteous flowers bloom, but only to decay;
There, fadeless blossoms open in radiant array.

Here, happy little children are growing old in sin;
There lives the innocent forever pure within.

Here are the glowing faces of a transient youth;
There, changeless beauty of the glorified in truth.

Here, hearts that love must suffer deepest mortal pain;
There to abiding love the heart will wake again.

Here, sweetest human friendship needs have its taint of earth;

There, in the light of heaven, true friendship has its birth.

Here, every joy must be shadowed by darksome grief;
There is the sweet fulfillment of the soul's belief.

Here is the weight of mystery and the mind's unrest;
There is the light of knowledge and end of mortal quest.

Here, man with dual nature in constant strife must be;
There, sanctified forever, his spirit is set free.

Here, fairest hopes of earth in graves must be buried lie;
There, conquered death itself, "last enemy," must die.

Shall man then ever here but gloom and sadness see?
Not so—Rejoice! for there is immortality!

We Know Not How or When

BY MARGARET DOORIS

We know not how, we know not when,
 But little things have power.
 The very smallest seed we sow
 Becomes a perfect flower.

So little deeds of kindness done,
 We know not how or when,
 Take root and grow to marvelous strength
 Within the hearts of men.

All love, all light, we shed abroad,
 God's love doth multiply.
 We know not how, we know not when,
 Our good deeds soar on high.

There all our kindly, tender acts
 Are turned to riches then,
 Awaiting us in Paradise,
 We know not how or when.

A Sharp Contrast

CHRISTMAS dawns. Behold! the courts of the Lord's house are thronged to do homage at the manger cradle—to welcome Him who has taken our nature upon Him, hailing Him as Prince of Peace, though He come but as lowly Babe "in ox stall"; prompted with real devotion, they fill His courts and throng His altars.

But what of

"The day that sees Him rise Upward to His native skies?"

Have we adored Him who took our nature upon Him, and shall we be indifferent when, oh, wonder of wonders! He takes that nature up to the throne of God? Alas! how great a contrast, even in these days of quickened observance of the Christian Year! On Christmas Day, our churches filled with devout worshipers; on Ascension Day, where are the multitudes that kept the Feast of the Nativity? And yet the Church provides in her offices as fitly for the honor of her ascending Lord as she does to welcome His coming. "He that ascended is the same also that descended."

Some one has well called Holy Thursday the top round of the golden ladder of sacred observance of the events that marked the human life of our Divine Lord. Surely, we are not following as we should "the blessed steps of His most holy life," unless we follow, with the disciples, the Risen One when He leads them out as far as Bethany and up the Mount of Ascension.—All Saints' Parish Record.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

MANY a reader of our periodical literature will appreciate this witticism taken from an exchange: Returned Naval Hero: The next thing I remember was the order, given by the admiral himself, to flood the magazines." Listener: "Yes, and every one of you, from the admiral down, is still engaged in carrying it out."

HOW our judgments are governed by our view-points, is well illustrated in the following story: An old Scotch woman was walking to church with her family. The auld Kirk minister rode past at a tremendous rate, and the old lady said to her children: "Siccan a way to be ridin', and this the Sawbath Day. Aweel, aweel, a gude man is marcifur' to his beast!" Shortly afterwards her own minister rode past just as furiously, and the worthy old wife cried: "Ah, there he goes! The Lord bless him, puir man! His heart's in his wark, an' he's eager to be at it."

"THE Actors' Appeal to the Clergy to Assist in Suppressing Sunday Theatrical Performances," is signed by F. F. Makay, president of the Actors' Society of America, and contains such sentiments as the following: "The opinion has long prevailed that the actors of this country are in favor of the assignment of Sunday, like all other days of the week, to secular labor for financial gain. For many years the actors have protested against Sunday theatrical performances of any kind whatever, as a usurpation of a right enjoyed by all other citizens—a right to one day of rest in seven." The appeal goes on to say: "The Sunday theatrical performance is such a radical wrong—so demoralizing, not only to the actors, but to the community in which the performance is given—that I think it should be the first point of attack." The Actors' Society of America recently adopted, by a unanimous vote, resolutions protesting against theatrical performances on Sunday.

A CHURCHWOMAN who has been visiting Cuba, writes to Miss Emery: "It would be a difficult matter to teach these people a religion of self-denial, and one for which they must pay. But, on the other hand, the thing must be done, and the Church is losing golden opportunities every day. I feel that our Church is called to this great work; in every way it is better fitted to cope with the situation than is any other Protestant body. It is more liberal, broader, more able to adapt itself to circumstances. Beautiful property can be bought here for a song. It is going up in price every day, and a year from now four times the sum will be paid that could be expended now to advantage. Missionaries coming here need not be regarded as martyrs; they will have a most agreeable life. The country is beautiful, and the climate delightful."

IN an interesting article in The Independent, the Rev. R. S. Storrs, D.D., LL.D., the Nestor of Congregationalist preachers, points out some reasons for the decline of interest in and power of the pulpit to-day, and shows how these have also affected other public speaking. What used to be known as "the eloquence of the bar," is practically stifled. "Arguments of two, three, five, even of seven hours, in exciting and critical cases, were not unknown in Massachusetts fifty years ago. Now the briefest argument alone is allowed. The court rooms are therefore coming to be as barren of elaborate eloquence as asphalt pavements are of vines and rose bushes. They are for the rapid transaction of legal business, not at all for the exhibition of high art and culture in forensic debate."

"THE same tendency," says Dr. Storrs, "appears in legislative assemblies. Parliamentary eloquence in Great Britain is far less copious and accomplished than it was a generation or two ago, in spite of the seemingly opposed example of Mr. Gladstone. It is plainer, more practical, more limited in range. . . . Even in our vociferous Congress the prevailing temper has come to be: 'We're in a hurry. Business presses. Print what you have said in the Record, and the government will pay for it, but don't take time in talking it out.' The reverberating senatorial debates of forty to seventy years ago, which then engaged and stimulated multitudes of minds, are now noiselessly buried in volumes on the shelves. They are not reproduced. The pulpit cannot escape the restriction which is elsewhere so controlling."

TO quote once more from Dr. Storrs:

Life is more superficial than it was, because more hurried; it is less reflective and introspective. The keen and profound sense of sin in the heart more rarely appears. The sombre, yet illuminating, shadow of eternity lies more lightly, if it lies at all, on minds absorbed in business activity. The duty of the soul to itself and to God is scarcely a matter for intent and prayerful consideration; and the swift whirl of affairs on the tangible earth shuts from sight the august and inexorable processes of the divine jurisprudence, with which every personal will was used to feel itself in vital relation. So the whole air of society is incessantly affected adversely to the appeals of the Gospel. The former conditions gave a resonant medium to the voice of the preacher, where now he is like one trying to shout or sing in an atmospheric vacuum.

THE Society for Instruction in First Aid to the Injured, begun some years ago in the Church of England, has held in New York during the past year 77 classes, attended by 695 men and 415 women, and has endeavored to reach every class in the community. Notable classes have been held at the parish house of Grace church, at St. Bartholomew's church, and St. Agnes' chapel, and the Cancer Hospital, conducted under Church auspices, and before St. Barnabas guild for nurses. Since the organization of the New York branch, 11,102 persons have taken the course of instruction offered, and of these, 7,188 have passed an examination and received diplomas. Hand books giving information for the treatment of emergency cases of injury, have also been circulated to the extent of 2,795 copies, and greatly aided in the saving of human life.

The Swedish Church

BY THE REV. HERMAN LINDSKOG, RECTOR
OF ST. ANSGARIUS', CHICAGO

READ BEFORE THE NORTH-EASTERN DEANERY OF CHICAGO, AND ALSO BEFORE THE SWEDISH CHURCH ASSOCIATION

THE canonical name of the Church of Sweden, as it has been handed down through the centuries, is the Swedish Church, or the Church of Sweden. Politically, it is often called Evangelical; popularly, it is styled Lutheran; still, none of these names can be found in any canonical or constitutional codex of the Church. As we speak of the Church of England or Russia, we have to use the same emphasis on the word Church when speaking of the Church of Sweden.

Sweden to-day numbers more than 5,000,000 inhabitants belonging to the Church, which stretches forth its branches to, and covers, every nook and corner of the country. Certainly there are Roman Catholics, Baptists, Methodists, and Jews to be found here and there in Sweden, but their number, all told, is not 120,000 dispersed on an area that is more than three times as large as that of our grand and noble State of Illinois. Sweden contains, namely, 170,713 square miles, when Illinois only has 55,414.

Sweden is to-day ecclesiastically divided into one archdiocese and eleven dioceses. These twelve dioceses again are divided into one hundred and eighty deaneries and 1,360 parishes, each having its rector, and many of them two to six, or even more, assistant clergy.

In the ninth century, for the first time, the Church was planted in Sweden. Ansgarius, by birth a Frenchman, is the honored apostle of the North. With true apostolic devotion, self-denial, and zeal, he brought the hardy, stubborn Vikings to the Cross. He built the first Christian chapel in Sweden. From 829, to the year of his death, 865, he had supervision of the missionary work there. He died as Archbishop of Bremen, where a beautiful monument is raised to his memory.

The Church begun was not by any means the Church secure and safe among the heathen inhabitants of Sweden. It remained for English missionaries, under the leadership of the devoted Sigfrid, most appropriately called the second Apostle of the North, to establish it more firmly. He baptized the first Swedish king, Olof Skotkonung, in the year 1007, and from that time the Christian religion can be said to exercise a desired and desirable influence and power. In fact, about the year 1080, hardly a heathen could be found in Sweden, except in the most distant parts of the land.

The successors of St. Ansgarius on the archiepiscopal throne in Bremen, on the southern shore of the Baltic Sea, now called Germany, had the supervision of the Church of Sweden until 1104, when the Bishop of Lund, in the southern part of Sweden, was made an archbishop, and the Scandinavian countries became a Church province. But within 50 years from that time we find Norway having an archbishop of its own, and in 1164 was the first Swedish archbishop consecrated—Stephen, who immediately made Upsala the archiepiscopal seat. From that time we find the Church of Sweden obtaining one after another of all the privileges enjoyed by other Catholic countries. Her clergy could only be tried before ecclesiastical courts, her property or possessions were exempt from all tax paying, she could receive and hold all legacies given her, and giving tithes to her was common throughout the land.

Although the Church of Sweden from its beginning can be said to be officially connected with Rome, it is yet a fact that the Swedish people had paid a very scant homage to the Bishop of Rome. On the other hand, the papal curia had exercised a very weak pressure on the Swedish Church. Not before the year 1248 was celibacy urged upon the Swedish clergy, but did not enter into a general practice for a long time.

About one hundred years before that time, or 1150, Sweden had five regular dioceses, with their bishops, cathedrals, and chapters or consistories. From the year 1250 these bishops, and others in new organized dioceses, were elected by the clergy alone, and consecrated by the Archbishop of Upsala, making thereby Sweden an independent Church province, with a perfect hierarchy. Before that time the Archbishop of Upsala had to be consecrated by the primate in Lund, he, as well as his suffragans, qualified "cleri electione, regis consensu, ac populi petitione"; something to be especially remembered as an exceptional practice in the whole Occidental Church. In other countries the laity and the minor clergy were excluded from taking part in the election of a bishop; in Sweden not so, where all priests and laymen voted, and after the king had given his consent the bishop-elect was consecrated. The same principle prevailed as to rectors and settled clergymen in parishes, the bishop's consent given instead of the king's. Such was the practice in the Church of Sweden for more than three hundred years until the year 1250.

From that year the Papacy made its imprimatur more and more felt, now and then befriending the political government, in order to gain earthly possessions and secular power; at other times taking a diametrically opposite stand, not only to the rulers of the land but also to the people. I do not need to specify the abominable irregularities the papal curia made itself guilty of during the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries. May it suffice to state that Sweden was no exception from other countries in that respect, and that Roman heresies, in spite of the strongest protestations, invaded the land, and the Roman despotism became more and more unbearable.

But the dawning of a brighter day came. As early as 1519 purer doctrines began to be heard in Sweden, introduced by a young man, Olaus Petri, who for three years had pursued his theological studies at the University of Wittenberg. A year after his return to Sweden, he was ordained deacon by his bishop, and given an appointment at the cathedral of Strengnas. The dean of the cathedral chapter, Laurentius Andreæ, was soon won over to the Protestant cause, and through him the regent, Gustavus Wasa. The greatest caution was used in promulgating the Protestant ideas. Under no circumstances would it be admitted that it was a new faith; it was the old apostolic Faith, once for all times delivered to the saints, purified from the papal heresies, that was now proclaimed. The New Testament was soon thereafter for the first time translated into Swedish. In the year of 1541 was the whole Bible translated.

The diet in Westeras, 1527, became the turning point of the reformation, or, rather, restoration, of the Swedish Church. Then and there it was positively decided that nothing but the divine truth, as found in the now opened Holy Scripture, should be preached in the Church of Sweden, and that the king, and not the Pope, should exercise the highest authority over the same. Yet it required more than sixty years to fully define the position of the Church, and make the reformation an accomplished fact. It was at the great Church council held in Upsala, 1593, where the bishops and representatives of the Church from all parts of Sweden, had convened—priests to a number not less than 300—that it was solemnly and unanimously resolved that the Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation, and that the doctrines of the Holy Scripture were rightly put forth in the three oldest symbola and the first original Augsburgian Confession, or Confessio Augustana. With this resolution, the work of reformation, or restoration, of the Church of Sweden can be said to have been perfected. The episcopate and the ministry remained the same, all the essential features of true Catholicity were retained. For the Latin Mass and the superstitious legends of Rome, were substituted what I until this day called the Swedish High Mass, and the simple teachings from the Holy Scripture in the Swedish tongue. The king regained his position as the summus episcopus, confirming and executing the decisions of the Church. The king's authority in the Church was not a new and Protestant doctrine in Sweden. The oldest Swedish law, since five hundred years back, contained the following article:

When a bishop shall be chosen, then shall the king ask all living in the province whom they will have, and the king shall put the staff in his hand and a golden ring on his finger, then he shall be led to the church and enthroned; then he has received full rights to the office, as soon as he has been consecrated.

This shows in fact that the power of the investiture belonged to the king, and not to the Pope, for centuries before the Reformation.

After the Reformation and the above-mentioned Church council of Upsala, 1593, we find the Church going steadily forward, boldly and enthusiastically rejecting and crushing even the strongest efforts to re-Romanize or Calvinize her; at the same time, resisting all encroachments or inroads made time and again by the king on her canonical or spiritual rights. None of the Swedish kings, perhaps, ever had a greater place in the heart of the Swedish Church and nation than Gustavus II. Adolphus. Still, when he proposed that a consistorium ecclesiasticum generale should be instituted in Sweden, similar to those in Protestant countries on the continent, consisting of six clerical and six lay members, and forming the highest tribunal under him to decide all doctrinal and ecclesiastical questions, then the Church, through her bishops, took a decided stand against that proposition and such an innovation, plainly telling the king and his counselors that curam religionis et judicium de doctrina et sacramentis Ecclesie, episcopis et pastoribus esse commissam. Sacerdotibus in Veto Testamento hæc cura et judicium committitur; Apostolis et eorum successoribus episcopis et presbyteris in Novo Testamento. The result was that the consistorium ecclesiasticum generale suddenly died soon after its birth, to the great displeasure of the king.

The same spirit still lives in the Church of Sweden, and seems in these later years to grow more strong, aroused by a free Lutheran movement within her, whose leaders pose as great martyrs, because they cannot rob her of her canonical rights. More jealously than ever is she guarding those in our days, and it seems to my mind only a question of time when the Church of Sweden shall leave her long-occupied, isolated position, and we all will see her come out with flying banners of true Catholicity.

Church and State in England

THE splendid activity of the bishops when Disestablishment in Wales was threatened in the previous liberal Parliament, only serves to cast a deeper shadow upon them when they are weak in spiritual matters. They showed then that bishops can work with tremendous effectiveness when they will. Are the endowments, the incomes, the material fabric, of the Church in the Welsh dioceses more worthy of protection than are the spirituality and independence of the whole Church of England. Is it a greater blow to the Church to seize a few of her buildings and a part of her endowments and apply them to secular uses, or to rob her of her whole spiritual heritage of speaking as God commands her, and make of her only a bureau of the State, speaking the voice of Parliament? The bishops were united, firm, and vigilant where pounds, shillings, and pence were involved. Will they be less so when the Church demands that her ancient spiritual liberties be restored to her? It is idle to pretend that the issues which have so distracted England for a year past are incense or no incense, reservation or no reservation. These, and many other questions of detail which are discussed, are but phases, and the least important, of that fundamental question which the Church of England must solve: Is it the Church of God, or a bureau of the State?—The Church Eclectic.

True Heroism

MR. J. W. DOANE, a gentleman who lived at the Windsor Hotel, has sent $500 to The Evening Post to start a fund of $10,000, which it is hoped will be raised for the support of the mother and two sisters of William Guion, an elevator man at the hotel. Other contributions have swelled the fund at this writing to more than $3,000. Guion had been employed at the Windsor for twenty years, and had charge of the elevator when the fire broke out. He stood his ground gallantly, and kept his elevator going through smoke and the gravest peril, repeatedly bringing down loads of frightened people. When the collapse of the building became imminent, he was pulled out of his car by the police. But he was not yet ready to run. It has been said that the elevator bell rang again. At any rate, he started up for one more trip: On his way down, the top of the shaft fell in. The car stopped, and he and whoever was with him were caught and died.

When has there been a nobler instance of devotion to duty than this? Running an elevator is pretty humdrum work, about as little adapted, apparently, to develop heroic qualities as any work that can be imagined. But there was hero stuff in Guion. For him the little tinkle of his bell in that fiery confusion was a signal no less august than the voice of God. Up he went again on a sacred mission, and out of that cage in which his body was entrapped his soul went to his Maker.

Manhood came out strong at that fire. The courage and effective work of the firemen saved many lives, and have been praised and honored, as they should have been. But the firemen have taught us to expect heroism from them. William Guion's fine devotion may not be qualified even by the suggestion that it was part of his business, except in so far as it is every man's business, when the pinch comes, to remember that he was made in God's image, and must not disgrace the uniform of clay that clothes his spirit.—Harper's Weekly.

Book Reviews and Notices

The Capsina. An Historical Novel. By E. F. Benson. New York and London: Harper & Bros.

The Capsina proves to be a fine young Greek girl, of heroic mould, who is left at nineteen, by the death of her father, head of the clan of Capasas. She builds ships, sails them, and fights the Turks, with a fine disregard of the limitations of her sex. Finally she falls in love with one who came to her, as her dreams had prophesied, "from the sea, all sea and sun, strange and strong." But, alas! the "little Mitsos," so dubbed in loving mockery of his tremendous strength and stature, knew not of this presentiment, and before coming into knowledge of the Capsina, had given his life and his love into the hands of another. This other is Suleima, womanly, wise, tender, and loving, his wife and the mother of his boy. Very striking and dramatic is the association of the two women, so unlike in every respect, but finally united by the common bond of love for Mitsos and the "littlest one," his small son. As the story turns upon the struggle between the Greeks and the Turks, of course there is much of fighting by land and sea, in all of which the Capsina bears a gallant part. One wishes that she might have found a fitting mate, and become the illustrious founder of a noble line, instead of meeting the tragic fate which was the inadequate reward of her great deeds and her splendid life.

An Introduction to the Study of Literature. For the Use of Secondary and Graded Schools. Edited by Edwin Herbert Lewis, Ph D. New York: The Macmillan Company. Price, $1.

In selecting and classifying the lyrics, ballads, and short stories found in Prof. Lewis' excellent new volume, the young student's normal interests are made the standard. There are one hundred and fifty compositions included, most of them complete. Each of the ten chapters into which the book is divided, is prefaced by an introduction, indicating the general meaning of the pieces. Chapter I has four illustrations of the nobility of animals; the next two chapters are devoted respectively to the heroism of war and the heroism of peace. The athlete, the adventurer, the gentleman, are also described and interpreted in three more chapters. The last division is entitled, "The Far Goal"; it is designed to aid youth to desire and to attempt to realize its ideals. Indeed, the whole book is admirably qualified to elevate and strengthen mind and soul.

The Span o' Life. By William McLennan and J. N. Millwraith. New York: Harper & Bros. Price, $1.75.

The glamour of the falling House of Stuart, the incidents of Canadian frontier life, and the clash of French and British interests, all find place in this well-told story. As a piece of collaborated literary work, it is quite curious. A man writes and a woman writes, but the work is unmistakably one, in style and sentiment. All through one moves in an atmosphere of romance. The fortunes of the Chevalier Maxwell, an adherent of the ill-starred Prince Charles, are followed with interest. The sad entanglement of a concealed marriage, the cross purposes of love's caprices, the fortunes of flood and field, the varied characters of warriors, priests, and Indians, make up an entertaining volume, well worth reading, coming to a satisfactory finish, but not without the necessary shadow of sadness, without which life cannot be.

Florida Alexander. A Kentucky Girl. By Eleanor Talbot Kinkead. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. Price, $1.

This story indulges freely in superlatives. The heroine, Miss Florida Alexander, is "the most beautiful woman in the South." The hero, a Bostonian, a "Brahmin of the Brahmins," is named Mr. Edward Winthrop St. John. He is introduced to the reader as one who bore "the marks of a more than ordinarily vigorous mentality," one who kept constantly in view the higher ideals of life. Also "he continually worshipped and offered impassioned tributes before the shrine of the ideal, as expressed in nature and humanity." That is perhaps why he impresses a matter-of-fact reader as embodying too much of the author's ideal, thereby lacking the semblance of reality, a trait, however, shared with the other characters in the book.

Joubert. A Selection from his Thoughts. Translated by Katherine Lyttelton. With a preface by Mrs. Humphry Ward. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.

In his seventy years Joubert saw the old Europe disappear, the new one appear; he passed through the Revolution and the Terror; he was the counsellor of Chateaubriand; he knew Diderot at the height of his power; and he outlived Napoleon. These thoughts are "the quiet, life long deposit of himself," Mrs. Ward says, and they well hold a modest, yet enduring, place in French literature. Mrs. Ward's preface is admirable in its appreciation of one who was in his life superior to his work, and who had the unity that that lacked. In the last chapter is Joubert's estimate of himself: "I am like an Æolian harp, that can sound a few beautiful notes, but cannot play one air. No constant wind has ever breathed upon me." That is less than many an appreciative reader has said and will say.

The River Syndicate, and Other Stories. By Chas. E. Carryl. With Illustrations. New York and London: Harper & Bros.

"The River Syndicate" is one of a collection of seven stories. Five besides the title story deal with rascals and their varied rogueries, and the way in which they are brought to justice through the shrewdness of detectives. The second narrative, "The Pasha Club," is an account of a practical joke. The tales will be best liked by those who care chiefly for incident and adventure in fiction, and are indifferent to the development of character. The book is well printed, and has an effective cover design.

The Order for the Burial of the Dead, as set to Music by Merbecke, harmonized by Sir John Stainer; together with a Selection of Suitable Hymns. New York: Novello, Ewer & Co. Demi-octavo; pp. 32; bound, 40c.

A handy little volume, with complete musical office, including Stainer's "Sevenfold Amen" and an appendix of nine choice hymns set to compositions by Sir George Martin, Sir John Stainer, A. H. Littleton, A. H. D. Troyte, Sir Arthur Sullivan, and two by the late Sir Joseph Barnby. Everything needed for burial occasions, to be found in a single slight volume, and by the best masters, is indeed a boon to choirs.

The Vision of Righteousness; Aids to Meditation. By the Hon. Mrs. Lyttelton Gell. London and New York: Henry Frowde. Price, 2s. 6d.

While intended for use during the season of Lent, these meditations may be profitably studied at any time. There are many valuable suggestions in them, and we commend the book very highly to our readers who desire to attain to the spiritual life.

Faith Building. By William P. Merrill. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 25 cts.

There are many minds and hearts to whom this little book will minister. While we cannot endorse all his views, the author has yet grasped firmly the idea of the necessity of a sound faith as a foundation for a holy life.

Love to the Uttermost. Expositions of John xiii-xli. By F. B. Meyer, B. A. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.

There does not seem to be anything extraordinary in the chapters of this book. The discourses are full of what is very commonplace and unattractive in style. The book contains a great deal of that sentimental religion which is encouraged in revivals, but has more froth than substantial nourishment.

The Religion of Mr. Kipling. By W. B. Parker. New York: M. F. Mansfield & A. Wessels. 32 mo. Pp. 22. Price, 50c.

In this little volume, dainty as to style, is set forth an enthusiastic appreciation, very well written, of some of Mr. Kipling's religious views, as evinced by his works in prose and verse.

We are pleased to note that Messrs. James Pott & Co. have in preparation "The Life of James DeKoven, D.D.," late warden of Racine College, by the Rev. Wm. C. Pope. Nothing could be more welcome than an appreciative biography of the loved and illustrious DeKoven, and the one who has undertaken the work is well fitted for it.

A VERY pretty Certificate of Confirmation, prepared by Miss Edith Beach and Mrs. John Binney, Middletown, Conn., has been published by L. Prang & Co., Boston. The centre, containing the inscription, is white, with a delicate background of blue, bordered with lilies. The scriptural texts are in gold letters, and are suggestive of the relations of the confirmed to Christ and His Church. It is an attractive and helpful Confirmation gift. Price, ten cents, with discounts to the clergy and parish societies.

Periodicals

Liquid air, which has recently been attracting so much of the attention of scientists all over the world, has now reached a point where the general public is asking for accurate information about it. Hence, no doubt, an article is devoted to it in the May issue of Appleton's Popular Science Monthly. The author, Ira Remsen, is professor of chemistry at Johns Hopkins University, and one of the leading chemists of the country.

Instead of wasting time and space in fighting over again the battles of the late war, The International gives its readers valuable information concerning countries where we Americans should be making commercial conquests right now. The International has just finished a serial on Mexico, and this new one on Venezuela promises to be quite as interesting. It is by Tommaso Calvano, whose serial on Guatemala, published in The International three years ago, met with such widespread interest and popularity.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews for May devotes considerable space to a survey of recent developments in American cities. The editor comments on the re-election of Mayor Carter Harrison in Chicago, on Mayor Jones' remarkable triumph in Toledo, on the Detroit project for municipal ownership of the street railways, and on the general situation in Boston, San Francisco, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Denver, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and New York. Dr. Shaw also contributes a special study of the new San Francisco charter—a remarkable document in its way—and Mr. George E. Hooker gives some interesting facts about Mayor Quincy's administration of Boston.

Good Housekeeping for May opens with an illustrated article on the "First Cooking School in Bulgaria," by Emma Paddock Telford; Hester M. Poole writes of Notions and Novelties in the Metropolis; "Seasonable Menus," by Margaret Burroughs, includes a spring luncheon; there is a valuable symposium, "What shall the Children Eat?" treated by four able writers; Margaret Bisland, in "The Domestic Problem," discusses the relations of mistress and maid; Minna C. Hale has a paper on "Planning a House"; while there are shorter articles on a great variety of interesting subjects, and a digest of recent household inventions. [$1 a year; George D. Chamberlain, publisher, Springfield, Mass.]

A careful study of the subject of "Swedish Orders" will appear in The Church Eclectic for May, June, and July, from the pen of the Rev. Francis J. Hall, D. D., professor at the Western Theological Seminary. The publishers suggest the importance of the subject to the whole Church Catholic, and particularly to the Bishops of the Anglican Communion. The papers are the result of very careful research on the part of the author. The three numbers will be supplied within the United States and Canada for 75 cents; to England, the Colonies, and the Postal Union, 8s. Subscription to the entire volume, 12 numbers, beginning with April, 1899, to the clergy, at the rate of $2.00 (laity, $3.00), in the United States and Canada; clergy, 10s., laity, 12s. (postpaid) in England, etc. Address, The Young Churchman Company, Milwaukee, Wis., U. S. A.

In Blackwood's for April, the article which has the first place is on "The Thames as a Game-Fish River," a subject which seems to have become suddenly interesting to British readers, as we find an article on the same subject in another magazine of the month. The weird tale entitled the "Heart of Darkness," is concluded in this number, as is also the melancholy "Autobiography of a Child"; while "Like to Like, A Trivial Romance," is begun. Under the title of "Christian Quackery," the so-called Christian Science is handled with such withering ridicule and sarcasm as most sane people will think to be well deserved. The people who have come under the influence of this strange delusion seem ordinarily to be invulnerable to ridicule, as well as to any other kind of criticism, otherwise they could hardly stand against the keen shafts levelled at their system by such a trenchant writer. The article may do good, however, to those who have not yet been thrown too far off their balance. Other articles are a sketch of travel in Galician Poland, entitled, "At the Back of Beyond"; an account of the retreat from Leipsic when the first Napoleon suffered his crushing defeat in 1813, now first published from the account of a survivor, a young French officer. A recently published life of George Borrow is severely criticised, as not so much a biography as a "rubble heap." True to its traditions, Blackwood's finds the cause of the writer's defect easily intelligible: "He has failed because he is an American. He surveys the ordinary facts of Borrow's life with the astonishment of a yokel gazing at the Lord Mayor's coach." It is said of Borrow that "he deserved a better fate than an American biographer." A sketch of "The Nevada Silver Boom"; a criticism of Hume Brown's "History of Scotland"; a chapter of international politics in connection with China, and the reflections of the "Looker-on," in which the bishops are loftily lectured from the Erastian point of view, which "Maga," associates with its high Toryism, complete the number.

N. Y. Evening Post

THE ARMY CANTEEN.—The controversy over the army canteen is temporarily ended by the extraordinary decision of Attorney-General Griggs that liquor may be sold on premises used for military purposes, despite the fact that Congress expressly provided (1) that no "officer or private soldier shall be detailed to sell intoxicating drinks as a bartender or otherwise, in any post, exchange, or canteen"; (2) "nor shall any other person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort, or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States." To the ordinary, unexpanded mind these two provisions would seem absolutely to forbid the sale of liquor on military premises, by either a person in the military service or any other person; but "Glory-crowned Heights" Griggs, with his intelligence full of expansion, has decided that "it would be lawful and appropriate for the managers of the post exchanges to employ civilians for that purpose." We have read more than once the alleged reasoning by which the law officer of the government reaches this extraordinary conclusion, but we can make neither head nor tail out of an argument that when a law says that liquor shall not be sold on certain premises by anybody, it means that it may be sold by somebody. However, what Griggs says "goes," and the whole controversy will have to be reopened next winter, with a view to seeing whether a law can be passed which means, in the Attorney-general's opinion, what it says.

THEMES FOR THE PULPIT.—These are the mysteries that the Christian minister is specially educated and specially engaged to expound. It is to them that he owes his peculiar character, and the peculiar veneration that is paid him. When he abandons these to enter into the controversies of the hour, secular or otherwise, he becomes a mere lecturer, whose opinions carry no more authority, and give no greater edification than those of any other thinking man. This fact has a most important bearing on the subject of church organization. If people want to hear lectures on sociology, it is not necessary for them to keep up a church establishment on that account. There are courses here and courses there which are delivered by experts who devote their lives to sociological work. Some of them, in discussing the problems of the times, will say as Dr. Thomas does: "The one solution that I can see in the future is some form of co-operation, some form of materialism. It doesn't hurt me if you call it socialism." Others are individualists, like Spencer; still others are anarchists. But however dogmatic any of them may be, they make no claim upon any body of people because of the divine nature of their mission.

The Examiner (Baptist)

FAMILY RELIGION.—Both from the Old Testament and the New, instances in abundance might be added, to show that it has ever been the aim of revealed religion to embrace the family. The subject is one that may well claim our serious attention in these later days. Family religion is not observed nor esteemed as it once was. Perhaps some explanation of the declension may be found in the peculiar tendency of our institutions to foster individualism; but a more direct and sufficient cause is the indifference of heads of families. Absorbed in cares for the comfort and advancement of their children, they reverse God's order, and sacrifice spiritual to temporal well-being. Of late our Churches have been both working and praying for a revival of religion. Such an awakening is profoundly to be desired; but we are convinced that prayer and labor will be in vain until there is a revival of religion in the homes of the people.

The Household

My Jewels

BY LIZZIE BURGESS NICKERSON

I've a perfect set of jewels,
Shall I tell you of their worth?
For value them more highly
Than all other things of earth.
And the setting is so simple
You would never guess the prize
Could be held in such a casket,
Daily seen by mortal eyes.

First, I have a cozy cottage,
Nestled in a garden green,
Where the woodbine and the roses
Creep the lattice-work between;
Where the feathered songsters warble
Notes of gladness 'mid the trees,
And the honey-scented clover
Lends a perfume to the breeze.

Then I have a dear companion
Who is honest, good, and true,
And we love each other dearly—
Do you wonder that we do!
For our hearts drew near together
By a holy passion led,
And our love has grown more perfect
Every year since we were wed.

These are what I call "my jewels."
All a-gleam with beauteous light,
And my home nest is the casket
That contains these jewels bright.
Are they not a rare possession?
I've not told you half their worth—
Ah, I value them more highly
Than all other things of earth.

CHAPTER XI.

MR. UNDERHILL sat in his study chair before the plain desk whose shelves held all his modest library, his fine head bent in thoughtful consideration of a letter which he held. His wife was beside him, her hand resting on his shoulder, and her eyes eagerly bent on the same letter.

"Evelyn," said the clergyman, looking up at the girl's entrance, "Griffith hath writ to you also, but I fear the contents of your parcel will bring grief to you, as mine has done to me."

With a sinking heart, Evelyn stretched out her hand for the packet, and her fingers shook as they touched those of Mr. Underhill. She was conscious then of no distinct thought, but she remembered afterward that her guardian looked old and broken in the searching winter sunshine. Thus ran Evelyn's letter:

MY OWN SWEET ONE.

There is but a brief space in time to get off a Packet for the Mails, so I must e'en ask indulgence for a short missive. Indeed I am heartily weary of lengthy discoursing, believing that the greatest events of our Lives can fittest be expressed with epigrammatic brevity, after the manner of the Ancients. Know then, O fairest one, that I have decided to remain sometime longer abroad, having the post of chaplain to the Lord Bishop of — offered me, in conjunction with a Canonry in the cathedral, and a Residence in the Close. It seemeth too good an opportunity to be wastefully neglected, and as the troublous times at home make great hindrance to the spread of the Church, I feel justified in my decision. I know your keen intelligence will see all in the right light. Dear Evelyn, if you should later hear of anything in my Course which may seem to prove me unfaithful to the Boy and Girl love which we once professed, forgive me, and think as kindly of me as you can. Alan will prove a stronger stay to you and to my Father.

Adieu, my sweet one,
From your fond and Unworthy
Griffith.

The letter dropped to the floor, and Evelyn sat, quite quiet, on the window seat. Her eyes were turned toward the hillsides where the sheep-huts glittered under their snowy roofing, but she saw nothing of this outer world. The pages of Griffith's letter were burning themselves into her memory—not only the actual words, but what she could read between the lines of the decay of affection, of the conceit wrought by flattery, of the greed of preferment, of the caprice of a new love. Every word was as gall to the heart of the girl.

And this change in Griffith, her Griffith, had been wrought in the short space of a twelve-month! No, had it? Had they not all contributed to it for years by their almost worshipping admiration of the eldest son? He had been his parents' pride, the favorite everywhere. Invidious comparisons had always been drawn between him and Alan, if not in words, at least by implication. And she herself? Had she not been o'er easily won? She had dropped into her wooer's outstretched hand like a tame pigeon, only to be lightly tossed back to the fluttering dove-cote.

Evelyn's cheeks burned, and the sweet curves of her mouth drew themselves into harder outlines. A sigh from the quiet figure at the desk reached, but did not at once appeal to her.

"Chaplain?" "Canon?" Aye, why not dean and bishop? Alan had always said that Grif. would be a bishop. And Griffith, for his part, counted on Alan's fidelity to those whom he had injured. That last sentence was the only real one in the letter.

The small, German clock on the shelf above Mr. Underhill's head, struck the hour. It seemed like a knell in the tense, unnatural silence of the room. The stricken father mechanically raised his head to note the hour, and this time Evelyn realized the suffering in his face. In a moment she was beside him, and he had gathered her hands into his, and was answering her unspoken words of comfort.

"Yes, Evelyn, 'tis a heavy cross, but mayhap 'twill lighten as we bear it. I had hoped, as I had a right to hope, that I should soon see Griffith working beside me here, ministering to the sore need of our valley people. Doubtless it is a judgment on my undue pride in mine own flesh that would not see his faults. God grant that he may yet some day come to work in His vineyard here. As for you, child—"

Mr. Underhill's voice quite broke, and Evelyn felt thankful that George just then came in with a message, and she could escape from the room.

Days and weeks passed, and in that household where duty was a watchword, Evelyn could not altogether omit the least of hers. Yet at times her light tasks were positively abhorrent to her, and all the heart had gone even from her ministrations to the people for whom she had loved to spend herself. Her whole sweet nature seemed thrown out of harmony, and bitterness and flippancy were both discernible in her.

Captain Dalton did not allow his acquaintance with the fair girl at the Glebe readily to drop. There was always some important message to be brought from Colonel Johnson—for Sir John, under the pressure of Gen. Schuyler's threats, had now evacuated the Hall, and was lingering on parole about Albany. Sometimes it was to ask Mr. Underhill's good offices with a testy Dutch patron, sometimes to entreat him to use his influence with the Indians.

Nor did Evelyn altogether repel the attentions of the Captain. Instead, she treated him with a half-mocking kindness wholly bewildering to her guardian. Perhaps Mrs. Underhill understood her better, but just now her heart was given to the endeavor to soften her husband's displeasure against Griffith. Perhaps the good lady secretly hoped that some day fresh bonds would draw them back to the Old World. She spoke something of this to her husband. "If this sad war should terminate adversely to the Crown and the Church, who knows but it might be best to return in our old days to the land where God's altars are still unprofaned. Methinks I would love to hear the service said once more in a dear English church."

THE truth of the matter is, there are so many mixtures of Zinc, Barytes, Whiting, etc., sold under misleading brands of "White Lead" and "Pure White Lead," that in order to obtain Pure White Lead it is absolutely necessary to make sure that the brand is right.

Mr. Underhill rose abruptly, an unusual light flashing from his eyes. "Never," he said, "shall I abandon my work among my people until I be driven from it, and then it will only be to hold myself in readiness to return." Then he added more quietly: "But protestations avail little, and I must work while 'tis called to-day. Even now I go to meet the body of Eye-of-the-Dawn, who is to be laid beside my faithful Wahari, in the Glebe burying ground. But for the early thaw I should have been obliged to give her up to her own people."

Scarcely had the clergyman departed on his sad errand, when a quick double knock was heard, which Evelyn of late had learned to know very well. Somewhat surprised that she had not heard approaching horse's hoofs, she shook up Philo who was droning over his spelling book, painfully following the outlines of the letters with his fingers, and the workings of his tongue. "Philo," cried the girl, "some one knocks! Hasten, and keep those streaked hands well out of sight. If your lessons make but as good an impression on your brain as the chalk does on your fingers, I shall have good hope of you!"

Philo, grinning and rolling his eyes appreciatively, darted for the door. But his unlucky feet, confined in shoes for the morning's lesson, stumbled over the rush mat on the threshold, and when the impatient captain pushed open the door for himself, he found the boy sprawled in the hall-way, in a position suggestive of a reversed turtle. The captain stared, and then he laughed as he caught sight of Evelyn within, her discomfited face bent over her embroidery frame.

"Excuse, I pray you, my lack of ceremony," he said, entering. "The door stood ajar, and I knew not that I should find this hundred-legged boy athwart my entrance."

"Methinks," responded Evelyn, rising, "the lack of ceremony is all on our part. We had intended to give you a welcome of state. It is not always that our rustic household can furnish forth a lackey."

The captain, encouraged by her reception, drew a chair close to her side. "There is naught strange," he said, "in that any one should grovel at your presence. I, too, could fling myself prostrate at your feet."

Evelyn answered slowly as she gathered up her silks: "You are more yourself, good Captain," she said, "when you forget your gallantries, and laugh as now at my unlucky Philo."

"Nay, Misstress, if the boy in me can still take pleasure in quips and pranks, it follows not that the man should be insensible to beauty. Let me tell you—"

His dark eyes were looking boldly at Evelyn, and she, flushing, interrupted: "I am all ears to hear what you have to tell me of the war. Are our Indians indeed to be gathered for an uprising?"

"I believe it, dear lady, and it may be that Sir John will lead them, in which case my devoir will be to accompany him."

He looked for the effect of his words, but Evelyn responded carelessly: "Aye, in sooth. And that reminds me to ask how you are to-day so free a lance? And how came you hitherwards on foot?"

"Why, thereby hangs a tale I thought to tell your reverend kinsman, were he but within. In your presence the golden moments should not be wasted on such trifles."

Evelyn frowned. "Tell me the tale," she said, "mayhap I find it amusing."

"With all good will, and you will raise your eyes to look at me."

"I listen with my ears, good Captain."

"And charm me with your tongue. But read me with your eyes this riddle." He stretched out his left hand toward her, and she noticed for the first time that three of the fingers was tightly bound. She uttered an exclamation. "'Tis nothing, said the captain. 'A few crushed tendons. But hear my riddle: This morning I rode to Col. Butler's on an important errand. An ill-looking Dutch varlet was skulking about the place, and, being over-easy, I left my charger, Saracen, in his care. On remounting, I found my horse very restive. I gripped his sides with my knees, and he reared on two feet, trying to throw me. Being not altogether unskilled in riding, I kept my seat, but the brute backed me against a stone wall and crushed my fingers, as you see."

The Distinguishing Characteristic of the Vocation is its Exquisite Tone

ORGANS BUILT on the Vocation system are preeminently fitted for church services. They have a full, rich diapason tone and a peculiar delicacy in the string registers which make them of inestimable value as an accompaniment to the human voice. This, with their great variety of registration and superior carrying powers, renders them remarkably well adapted for leading congregational singing. Their superiority of tone is a subtlety more easily appreciated than described. Prices from $275 upward. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers. Those unable to call will receive full information by sending for Catalogue G.

When I struck him with my riding whip, he again plunged forward, and this time went down on his knees in the road. He has so lamed himself by this, that he has been obliged to accept the hospitality of the Butter stable, where under his saddle has been found a nasty bunch of prickly burrs. Now who, think you, can have raised this crop so speedily?"

"I should say the ill-looking varlet has had his hand in it. He should have been soundly whipped."

"And if I had caught him, be sure his back should have paid the penalty. The keeper of the stable has thought the fellow to be the Dutch Karl who works upon the parsonage glebe."

"How, our Karl? oh, no," said Evelyn. "Surely he could have no object in such silly wickedness."

"Col. Butler has told me the lad needs watching. He is much with one Myndert and a foul-mouthed Scotch trader. I wish but to warn Mr. Underhill. My own bruises are healed in the balm of your sweet pity."

Evelyn's heart quickened a little at the captain's languishing look. For the first time she was feeling and exercising the power of coquetry. She stooped again over her embroidery frame, and as her fingers toyed with the silks, some of the reels fell to the ground. The Captain stooped at the same instant as herself, and their fingers came in contact upon the uncarpeted floor.

In a moment Dalton had seized her hand, reels and all, and carried it to his lips. "Dear little hand!" he exclaimed, "it should never touch anything less worthy than the beautiful silken stuffs you are brodering there. It should be adorned only with the purest gems. Nay, its own loveliness is its supreme adornment. Would it were my right to cherish it!"

It was a moment of crisis in the young girl's life. With this handsome, bold-eyed man pouring words of flattery into her ear, with the dazzle of his uniform, his wealth, his rank, and with the thought of Griffith's desertion still rankling in her heart, what wonder if she were tempted to drift into whatever fools paradise this gay cavalier might offer?

But even while the captain still murmured his caressing and meaningless phrases, Evelyn glanced aside from his importunate eyes, and through the diamond-paned casement caught a glimpse of something which recalled her to herself. Moving slowly down the black current amongst the drifting ice in the river, came a fleet of canoes. In the foremost one, something straight and stiff, yet swathed in gaudy trappings, lay. In the next was seen Mr. Underhill, rowed by Indians, his eyes bent upon the book in his hands. Still there followed other canoes filled with red men who, as their blades dipt in the water, kept time with a mournful dirge, unearthly in its weird, chanting refrain. It was the funeral cortege of Eye-of-the-Dawn, who was now to be laid beside her husband.

A flood of recollections rushed over Evelyn, obliterating for a moment the captain's presence. She saw again the still scene of early dawn when Wahari himself was lowered into his grave, and Alan stood beside her while the solemn burial rite went on. She thought of the tender regrets, the pure aspirations that were then in her heart. How she had longed to give up her life for these poor red children here in the valley! How different was her present disposition, the bitterness, the coquetry, the worldly ambition which now filled her soul! She turned, with the mystifying traces of her vision still on her features, to Captain Dalton who was again endeavoring to take her hand.

"This is not seemly, captain," she said, "though I am willing to shake hands and wish you a safe return from your coming expedition. I will now call Mrs. Underhill who will deem such tete-a-tete unmaidenly in me, even when it is to bid farewell."

When the baffled captain had taken his somewhat unsatisfactory leave, Evelyn shut herself in her own room, there to sob out her penitence and her grief. This seclusion proved a much-needed preparation for that which was to follow, for on that same day came tidings of Griffith's marriage to the Lady Mary Barker.

President Loubet's Mother

THE new President of France has had a career which appeals peculiarly to the liking and sympathy of the average Frenchman. Emile Loubet was the son of a farmer whose ancestral acres were situated in the little commune of Marsanne, which is in the Department of the Drome, in south-eastern France. The father of the new President was so good a farmer, and so respected a citizen, that he became at one time the mayor of Marsanne. This estimable man, it seems, died a good while ago; but his widow, the mother of the President, still lives and carries on the farm, at the age of eighty-six. The French public is taking a great deal of interest in Madame Loubet mere, and the illustrated papers from Paris are giving us a profusion of pictures of the farmstead, with its sheep and lambs huddled close in the sheltered angle of the buildings, and of the old lady with her shrewd face and short peasant skirt, who has been photographed until she is heartily tired of it. She is well enough pleased, doubtless, with her son's advancement in position and fame, but she will never believe him as great a man as his father—once the mayor of Marsanne, and always a weather-wise and thrifty farmer—to whose picture on the wall she points with reverence and pride when visitors come to talk to her about her distinguished son. The best thing she can say of Emile is that she believes he is growing to be a good deal like his father.—Review of Reviews for April.

Our Forces in the Philippines

IT is only after some processes of reflection and comparison that we can fully appreciate the magnitude that our expedition to Asiatic waters has assumed. General Kitchener performed wondrous feats last year in his marching against the "Fuzzy-wuzzy" of the desert, but there were only 7,000 or 8,000 white soldiers under his command, the remainder of his expedition (12,000 men approximately) being made up of the Egyptian troops of the Khedive's army. We are now, therefore, using five times as many white-skinned English-speaking men in our campaign for the pacification of the Philippines as General Kitchener will have used in establishing peace and order throughout the Soudan. In their recent campaign against the fierce warriors of the mountain tribes of north-western India on the Afghanistan frontier, the British made use of more than 32,000 troops, but of these only 10,000 were white soldiers from the British islands; the others were native Indian regiments. The French, having annexed the great island of Madagascar to their empire, found it necessary, in 1895, to wage a considerable war, in order to make good their possession; but the number of French troops sent to Madagascar was only 15,000. The most severe of England's Zulu wars in South Africa was fought with less than 7,000 British soldiers.—Review of Reviews for April.

CHAPTER IV.

THE EXCELSIOR RALLY'S

THERE are plenty of handsomer houses in Ottawa than the Rookery, as Molly had nicknamed the old, low homestead, with its gables jutting out in unexpected places, and its queer wings that looked, as the same oracle expressed it, as if you had thrown snowballs at a snow man, and they had happened by purest accident to stick to him, yet always threatening a breakaway.

There were tall poplars standing in regularly marshalled lines before the house, then came a high, white, weather-worn fence, with plump, top-heavy posts, where the morning glory vines climbed up to take a peep at the outside world; and on the other side lay the garden where the flowers came up and flourished at their own sweet will, and you could pick them to your heart's content, and still leave the same dense tanglewood of leaf, and fern, and blossom. There was a barn beyond the house, a great, motherly looking place with its broad entrance, and sleepy, restful interior, full of the scent of new-mown hay and clover, for once upon a time, when Ottawa was country instead of town, the Rookery had been a fine farm, and still retained many of its old characteristics.

From seven to eight the Excelsiors usually met, but in extreme cases of special emergency, a flag was hoisted to a pole on the barn, and from far and near the Excelsiors rallied to their standard.

The boys kept up a breathless pace from the Edsall's, Arthur running in his steady, even way, like a good-natured Collie; Jerry dashing ahead with sudden spurts, and quick breathing, like an excited black and tan, until the barn was reached.

"Oh, Dave!" shouted Art., with his hands at his mouth, and Jerry gave a shrill whistle that echoed sharply in the silence of the barn.

"Hello, yourself," came the answer in muffled tones from the regions above.

"He's there," Jerry said with a satisfied grin, as he made a dart for the tall, narrow ladder, which rose perpendicularly at the side of the hay loft, Arthur following as quickly as his larger size would permit.

The first hayloft was a large platform walled in on two sides; on the third, a second ladder reached from the loft to a wide, heavy beam, and having mounted the ladder and walked the length of the beam, which latter achievement, by the way, demanded a clear head and sure eyes, one reached the goal, the secret assembly room of the Excelsiors. It owed all of its furnishings and various improvements in the way of windows, secure flooring, and the high planking which hid its mysteries from profane eyes, to the ingenuity of its occupants.

In the first place it had been a dark old loft, long fallen into disuse, save as a playground for rats and spiders, on account of the difficulty of access to it, and the unsafe condition of the floor. But as Arthur said, where there's a will there's a way, and when there are from ten to fifteen strong, ready, wills, well seconded by as many strong, ready arms, the way is apt to turn out a very excellent way, as the Excelsiors proved.

After the first obstacles had been overcome, and sunlight shone in on a freshly cleaned inclosure that defied admittance to either rats or girls, equally unwelcome torments in the eyes of the boys, then each member was requested by the committee on interior decorations to supply three articles either of a beautifying or useful quality, towards the adornment of the newly acquired domain. The result was "most gratifying," as Mr. Arthur Gray, president, announced in his great speech the opening night on which the club took formal possession.

There was a carpenter's bench on one side of the room, which alternated as a writing desk, or speaker's platform, according to the need of the moment. Facing it on the opposite side stood a large armchair on a soap box. The president's chair had been donated by Bobbie Cherritt. Just where Bobbie had discovered the relic was a matter of dispute, but after some discussion it was given the place of honor. It was a most peculiar chair. The back was high and straight and shaped like Grandmother Cherritt's tortoise shell back comb; then the sides rose high and hard, and from the faded pink chintz covering, cotton oozed from gaping wounds in the most unexpected places. But it was the seat that Excelsior interest centred upon.

As has been mentioned, Arthur was plump. Bobbie Cherritt often referred playfully to "our honored president" as "the baby elephant," but when occasion demanded, Art. could put on as much dignity as a judge in wig and gown, and so he would mount the soap box and open the meeting with all due form, when suddenly, as the pink arm chair received the president into its cosy, sleepy hollow depths, there would be an ominous crunch, a wild, ineffectual clutch at the air by Arthur, and the seat would collapse, dropping the honored president into a deep recess beneath, which Grandmother Cherritt had once used as a patch work receptacle, and which fitted the portly form of the honored president to a T. The seat had been propped up again and again, but on several important occasions had played its old trick, and suspicion pointed to Mr. Cherritt, owing to that young gentleman's remarkable explosions of laughter both before and after the catastrophe.

The walls were covered with pictures of all kinds, and as for the rest, there was everything imaginable, from a punching bag to an incomplete skeleton furnished by Lloyd Sanford, the doctor's son. Rumor said this latter acquisition played an im-

SANKEY MODEL, STYLE 431.

Known abroad as the Empress Model.

More than two hundred thousand organs were made in our factory before this instrument was perfected. It is the result of great experience in making organs for all purposes for everybody.

The missionary's tent in the jungles and Westminster Abbey, the humble cottage and the king's palace contain a Mason & Hamlin Organ. The self taught amateur and Franz Liszt, Saint-Saens, Theo. Thomas, George W. Chadwick, Emil Paur and scores of great musicians have written words of praise for Mason & Hamlin Organs.

The Sankey Model (so called because it was designed for and is used by Ira D. Sankey) is suitable for churches, lodges, schools and homes. Cash with order price, $180.00. Other organs $27.00 to $2,400.00. We have accumulated organ information for 45 years. Write us about organs if you are interested.

The popularity of Pearl-ine begets the habit of calling anything that's washing-powder, "Pearl-ine." Those who notice the difference in name, think perhaps "it's about the same thing." It isn't. Nothing else equals Pearl-ine, the original and standard washing compound. 578 portant part in the initiation ceremonies, but on ordinary occasions it dangled harmlessly from a hook behind the president's chair, an old battered stovepipe hat cocked saucily on one side of its head, and a corn-cob pipe between its grinning jaws.

The boys found Dave at the carpenter's bench, his box of tools open at his side.

"Hello," he said, looking over his shoulder at the two figures balancing themselves across the beams, "what's up?"

"Fun," Art. gasped. "The girls are up to a great old dodge. New club."

"Got Mollie roped in."

"And Virginia Hardy."

"Going to beat us all to smithereens."

"Moonlight masquerade first on the programme."

"Everything snub nosa," finished Jerry in triumph, while Dave swung himself upon the bench and regarded the two red-faced, perspiring boys before him in blank astonishment.

"Well," he said at last.

"Well," repeated Jerry, "well, we won't stand it, that's all."

"You can't help yourselves," Dave said, calmly, hacking lazily at a piece of wood with his jack-knife. "They won't keep it up any time before there'll be a caterwauling, see if they do. They won't bother us."

"Oh, won't they though?" repeated Jerry. They won't bother us any lording their old patchwork club over ours, will they? They won't bother us any telling all over town about the poor, dear Excelsior boys being pushed out of the fight? They won't bother us any copying at our signs, names and initiations, and all that? Oh, no they won't, not a little bit! Where's that flag?"

"What are you going to do?" demanded Dave, as Jerry grasped the flag and started for the window.

"Going to call the boys and settle things," retorted Jerry. "Going to find out who supplies the moral and social tone to the town, the Excelsiors or the Tabby Club."

The flag fluttered out, and the boys sat down to wait. Before long there came a sound of feet below, and Bobbie yelled:

"Fire, Fire, Fire! Hello, up there."

"Come on up," called Arthur, and the first contingent arrived:

Ten constituted a quorum with the Excelsiors, so when that number were seated, Arthur stood on the soap box and began in his most impressive style, with many a significant nudge, and many a stage whisper suggestion from Jerry.

"Gentlemen of the Excelsior Club: You will understand me when I say that in all the history of our club, yon flag has never been raised save on the most momentous occasions. On each and every glorious Fourth—"

"Hear, hear!" yelled Bobbie excitedly, while his eyes rested on the seat of the chair.

"As upon all other thrilling occasions, we have flown our fier—"

"That's a good one," murmured Jerry approvingly, 'flown our fier.'

"But never have flown it in a more urgent cause than to-day. A discovery has been made by Mr. Jerry Edsall and myself, which demands instant decision and action by the club. What that discovery is, I leave it to our beloved and esteemed brother to explain."

Whereupon our beloved and esteemed brother arose and took his stand on the carpenter's bench and plunged headlong into the subject:

"A whole lot of the girl's have fixed up a club, and they're going to have it secret like ours, and work it in opposition to ours. There's Mollie and Nell and Virginia Hardy—"

"How do you know?" asked Lloyd, as he stopped pegging paper wads at the skeleton's left eye to look at Jerry.

"Why, you see, Art. and I were down under the lilacs, and heard the whole thing," the latter returned, his eyes twinkling at the corners, "and their name's the Tabby Club, and their motto's 'No boys allowed,' and Nell said she wouldn't have us around because we'd be such an attraction—"

"Distraction," corrected Arthur mildly.

"All the same thing. Distraction, and a nuisance, and a bother generally. And they think they're going to run the whole shooting-match to suit themselves, and make piles of money, and cut us out."

"And the moon business," prompted Art., as the speaker paused for breath.

"Oh, yes. They're going to have a moonlight masquerade somewhere, and charge ten cents admission, and be all dressed up. Now, what do you all think of it?"

There was silence for a moment then a buzz of voices rose higher and higher in argument and altercation, while the honored president, in his wild efforts to maintain order, mounted the back of the pink chintz chair.

"Shut up, all of you," he shouted, "I want to say something."

"You seem to be managing pretty well as it is, old boy," Jerry said at his elbow. Then as the noise subsided, the Senator, as Dave was called by the boys, stood up to make a speech.

"We've got to keep cool and take it easy," he said. "I move that Mr. Jerry Edsall be appointed special secret-service spy to look after these er-young persons, and that he report to us at our next regular meeting next Saturday. As for anything else we want to know about this Tabby Club," he paused and smiled confidentially down on the assembly, "we'll get it out of Mollie."

GRAPE-NUTS.

A New and Highly Nutritious Food.

The odd-sounding name is used to designate a peculiar food, made not exactly in the shape of nuts, but having a pleasant, nutty flavor and crisp brittleness that makes them a charming favorite with the palate.

Of yet more value than the taste, is the food value of Grape-Nuts. They are largely composed of Grape-Sugar (your dictionary can tell you about that), and those who use them will find the morning meal has not only been pleasant, but has been quickly and easily digested, for grape-sugar is an article produced in the human body at one stage of the digestion of food, and is at once ready for transformation into good healthy blood and nourishment.

It should not be understood that the grape-sugar, of which Grape-Nuts is made, has been produced in the human body. But this grape-sugar is made by much the same process as the body employs, and is produced by natural treatment of grains without any foreign substance whatever.

It is made by the Postum Co., at Battle Creek, Mich. The result is perhaps the most highly nutritious food ever produced.

Grocers sell Grape-Nuts.

Finance and Commerce

WITH the exception of the temporary disturbance caused by the declaration of war with Spain, the commercial and financial affairs of the country have run smoothly since the election in November, 1896, which at that time settled for the time being the doubts as to the financial policy of the nation in respect to fundamental issues for the next four years at least.

Nothing of a national character has since arisen to disturb or complicate the business situation, or to perplex or render doubtful the course of the immediate future. Under the assurance which these conditions gave, distrust vanished and confidence began to grow and expand. The people as consumers began taking a more hopeful view of the future, the caution and economy in expenditure practiced since 1893, gradually relaxed, wants, and the indulgence of them increased, and production and distribution to meet these wants received the accelerating impulse which has lasted up to the present time. Under these influences business has grown enormously, until the volume in nearly all branches of production and distribution is much greater than at any former period of the country's growth.

We have, however, reached a point where the inevitable conservatism of an intelligent people is beginning to show itself. It is in its incipency and amounts as yet to nothing more than enquiry, "What is ahead of us? What are we coming to? Out of the conditions of to-day what will develop?" Answers to these questions are by no means uniform to all minds.

Opinions as to the desirability of our position in the Philippines is not unanimous, and opposition thereto seems increasing—at least the organized manifestation of disapproval is. Already leading financiers are seriously considering it as a vital issue in the next presidential campaign, now little more than twelve months off. Uncertainty also as to the administration's purpose concerning the money question, the vital issue in the last election, and still unsettled so far as Congressional declarations are concerned, is, as the time for another submission to the people approaches, likely to become a less neutral factor in business affairs.

Again, all the multiplicity of utterances which declare public opinion in the matter of these industrial combinations called "trusts," leave no room to doubt that the general sentiment regarding them is unfriendly, and suggests that antagonistic legislation of a more stringent character than any heretofore adopted, is quite likely to be favorably advocated by one or more of the great political parties, and in time put into more or less effective operation.

Of course all these are considerations for the future, perhaps a year ahead, probably most of them more remote than that, but they are beginning to be discussed by the most advanced authorities. In the meantime, business is good, money is fairly plenty, credit is forthcoming to the discerning, and nothing appears likely to disturb the immediate tide of prosperity.

Probably the most serious blow to the situation is the poor outlook for the winter wheat crop. There seems no longer room to doubt that the winter killing has been serious in degree, and covers a wide area. The trade and the public are loth to believe it, and much hope is yet expressed that rain, should it come, will reveal less serious conditions than appearances now indicate.

Increase in Exports

American manufacturers made their highest record in foreign markets in March. The figures of the March exportations, which the Treasury Bureau of Statistics issued last month, earlier than on any previous occasion, show that the March exportations of manufactures were $36,025,733, or more than 25 per cent. in excess of any preceding month. In March last year the exportations of manufactures were $28,214,450; in March, 1897, $25,876,861, and in March, 1896, $19,125,795. On only two occasions, March and December, 1898, have the exports of a single month ever reached $28,000,000, while in March, 1899, they were, as already indicated, $36,025,733, an increase of 50 per cent. over those of the preceding month, February, 1899.

Prior to 1897, exports of manufactures never averaged in any month as much as a million dollars for each business day; in five months of 1898 they averaged a million dollars for each business day, but it was left for March, 1899, to make the average of more than a million dollars for each day in the month, or an average of $1,400,000 for each business day.

The increase in the exportations of manufactures is apparent in nearly all lines. Of agricultural implements the March, 1899, exports were $2,379,744, against $1,470,397 in March of the preceding year. Exports of cotton cloths increased from 27,030,657 yards in March, 1898, to 45,266,959 yards in March, 1899, and of this amount the exports to China alone were 23,433,596 yards, against 13,635,874 yards in March of last year. Chinaware increased from $13,986 in March of last year to $40,333 in March, 1899. Instruments for scientific purposes, including telegraph, telephone, etc., increased from $30,018 in March, 1898 to $481,790, in March, 1899, thus showing an increase of more than 100 per cent. Builders' hardware increased 33 per cent., sewing machines nearly 30 per cent., typewriters nearly 50 per cent., leather about 40 per cent., boots and shoes 80 per cent., naval stores 63 per cent., and vegetable oils nearly 40 per cent.

During the nine months ending with March, 1899, the exports of manufactures amounted to $242,883,645, against $208,788,036 in the corresponding months of last year, and formed more than 26 per cent. of the total exports, against 23 per cent. in the corresponding months of the preceding fiscal year.

The Great Huxley.

What Huxley, the Great English Scientist, Considered the Best Start in Life.

The great English scientist, Huxley, said the best start in life is a sound stomach. Weak stomachs fail to digest food properly, because they lack the proper quantity of digestive acids (lactic and hydrochloric) and peptogenic products; the most sensible remedy in all cases of indigestion is to take after each meal one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they supply in a pleasant, harmless form all the elements that weak stomachs lack.

The regular use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure every form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

They increase flesh, insure pure blood, strong nerves, a bright eye, and clear complexion, because all these result only from wholesome food, well digested.

Nearly all druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents full-sized package.

Notes of the World's Progress

IT IS LITTLE LESS THAN A YEAR AGO that the Czar of Russia issued invitations to the more powerful nations to a conference to consider the great question of disarmament. As the result of this invitation, representatives of governments involved will assemble at The Hague, May 18th. No more appropriate place for the meeting could have been selected than "The House in the woods," the summer palace of Queen Wilhelmina. The chief aim of the congress will not be toward immediate disarmament, but rather to agree not to increase relatively the military burden of Europe. Added to this will be discussed restrictions of certain practices in war. Although the United States is not as directly involved as are the nations of Europe, yet the delegates named by President McKinley being prominent in their respective spheres, will have an important part in the discussions. The points to be taken up are: An agreement not to increase naval or military forces and the corresponding budgets for a fixed period; an endeavor to find means of reducing the forces and budgets in the future; interdiction of the use of any new weapon or explosive of a power higher than now made; restriction of the use of the most terrible of existing explosives, and forbidding the throwing of any explosives from balloons or similarly; forbidding the employment of submarine torpedoes and similar contrivances; undertaking not to construct vessels with rams; application of the Geneva convention to naval warfare; neutralization of vessels saving those wrecked in naval battles; revision of the declaration concerning the laws and customs of war elaborated at Brussels in 1874; acceptance of the principle of mediation and arbitration in such cases as lend themselves thereto.

THERE IS TO BE NO LACK OF "NATIONAL" and "international" shows, if all projects now under way, or in contemplation, materialize. Omaha is preparing the "Greater America" exposition, which will be held from July to November. This will be the second growth of the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, which, owing to its great financial success, led to the formulation of further plans. The exhibits of the second exposition will be made up largely of products of Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, and will demonstrate the value and extent of our colonial acquisitions. The Paris Exposition will claim attention next year. The latest announcement of Commissioner Peck is the allotment of 8,000 additional square feet of space, which will be devoted primarily to exhibits of American manufacturers of bicycles. Following the great French event, is that at Buffalo, which is international in its scope. Then, if plans mature, there will be in 1903 a great exhibition at St. Louis in commemoration of the Louisiana purchase.

A SENATORIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED to investigate the subject of adulterated foods, having in view governing legislation, is holding sessions in Chicago. So far, Senator Mason, of Illinois, has been the only member of the committee present, but as their object is simply to bring out evidence as to adulteration, the object will be attained. The result of the investigation, so far, has been to show the wide extent of adulteration, and the inadequacy of our laws to protect the public. One expert states that probably ninety per cent. of food products, other than those sold in their natural state, are impure, and in many cases injurious.

Coffee and canned goods in many cases are doctored. Artificial coffee berries, so skillfully made as to defy detection by any save experts, are sold regularly when mixed with a proportion of the genuine article. It is also shown that many articles of food manufactured or put up abroad, which are not salable at home, owing to pure food laws, are exported to this country and sold at good prices. It is felt legislation is needed to protect the consumer. The latter, in paying full price for a pure article, should receive what is believed to be purchased. The aim is to provide laws which will compel manufacturers or dealers properly to label products, and thus render impossible the sale of adulterated substitutes.

THE PUBLIC WILL HARDLY BE SATISFIED with the report of the Court of Inquiry which has concluded its investigation of the Commissary Department and its operations during the Cuban and Puerto Rican campaigns. The report is made public in the form of answers to questions propounded by President McKinley, and to those who have followed the testimony, surprise will be felt as to the process of reasoning by which the court arrived at certain conclusions. In brief, the court finds that Commissary General Egan, now undergoing punishment of six years' vacation on full pay for attacking General Miles, committed "a colossal error for which there is no palliation," and his purchase of 7,000,000 pounds of canned roast beef, which has never been authorized as a field ration, is characterized as "unwarranted and reckless." Although canned beef was not a fit tropical ration, and should not be issued more than once in five days, the packers are held to be blameless, and their product supplied the troops, staple, and were bought on their merits. Sickness of troops is declared partially due to insufficient and unpalatable food, and Colonel Weston, Acting-Commissary-General, is held responsible for the use of canned beef. General Miles was not justified in making charges of embalming of refrigerated beef, but his charges as to the unsuitability of canned beef are sustained. General Miles did not report the facts as promptly as his duty required, and his newspaper allegations were not in harmony with the dignity of his high position. Finally, the court recommends that no further action be taken. In this, as in all the other recommendations of the court, the President concurs, and approves the finding and dismisses the court without comment.

AN ANTI-TRUST LAW OF STRINGENT nature is being considered by the legislature of Texas, and prospects indicate its adoption. Should this be accomplished, and after adjournment of the legislature, the governor will at once take steps toward calling a meeting at Dallas or Austin, to which governors of other Southern States will be invited, for the purpose of discussing some uniform policy of legislation against trusts. A conference of this nature may be productive of good results. At present the question as to what extent trusts can be curbed by State action, and to what extent the national government will have to be relied upon to suppress them, has not definitely been determined. The proposed conference may be the beginning of effective action. Knots of points of law bearing on constitutional rights and inter state commerce must be solved to insure protection. At the present rate of progression, there will soon be no branch of industry left without the pale of combinations, and if industrial competition were to be finally eliminated, the consequences would be disastrous. The State of Arkansas affords a serious instance of independent trust legislation. A recent act affecting insurance companies has resulted in the latter withdrawing from the State, and, until some settlement is reached, the companies in the rate agreement will refuse to assume further risks.

FINNS DO NOT TAKE KINDLY TOWARD Russification; on the contrary, the proposed Russian programme has had the direct effect of causing an average weekly emigration to America of about 500 young men. Already from some parishes every man of military age has set out, leaving farms to the care of the old and the women. Now, however, a much larger exodus is being planned to Canada, where a committee of leaders will go in June to secure a suitable district for a colony. A great terror to the Finns is the new military law, which threatens to send them to any part of the Russian empire for five years' service, and which compels them to stay in their own parish another thirteen years, in order to be ready for service in reserve. The conditions of the Finnish military law were two years' service, and only 1,900 conscripts were chosen every year. The standing army was fixed at 5,600 at the most, and, above all, the soldiers were not to leave the country. The Russian law, on the other hand, means the raising of a new army corps and a standing army of at least 36,000, or double that, if the Russian physical standard is adopted as Krapotkin desires.

ACCORDING TO REPORTS PREPARED IN the Bureau of Statistics, China has 6,000 miles of navigable waterways, 3,000 miles of telegraph lines, but only 300 miles of railroad. There are projected, however, 3,000 miles of railroad, which will make a splendid system of communication for the Flowery Kingdom. The cost of these proposed railway lines in China will be, if carried out, enormous. Lines constructed up to the present time have been built at the expense of the Chinese government. Recent concessions permit construction by residents of other countries. Funds for this purpose are in most cases to be secured by mortgage on the railway thus created, the disbursement and further management to remain in control of the foreign lenders during the term of the mortgage, but the lines themselves after the mortgage lien is paid are in most cases to become the property of the Chinese government. Thus far efforts of foreigners to obtain a share or stock interest in addition to the mortgage lien have usually been unsuccessful, though in many cases the length of time during which the loans and control are to run may be considered as equivalent to ownership, so far at least as the present generation is concerned. That the intention of the Chinese government is to control its railways is further evidenced by the fact that in its agreements with those proposing to construct lines it requires that schools of instruction for Chinese in the construction and management of railways shall be established, and that a certain proportion of the employees of the road shall be natives and citizens of the empire, thus providing for the complete education in railway construction and management of its own people by the time that the system of roads now proposed shall revert to the direct control and ownership of the government.

The News of the Church

Canada

At the Easter vestry meeting of All Saints' church, Hamilton, notice was given that a motion would be introduced at the next meeting of the synod, by which it would be left optional with the congregations of the churches in the diocese, either to continue the warden system, or to have executive committees, or a board of directors, to manage Church affairs. The report from St. Thomas' church, Hamilton, was very good. The rector had made a special request that an effort be made to wipe out the floating debt, which had been steadily accumulating, and he asked that $1,000 be given on Easter Day for the purpose. In response, $1,107 was received. The church has this year had the largest number of Easter communicants, the largest Confirmation class, and the largest offering, in its history.

Diocese of Algoma

Bishop Thornloe has gone on a long Confirmation tour on the great Manitoulin Island. Part of the journey will be on the lake, 20 miles on the ice in an open stage. One parish in Algoma is large—250 miles long—extending northward to James Bay. A silver Communion service has been presented to the church at West Fort William by a Quebec church society.

Diocese of New Westminster

A conditional grant of $1,000 has been obtained from the S. P. C. K. for the re-endowment of the Bishopric Fund. It will only be given, however, when $8,000 shall have been raised elsewhere. A beginning has been made; friends in England are helping, and Bishop Dart is still there doing what he can. Some progress has been made in the development of the plan for creating the new diocese of Kootenay by subdividing New Westminster.

Diocese of Fredericton

Bishop Kingdon held a Confirmation for a large class of candidates in St. John's church, St. John, in the end of March. Trinity church, St. Stephen, received a beautiful Easter gift in the shape of a handsome stained glass window.

Diocese of Nova Scotia

The report of the Easter vestries of Halifax churches, as to the financial statements, are most of them very satisfactory. A new rectory has been provided in connection with St. George's church, New Glasgow. Bishop Courtney confirmed a class of 41 at St. Paul's, Halifax, in March. He gave an address on "Catechising," before the last meeting of the Halifax Sunday School Institute.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The Confirmation at St. George's, Grand Crossing, set for last Sunday morning, is postponed to the afternoon of the Sunday after Ascension, on account of the Bishop's indisposition.

The choir of St. James' was supplemented on Sunday afternoon last by that of St. Peter's, there being thus 100 vested choristers who rendered Mr. Lutkin's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis; also the Inflammatus, and the Hallelujah Chorus.

Mr. Donan, of the Seminary, is now, and has been for some time, in charge of the flourishing mission at Harvey, and is ably assisted by his wife in the conduct of the Sunday school.

The Woman's Guild of St. Mark's, Chicago, has in two years realized $1,200, the nucleus of a fund for procuring a parish house.

St. Paul's, Glencoe, in charge of the Rev. H. G. Moore, has received from Miss Mary Fuller the gift of a very costly Bible for the lecturn.

At a parish meeting last week, Mr. W. E. Ritchie was elected senior warden of St. Paul's, Kenwood, in the place of the late Mr. Eugene B. Myers.

We are glad to learn that the Rev. Percival McIntire, whose severe illness at the Hotel del Prado involved careful nursing, is slowly convalescing.

St. Luke's Hospital

The Rev. J. W. Van Ingen's official connection with St. Luke's Hospital as superintendent, terminated on the 8th inst., after six years of faithful and highly appreciated service. He leaves next week for the East, intending again to take up parochial work. Fire early on Saturday morning, apparently of incendiary origin, did considerable damage, probably to the amount of $10,000, to the Clinton flats on Michigan ave., in rear of, and belonging to, St. Luke's Hospital.

Grace Church, Freeport

By the will of the late Miss Mary Stoskopf, who died at Freeport on Easter Day, Grace church receives $1,000. The sum is to be invested, and the interest thus becomes a continuation of her annual subscription. At the expiration of ten years from her death the principal may be used for any Church purpose that the Church authorities may decide upon. Mrs. Hyde, another earnest worker in the parish, died on the 24th ult.

Rectory for St. Mark's, Evanston

The vestry of St. Mark's, Evanston, have purchased, at a cost of $10,000, a rectory, situated only a very short distance from the church.

The Northern Deanery

The spring convocation met in Waterman Hall and St. Peter's church, Sycamore, on May 2nd and 3d. On Tuesday evening the opening service was held in St. Peter's church, at which addresses were made by the Rev. B. F. Fleetwood, dean, and the Rev. Messrs. J. C. Sage, C. A. Cummings, and F. W. Keator. At 7 A. M. on May 3d, the Holy Communion was celebrated, the dean officiating, and about 30 communicating. Morning Prayer was said at 10:30 A. M., by the Rev. Messrs. J. C. Sage and F. W. Keator. The business meeting was held at Waterman Hall rectory, where lunch was served at 1:15 P. M.

Notice of Ordination and Confirmation

The Bishop of Chicago will hold an Ordination at the cathedral, on Trinity Sunday, May 28th, at 10:45 A. M. There will be a supplementary Confirmation at the same place and date.

Semi-Centennial of St. Ansgarius'

The congregation of St. Ansgarius' Swedish church, on Sunday, May 7th, celebrated the 50th anniversary of the church's founding. The Rev. Herman Lindskog, rector, was assisted, both morning and evening, by the Rev. O. A. Tofteen, of Minneapolis. At the morning service, Mr. Lindskog reviewed the work of the parish since its organization in 1849, and paid a tribute to the Rev. Gustavus Unonius and his labors as the first rector of St. Ansgarius. Music was furnished by Miss Annie Johnson and a choir of 25.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At the church of Holy Trinity, Harlem, a memorial window is to be placed to the memory of the late rector, the Rev. Chas. DeWitt Bridgman, D.D. The theme will be the Resurrection.

At the cathedral of St. John the Divine, beginning Sunday, May 7th, the services will be, early Eucharist at 8 A. M., vespers 4 P. M., with the crypt chapel open for devotions three times weekly in the afternoon.

New York Churchman's Association

The May meeting at the Hotel St. Denis was given up to addresses by the Rev. Cornelius D. Smith, D.D., on "The Seven Lights of the Dark Ages", and Mr. Silas McBee, on "The American Cathedral."

Gift of a Nurse's Home

Mr. Harris C. Fahnestock has provided, at a cost of $75,000, the erection of a nurse's house in connection with the Post-graduate hospital, in memory of his wife. Plans have been approved and filed. The building will be located in E. 20th st.

Niobrara League

The May meeting was held at the Church Missions House, May 4th. A notable feature was an exhibition of lace made by Indian women, under the supervision of Miss Sybil Carter, which is to be sent to the Exposition of 1900, at Paris.

Twenty-five Years' Service of Mr. Prentice

At the church of St. Mary the Virgin, the Rev. George M. Christian, D.D., rector, a special choral service was held, Sunday, May 7th, in celebration of the quarter century of the services of Mr. Thomas Morgan Prentice, in charge of the music of the parish.

Barnard College

At a meeting of the board of trustees, held May 5th, an alumna trustee was elected: Miss Florence Colegate, of the class of 1895, for a term of four years. It was announced that a $3,000 scholarship by the Brearley school, and three new scholarships by Miss Bourne, had been given.

Brotherhood of Nazareth

The earnest efforts to complete their new buildings were backed by the generous kindness of Mrs. George Crocker, on May 2d, by means of a drawing-room meeting at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, held under her patronage. The Rev. John W. Brown, D.D., of St. Thomas' church, presided.

The President at Sunday School.

On Sunday, April 30th, President McKinley made a special visit to the Sunday school of the church of Zion and St. Timothy, the Rev. Henry Lubeck, rector. On the way back to his hotel, the President was saluted by Troop A, of the national guard cavalry, returning from their annual service at the church of the Heavenly Rest.

Daughters of the American Revolution

The Mary Washington Colonial Chapter held a service at St. Paul's chapel of Trinity parish, on Sunday, April 30th, in commemoration of the inauguration of President Washington, and the service in this chapel, April 30th, 1789. On the following Day the chapter unveiled a tablet to note the site of the original presidential mansion at No. 1 Cherry st.

Ordination of Dr. Briggs

It has transpired that still other churches have been offered to Bishop Potter for the ordination of the Rev. Chas. A. Briggs, D.D., to the priesthood, the latest mentioned being All Souls' church, by the Rev. R. Heber Newton, D.D. The opposition to the ordination is determined in certain quarters, and as yet Bishop Potter has made no public announcement of a revised time and place, if any, for the service. Meanwhile it is stated that Dr. Briggs sails for Europe May 18th.

St. Matthew's Church

The reception to the men of the parish, by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Krans, April 26th, was largely attended. Vocal and instrumental music was given by Miss Howard and Messrs. Bachellor, Taylor, Potter, and Grant. The Rev. Dr. Gallaudet delivered a short address on the sign language; Prof. Jones gave recitations in signs, and Dr. Krans made an address of welcome. A design for the chancel window in competition by the Messrs. Parkhurst, was on exhibition.

The Church Club

At the annual meeting just held Mr. John H. C. le presided, and was re-elected president. Other elections were: Messrs. Geo. Macculloch

Miller, John W. Poisson, and Theodore K. Gibbs, vice-presidents; Mr. Robert S. Hone, secretary; Mr. Edward R. Satterlee, treasurer. On May 13th a Ladies' Day will be held, and Bishop Potter will make an address. The May theme will be, "The Church's work in our new possessions." Mr. Alfred Collett, of Keble college, Oxford, gave a lecture May 2nd, before the club, on "Lincoln cathedral."

St. Mark's Centennial

The 100th anniversary of St. Mark's church was celebrated the current week, beginning with a service Sunday morning, May 7th, at which Bishop Potter was the preacher. At night a special service was held, which was largely musical. On Tuesday night the Rev. Morgan Dix, D.D., D.C.L., delivered an historical address. Representatives of various churches and institutions which have been connected with St. Mark's were to take part—among the clergy mentioned for addresses being the Rev. Drs. Wm. S. Rainsford, and Wm. R. Huntington.

St. Simon's, Boro' of Richmond

The parish hall erected a year ago is now paid for, the money for the last outstanding debt having been raised at Easter, in response to a special appeal made to the congregation in Lent. This has been done without diminishing the Easter offerings or the Sunday school Lenten offerings for missions. The sewing school has just concluded another successful season, with 106 scholars, and 110 pieces of needlework completed. The boys' gymnastic class will show the results of their weekly practice in a display arranged for May 24th. The girls' gymnastic class has steadily increased. The Penny Provident Fund grows both in the number of depositors and in the amount deposited. The work thus accomplished, in addition to various lectures, meetings, and entertainments, shows how valuable an adjunct the parish hall is to St. Simon's church.

St. John's Guild

Its second floating hospital for sick children was launched May 4th. The boat, named the Helen C. Juilliard, after its donor, cost $35,000. About 2,000 guests were in attendance. The boat was named by the doctor's niece, Miss Catherine Dodge, who liberated a flock of pigeons from the prow at the moment of launching, in accordance with the Japanese fashion. Admiral Philip and staff, of the Navy Yard, were present on the government tug "Narkeeta," and the band from the Navy Yard furnished the music. On the return trip to New York, addresses were made by Bishop Potter, the Rev. John Dows Hillis, Hon. John P. Faure, secretary of the Guild, and Dr. Charles A. Morris, superintendent of city dispensaries. During the summer of 1898, the guild carried 60,144 sick children, and gave 11,443 salt-water baths. The charity is confined to the poor of New York city, and is wonderful in its results. Main office is at 501 Fifth Ave., where donations for the work will be gratefully received.

Death of Rev. Alexander B. Carver, D. D.

The rector of St. John's church, Yonkers, who died May 2nd, had been ill for several weeks, and toward the last suffered from blood poisoning, causing great anxiety in the community in which he was beloved. He was born in Philadelphia 43 years ago, and was a descendant of Captain Carver, of the "Mayflower." He studied at the University of Pennsylvania, and at the Divinity School at Cambridge, Mass., graduating from the latter in the class of 1878. During his diaconate he was assistant minister at Christ church, Brooklyn. On his ordination to the priesthood, he took charge of St. Gabriel's church, Providence, R. I. Five years later he became the rector of St. Peter's church, Narragansett Pier, R. I., and then accepted the curacy of St. Thomas' church, New York city. In 1887 he was elected to the rectorship of St. John's church, Yonkers. He received the degree of doctor of divinity from Ohio University. The burial service, which was held in St. John's church, May 5th, was one of the most impressive ever held in this place. Bishop Potter officiated, assisted by a large number of clergy. The music was furnished by a choir of 50 voices. The interment was in Laurel Grove cemetery, Philadelphia.

The Rhinelander Memorial

The new church of the Holy Trinity, of St. James' parish, the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, rector, was consecrated by Bishop Potter May 6th. The main portions of this group have now been erected by Miss Serena Rhinelander. The parish church, morning chapel, parish house, and clergy house, are memorials of the giver's father, William C. Rhinelander, and her grandfather, William Rhinelander. The ground covers the last of the Rhinelander farm, which has been in possession of the family since 1798, and is now dedicated to divine uses in this crowded section of the city. The parish of St. James has set apart $200,000 from the proceeds of the sale of the former church of the Holy Trinity, 42nd st. and Madison ave., towards the perpetual endowment of this new foundation which bears its name—the former parish having united with St. James' church, as at the time recorded in these columns. The new church occupies a space of 275 by 100 ft., and is in pointed Gothic, with a graceful spire, the general details being somewhat influenced by French Gothic ideals. A fine line of cloisters connects it with St. Christopher's House and the morning chapel. The clergy house adjoins. The buildings all correspond, and the outer finish is in pale fire flashed brick, with terra-cotta trimmings of cream tint. An iron clock dial ornaments the front of the tower, and a chime of ten bells will ring the musical changes at the hours and quarters. Between the church and surrounding buildings, open space is assured, much increasing the picturesqueness of the effect, and also providing abundance of light. The stained glass of the cruciform church and the fine timber work of the roof lend artistic tone, and this is increased by the figures of saints in niches and by the conventional gargoyles as well as the graceful French lines of Gothic ornamentation. The church is heated by hot air, and lighted by electricity. The chancel is appropriately the point of climax, with fine carvings, choir and clergy stalls, and great windows. A sculptured font, representing an angel in a niche holding a baptismal shell, has been placed in the baptistry in commemoration of Muriel Stewart, a child of William Rhinelander Stewart. The work is by a German artist, and is of exceptional beauty. An eagle lectern has been given in commemoration of William C. Rhinelander. Several memorial windows will soon be placed in position by members of the Rhinelander family who have reserved the right during ten years of adding such family memorials. St. Christopher's house, at the western end of the close, is fitted with gymnasium, library, reading room, baths, club and guild room, assembly rooms, and all working appliances for vigorous church life on the modern plan, under the leadership of the vicar, the Rev. James V. Chalmers.

Columbia University

The trustees held the most important meeting of the year May 1st. While President Low attends the Czar's Peace Conference at the Hague, Prof. John Howard Van Amringe, dean of the School of Arts, will be acting president. The resignation of the librarian, Mr. Geo H. Baker, who has served for 10 years, bringing the university library up to the second in size, of its kind, in this country, was accepted, and he was elected librarian emeritus, and placed on half salary for life, with special marks of appreciation. Dr. James H. Canfield, son of the late Rev. Dr. Canfield, of Brooklyn, and now president of Ohio State University, was elected his successor, the university indicating by the choice of a college president its sense of the great administrative importance of the position. President Low announced that his intention to reimburse the university for the interest incidentally borrowed by the trustees to build the library building, which he gave as a memorial of his father, the late A. A. Low. This interest will amount to about $75,000, and will make President Low's gift to the library nearly $1,200,000. The trustees approved an agreement with a committee of the Chamber of Commerce in the matter of a memorial fund commemorating the late Col. Geo. C. Waring, of St. George's parish, who died as a result of government service in Cuba. The interest on $100,000 of the fund will be paid to the family of Col. Waring for life, and then establish instruction in municipal affairs in Columbia. An offer from the Chamber of Commerce for the payment of $15,000 a year for commercial instruction in the new mercantile school was also accepted. A memorial gift was accepted of $10,000 from Mr. Isaac M. Dyckman, for the encouragement of biological research. A fund of $11,000 was presented as a memorial of the late Anton Seidl. A vote of thanks was given to the Geo. William Curtis memorial committee, for $10,000 for the founding of a scholarship, and to Catharine Wolff for a gift of $10,000 to the department of astronomy, also to ex-Governor Roswell P. Flower, of St. Thomas' parish, for a gift of $1,000, and to several other donors. The Minister-Interior of Holland was thanked for a valuable gift of books.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

Miss Elizabeth Gill, one of the inmates of Christ church hospital, has left her whole estate of $1,330 to that institution.

Provisional Bequest

In the will of William McMullin, estate valued at $34,000, is a bequest of $500 to the Episcopal Hospital, and the income of the balance to his sister during her life. In the event of other relatives not surviving, the residuary estate goes to the church of the Mediator, Philadelphia, for the relief of the poor of that parish.

Daughters of American Revolution

An original paper on "Christ church" was read at the meeting of this organization on the 3d inst., in the council chamber of Independence Hall. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Charles C. Harrison who reported that the Philadelphia chapter now numbered over 340 members. The great majority of the members are prominent Churchwomen.

Sunday School Auxiliary

The first annual meeting was held on the 29th ult., in Holy Trinity church, Philadelphia. Bishop Whitaker presided and made an address; the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins also made some remarks. The Bishop announced that the offerings for missions amounted to $15,917.11, or nearly $4,000 more than last year before the schools were organized as at present.

Cheltenham Military Academy

The formal installation of the Rev. John D. Skilton as principal took place on Monday afternoon, 1st inst. The students, together with the faculty, assembled in Norwood Hall, and Mrs. Rice, the widow of the late principal, introduced Mr. Skilton. Addresses were made by the Rev. J. T. Cole, Jay Cooke, and others. Mr. Skilton is a graduate of Kenyon College and of the Philadelphia Divinity School.

Death of Henry Whelen

Suddenly, on the 27th ult., at his residence, Bryn Mawr, aged 82. For over 30 years he was a vestryman of the church of the Redeemer, Lower Merion (Bryn Mawr), where the Burial Office was said by the rector, the Rev. James Haughton, on the 29th ult. Mr. Whelen was largely interested in charitable works; and the poor ever found in him a generous, though unostentatious, friend.

Lacey Baker Leaves St. James', Philadelphia

At Evensong, on Sunday, 30th ult., Mr. Lacey Baker concluded his service as organist and choirmaster. The programme included Rudyard Kipling's far-famed "Recessional," sung as the anthem, with Mr. Baker's setting; and the closing "Vesper Hymn," words by the late Lord Tennyson, rendered by the choir, to a setting also by Mr. Baker, was most appropriate to the occasion. To this was added a "Music Half Hour," the 86th and last recital, including a violin solo, Benedictus, and a vocal solo, "The lost chord," by Sullivan. After a service of four years at St. James', Mr. Baker goes to the church of All Angels', New York city, where he will doubtless be as much appreciated as he has been in Philadelphia.

Deaf-Mutes Confirmed

On Sunday afternoon, 30th ult., Bishop Whitaker administered the rite of Confirmation at All Souls' church for the deaf, Philadelphia, to a class of 32 deaf-mutes, presented by the Rev. J. M. Koehler, missionary-in-charge. Nine candidates from Holy Trinity memorial church were presented by the Rev. R. A. Mayo, priest-in-charge, who read the service orally, while the Rev. Mr. Koehler was repeating the words in the sign language, assisted therein by Mr. F. C. Smielan, a deaf-mute, who is a divinity student and a lay-reader connected with All Souls'. Bishop Whitaker's address to those receiving Confirmation, was translated by Superintendent A. L. E. Crouter, of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf, at Mt. Airy. After the service, an informal reception was held in the Sunday school room, where the members of All Souls' met the Bishop, and were also addressed by Mrs. Syle, visitor of the mission.

The 115th Annual Diocesan Convention

Assembled May 2nd, in St. Luke's and Epiphany church, Philadelphia. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. Dr. T. A. Tidball, and the Bishop was celebrant of the Holy Eucharist. To roll call, 129 clergymen responded, and 125 laymen, representing 88 parishes. The Rev. H. M. G. Huff, secretary, the Rev. Charles L. Fulforth, assistant, Benjamin G. Godfrey having declined renomination as treasurer of the diocese, a vote of thanks was tendered to him, he having served as treasurer for 30 years. The Rev. L. S. Osborne, of the diocese of Newark, addressed the convention in behalf of the Board of Missions. The memorial church of St. Paul, Overbrook, was admitted into union with the convention.

Bishop Whitaker, in his annual address, presented a record of his official acts during the year, viz.: Celebrations of the Holy Communion, 23; sermons and addresses, 215; Confirmation services, 162; confirmed, 2,580; lay-readers licensed, 60; candidates for Deacons' and Priests' Orders admitted, 5, in the diocese, 18, for Deacons' Orders only, one, for the priesthood, four; postulants admitted, nine, in the diocese, 18; ordered to the diaconate, five, to the priesthood, four; deaconesses set apart, three; clergy received from other dioceses, 21, transferred, 16; clergymen deceased, eight, deposed, one; dedications, one; corner-stones laid, three; marriages, two; burials, 4; number of priests in the diocese, 263, deacons, 11. The Church Training and Deaconess' House has sent out 23 graduates who have been set apart as deaconesses, eight of whom are working in this diocese. In the past 12 years (since he assumed the episcopal charge of the diocese), 32,311 persons have been confirmed, of whom 1,078 received that rite from other bishops, and the number of those whose religious antecedents have been reported is 23,757; of these, 14,388 were brought up in the Church, or had been for a considerable part of their lives under the influence of its teaching. The contributions of the Woman's Auxiliary were as follows: Gifts of money, $23,015; value of boxes, $14,815.88; total, $37,830.88.

The report of the Standing Committee was presented; it was also announced that the treasurer's report had been audited and found correct.

The 40th annual report of the diocesan Board of Missions was read by the Rev. T. William Davidson. It stated that out of 173 parishes and organized missions, 139 have given all or more than they were asked to contribute, 11 have responded in part, and 13 have given nothing. The total receipts were $16,254.74; expenditures, $16,615.05; deficit, $360.31. Special contributions were received to the amount of $406.45, which was applied on account of the appropriation made from the capital fund of 1897, known as the "$10,000 Fund No. 2." The report contained resolutions recommending that the office of diocesan archdeacon be abolished on and after Sept. 1st prox., and that the parishes be requested to contribute during the year the aggregate sum of $20,000, subject to the provision of Section 7, Canon viii. The latter was adopted; but after a long discussion pro and con, the recommendation to abolish the office of archdeacon was lost.

The Rev. Dr. J. Andrews Harris, chairman of the Committee on Canons, reported the following amendment to Article IX of the Constitution:

The election of a bishop, or of a bishop-coadjutor, shall be made in convention by a concurrent vote of the clergy and of the laity, the two orders voting by ballot, separately, and simultaneously, in open convention, and when all the votes of both orders shall have been deposited, the tellers of the clerical and of the lay vote, respectively, shall proceed to count the votes, and if any qualified clergyman shall be found to have received a majority of the votes of the clergy, and also a majority of the votes of the laity at the same ballot, he shall be declared to be duly elected.

Mr. Francis A. Lewis who offered this amendment, stated that at present the clergy of the diocese nominate, and the laity confirm or reject. The object of the change is to give the laity an equal opportunity, as at present they are not capable of taking any original action. The laity should have an opportunity to say who shall be the bishop of the diocese. The report of the committee was adopted, but final action will have to be taken at the next convention.

An amendment to Canon xxi was adopted, that,

Any rector receiving an appropriation from the Sustentation Fund, shall, in addition to the care of his parish, perform such other duty as shall be assigned to him, subject to the approval of the Bishop.

There was a long discussion on the subject of the "archdiaconate," which terminated by the adoption of an amendment to Section 2 of Canon viii, so that it shall read: "The Bishop may" (instead of shall) "appoint an archdeacon." The charter of the memorial church of the Holy Nativity, Rockledge, was approved, and its deputies were admitted to the convention.

Standing Committee re-elected, viz.: The Rev. Drs. B. Watson, J. D. Newlin, J. De W. Perry, J. Andrews Harris, the Rev. James Haughton; Messrs. W. W. Frazier, John Ashhurst, Jr., M.D., G. Harrison Fisher, John E. Baird, and James S. Biddle.

Treasurer of the diocese, Ewing L. Miller. A resolution was adopted fixing the third Tuesday in May, A. D. 1900, as the date of the next convention.

On the appointment of an archdeacon to succeed the Rev. C. T. Brady, a resolution was adopted by which the whole subject was referred to the "Committee of Twelve," with instructions to report at the convention of 1900.

The report of the Committee on Charters submitted an amendment to the canon, which was adopted.

The Rev. W. S. Baer offered a resolution of sympathy with Dr. Ashhurst, which was adopted, and with concluding prayers by the Bishop, convention adjourned sine die.

Reception by the Bishop

Bishop and Mrs. Whitaker tendered a reception on Wednesday evening, 3d inst., to the diocesan convention. The assembly room of the Church House, Philadelphia, was handsomely decorated with flowers. At least 500 were present, the clergy and laity being accompanied by ladies. Mrs. Whitaker was assisted in receiving by several prominent Churchwomen.

Western Michigan

George De Normandie Gillespie, D.D., Bishop

In our account of the recent semi-annual missionary conference held at Muskegon, it should have been stated that the paper on the Girls' Friendly Society was given by Mrs. I. G. Rumney, of St. Luke's church, Kalamazoo.

Iowa

Theodore Nevin Morrison, D.D., Bishop

St. George's, Le Mars

The Bishop made his primary visitation of this parish on St. Mark's Day, accompanied by Dean Cornell. A reception was tendered to him by St. Mary's chapter of the Daughters of the King. At Evensong, ten candidates for Confirmation were presented by the rector, the Rev. W. P. N. J. Wharton. Dean Cornell delivered an address, and the Bishop preached.

Hope Church, Fort Madison

The Bishop made his first visit April 29th and 30th. He preached at both services and confirmed a class of 15 in the evening. The music was admirably rendered. The Bishop created a most favorable impression, both within and without the parish, and complimented the rector, the Rev. Dr. Berry, and his large vested and ladies' auxiliary choir on their efficient work.

The Bishop at St. Thomas, Sioux City

The morning service on the third Sunday after Easter, found the beautiful church, with its seating capacity of 650, crowded. The large vested choir, of which the parish and the city are justly proud, and which the week before had given its annual recital of sacred music, was never in better voice and training. The choir has proven a strong working factor in Church work and Church progress. At the close of his impressive sermon, the Bishop, in a short address, spoke of his future work, and in words of tenderness, asked for the prayers of God's people. The offering for diocesan missions amounted to over $100, and a class of 27 received the Apostolic rite of laying on of hands. In the afternoon Bishop Morrison preached, and confirmed a class of five at St. Paul's mission, the Rev. E. H. Gaynor, rector, and took part in Evensong at St. Thomas, at 7:30 p. m. On Monday, April 24th, a public reception was given the Bishop, at the home of Mr. W. H. Beck, vestryman and treasurer of St. Thomas' parish. St. Thomas' parish has 360 communicants, and the Rev. Dr. Cornell has entered upon the 11th year of his rectorship.

West Virginia

George W. Peterkin, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A new church is to be erected at Davis at an early date. The congregation are now holding religious services in a hall.

The Easter offering of St. Matthew's church, Wheeling, towards canceling their church debt, was $4,500; that of St. Luke's, Wheeling Island, amounted to $3 975, which frees them from debt. Trinity church, Moundsville, on Easter Day received for different diocesan objects, the sum of $266.

The Northwestern Convocation

The spring meeting was held April 11th and 12th, in St. Paul's church, Sistersville, the Rev. J. F. Woods, dean. It opened with Evening Prayer and sermon by the Rev. L. W. Doggett; April 12th, 7 a. m., Holy Communion, celebrant, the dean; 9 a. m., business meeting; 11 a. m., Morning Prayer; 7:30 p. m., missionary meeting, speakers, Dr. S. S. Moore, the Rev. N. S. Thomas, Archdeacon Spurr.

South Dakota

William Hobart Hare, D.D., Bishop

The Bishop's Visit to Flandreau

The Bishop visited this place on Good Friday, holding services in St. Mary's (Indian) church in the afternoon, and in the church of the Redeemer in the evening. Two Indians were confirmed. Local ministers of other bodies were present in the evening, to hear the Bishop tell the Story of the Cross. Easter Day, there was dedicated a massive oak altar, the gift of Mrs. Jesse A. Smith. The Sunday school offering was $18, very large, considering the number of pupils. The regular twenty-mile drive from Flandreau to Dell Rapids on the afternoon of Easter Day, was not very pleasant; too much storm and snow, but the evening service was well attended. The Sunday school offering was $9. On Wednesday of Easter week, the Bishop confirmed six persons.

The Black Hills Deanery

Easter Day the snow came down abundantly on the Black Hills, but did not prevent a large attendance at the services in St. John's church, Deadwood. The offering of the congregation was $195: that of the Sunday school, $20. Arch-deacon Ware has trained the choir during the eight years of his ministry in Deadwood. After the rehearsal Easter Even, one of the little girls handed him a box having the inscription, "Easter greetings, from the choir," and inside was found an exquisitely embroidered silk stole. The Church work in the deanery has been efficiently helped by various gifts, among which are an altar and reredos for the church in Deadwood; an altar for the new church at Lead City, from St. Bartholomew's church, New York, and a small Communion set for the arch-deacon. The mission at Spearfish has a church, a convenient rectory, and three well-organized guilds. St. Cecilia's Guild for girls has been working specially for the clergyman's salary. The congregations filled the church on Easter Day. The offering of the people amounted to $35, that of the Sunday school to $6, a large increase compared with any previous offerings. Mr. Pond has several other places in charge, in all of which there has been an encouraging growth during the past year.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

St. Michael's church, Milton, is a new edifice costing over $10,000, and is well situated for an aggressive work in this community.

Church services have been suspended at Rockland for a time.

The Rev. Andrew Gray, D. D., is doing an excellent work for the Church in Edgartown and the outlying districts.

The Rev. James S. Lemon, of Washington, D. C., has taken charge of the services in Winchendon.

At the Sailors' Haven, on Water st., Charlestown, Church services are held regularly every Sunday evening. They are conducted by the superintendent, Mr. Stanton H. King, and generally a clergyman preaches.

Trinity church, Haverhill, is in a very prosperous condition. At Easter, the offering was nearly $1,000. The rector, the Rev. D. J. Ayers, is at present abroad, and will return in November. The parish is under the charge of the Rev. H. S. Clode-Braddon, Ph. D.

The 114th Annual Diocesan Convention

Held in Trinity chapel Boston, May 3d and 4th. The opening service was a celebration of the Holy Communion in Trinity church. The Rev. R. C. Smith preached the sermon. The Rev. Wm. H. Brooks, D. D., was re-elected secretary, assistant, the Rev. L. C. Manchester, D. D. The report of the Standing Committee was read by the Rev. A. St. John Chambre, D. D. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $1,600. A vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Paddock, the widow of Bishop Paddock, for a gift of valuable books. Mr. A. J. C. Sowdon reported for the Episcopal Fund that the principal amounted to $140,817.10. It received during the year, the addition of $600. The Episcopal Association reported that it had received no gifts or legacies during the year, and that upon the Diocesan House, there was yet a debt of $25,000. A new Diocesan House was urged by the Rev. Dr. Shinn, and a committee appointed to take the subject under consideration. The Rev. Albert E. George reported for the Committee on Parish By-laws, urging the adoption of the following resolution, which was carried:

That the sense of this convention is that an existing parish changing its by-laws should be instructed to insert the following clause in them: "This parish accedes to the Constitution, canons, doctrine, discipline, and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, and to the Constitutions and canons of the diocese of Massachusetts, and acknowledges their authority."

Mr. Robert Treat Paine made an excellent statement in behalf of the Committee on Clerical Support, and quoted the number of parishes in the diocese which had increased the salaries of their rectors.

After luncheon at Hotel Brunswick, Bishop Lawrence delivered his address in Trinity church. Besides commenting upon the progress of the diocese, and the deaths of Bishop Williams and four of the diocesan clergy during the year, he made a strong, touching appeal to the clergy about their work and its sacrifices. He also said these words to the laity:

No man can test the value of a clergyman by the amount of salary he receives. There are men in this diocese in receipt of very meagre salaries, who are doing some of the finest and most efficient work. You can always count on some sacrifice and heroism in the ministry; greater, of course, in some men than in others. A Christian layman is the last man to take advantage of that spirit, and relieve himself of the duty of giving cheerfully and generously to the support of his rector.

Moreover, let me press upon you that though the clergyman may suffer under a meagre salary, it is the laity who also suffer, and far more than they realize. A skilful surgeon may perform an operation with a penknife, but if we want our surgery well done, we will see that the surgeon has the best of instruments. Study such modern buildings as the City Hospital, the Eye and Ear Infirmary, and the McLean Hospital, and you will see with what generosity and perfection of detail the public supplies its physicians for work in behalf of the poorest of our citizens. Cut the clergyman off from good tools, fresh books, and invigorating influences, lay on him the petty economies of a narrow income, depress him with anxiety as to the future of his family in case he should be cut off in the prime of life without saving a dollar or even being able to obtain an adequate life insurance, and while you can get some work out of him and keep the parish going, and while some exceptional men may under such conditions do heroic service, you cannot expect that buoyancy, freshness, and uplift which a rector ought to give, and which he can give, under favorable conditions. The one reason that I press for the more generous support of the clergy is not for the clergyman's sake, not because he is poor and his wife overworked (I am sure that the clergy would rebuke me for urging that motive), but because the spiritual life of the laity suffers; they do not get from their rector the uplift that they need. Good food, good literature, relief from sordid care, are essential to the best work, and with these, I believe, the clergy can be trusted to do stronger, finer, and more self-sacrificing work for and with the people.

The following were elected on the Standing Committee: The Rev. Drs. A. St. John Chambre, J. S. Lindsay, E. W. Donald, L. K. Storrs; Hon. Robert Codman, Messrs. Francis C. Foster, Chas. G. Saunders, A. J. C. Sowdon.

The Rev. Herman Page and Mr. Henry M. Lovering were elected on the Board of Missions. The majority and minority reports on the Canon of Discipline, a subject which has been before the convention for three years, were discussed; the adoption of Canon 1 of the minority report, with modifications, was carried, as was also Canon 2, which provides for a mixed court of clergy and laity to try a clergyman. A committee of four clergymen and four laymen were appointed by the Bishop to act with the Board of Missions of the Church. The Rev. C. H. Lea-royd was elected treasurer of the diocese. The report of the Diocesan Board of Missions was circulated in a printed form among the members. Resolutions on the observance of Sunday and arbitration were presented, and other routine and local business, after which the convention adjourned with prayer.

North Dakota

Samuel C. Edsall, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. Koderick J. Mooney, rector of Gethsemane church, Fargo, has been presented with a finely equipped wheel by his appreciative friends and parishioners.

St. John's Church, Dickinson

Bishop Edsall visited here from April 20th to 24th, and was very warmly welcomed by the citizens. A public reception was given in his honor, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Freeman. At morning service there was a celebration of the Holy Communion. The musical portion of the service was efficiently rendered by a volunteer choir, led by the Rev. C. E. Dobson, of the diocese of Montana. The Bishop preached eloquent and stirring sermons, both morning and evening, to large congregations of people of all denominations. The Rev. J. P. Lytton has been in charge of the mission the past year, and will continue his work at this post. It is felt that his scholarly Church teaching will do much to build up the Church at this outpost. Previous to his appointment the church had been closed for some years. The Bishop expressed himself much gratified over its present condition, and its undoubted prospects for future growth. Bishop Edsall has won all hearts in Dickinson, as he has done at every other point in North Dakota. Rector and people feel that his visitation has been a real strength to St. John's church, and never before in the history of the work have the people felt more encouraged.

Quincy

Alexander Burgess, D. D., LL. D., Bishop

Bishop Seymour visited Osco on Thursday evening, April 20th, and confirmed a class of four, presented by the rector, the Rev. William M. Purce. The parish is in better condition now than it has been for years, and the prospects for the future are most encouraging.

Church Progress at Galva

At the mission church of the Holy Communion, Galva, Bishop Seymour confirmed a class of five, on Friday evening, April 21st, presented by the priest in charge, the Rev. Wm. M. Purce. It is the first Confirmation service which has been held in Galva for years. The little church has been furnished by various parishes in the diocese. The pews are from St. Matthew's, Cambridge; altar cross from Princeton; lecturn from Bradford; candlesticks from Canton; bishop's chair from Osco; chalice and paten from Galesburg. The interest in the work is growing. The Sunday school Lenten offerings for general missions was $5.43.

The rector of St. John's Swedish church, Galesburg, has been appointed on the committee of Swedish clergy to translate the Swedish service book into English. His part of work is the translation of "High Mass."

Work has at last been commenced on Christ church, Meyer, and it is hoped that in a short time the building will be ready for use. The general missionary, the Rev. Wm. Francis Mayo, is superintending the work.

Arkansas

Henry Niles Pierce, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
Wm. M. Brown, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor

The 27th Annual Council of the Diocese

Met at Trinity cathedral, Little Rock, May 3d, and was opened with celebration of the Holy Communion, the venerable Diocesan being celebrant. Secretary elected, Hon. John M. Daggett. The annual report of the Bishop was read, which shows that in spite of his advanced years, he has a great deal of energy, the work which he accomplished during the past year would do credit to many a younger man. All the clergy, with one exception, were present, and a goodly number of delegates responded to their names. Deputies to General Convention were elected as follows: The Rev. Messrs. Chas. H. Lockwood, J. J. Vaulx, D. B. Ramsay, and G. Gordon Smeade; Messrs. Joseph A. Reeves, P. K. Roots, S. S. Faulkner, and John M. Daggett. Major P. K. Roots was unanimously re-elected treasurer. The Rev. R. W. Rhames and Mr. Jos. A. Reeves were elected representatives to the Missionary Council.

The annual report of the Bishop-Coadjutor was made the special order for Wednesday night. At the close of the address, the Hon. William G. Whipple (the leader of the opposition during the election of Bishop-Coadjutor) in a most touching manner made a few remarks which greatly affected those present, and concluded with the moving of the following resolutions, which were unanimously and enthusiastically adopted:

WHEREAS, Since his consecration, less than a year ago, by his exclusive devotion to the duties of his high office, by his tireless energy, his visitations to every portion of his broad field, his efficient work in many parishes, his fervent zeal, his broad catholicity of spirit, and his executive ability, our Bishop-Coadjutor, William Montgomery Brown, has merited special recognition and won general approval. Therefore be it

Resolved; That this council voicing the sentiment of the diocese, heartily accord Bishop Brown their unqualified approbation of his work.

Standing Committee elected: Rev. Messrs. Charles H. Lockwood, G. Gordon Smeade, W. D. Buckner; Major P. K. Roots, and Mr. J. A. Reeves. Board of Missions: Rev. Messrs. Lockwood, Smeade, and Buckner; Messrs. Gatling, Adams, and Trulock. On the recommendations of the several convocations, the Bishop appointed the deans as follows: Rev. G. Gordon Smeade, dean of the Little Rock convocation; Rev. J. J. Vaulx, dean of the Fort Smith convocation, and the Rev. Charles H. Lockwood, dean of the Helena convocation.

On Thursday afternoon the Woman's Auxiliary met at the cathedral, and, after presenting the reports of the officers, and transacting other routine business, elected the following officers: President, Mrs. J. B. Pillow, of Helena; vice-presidents, Mrs. Logan Roots, of the cathedral, Mrs. Boone, of Pine Bluff; secretary, Mrs. Cantrell, Christ church, Little Rock; treasurer, Mrs. P. K. Roots, of the cathedral. President of Junior Auxiliary, Mrs. Valliant, of Pine Bluff; secretary of the Junior Auxiliary, Mrs. Morrison, of the cathedral; treasurer, Mrs. J. Secord, of Hot Springs.

The Very Rev. Stephen Green, dean of St. Mary's cathedral, Memphis, was present at the meeting of the council as a representative of the General Board of Missions, and delivered a stirring address on missions.

Bishop Brown was consecrated on St. John's Day—June 24th, 1898—and since then he has visited 35 places; total number of visits, 65. His visitations extended over from one day to seven days, during which time he held from one to 18 services. The Bishop adopted the plan of extended visitations because he believed it to be his duty as a chief shepherd to know the flock and to take part in its instruction in the way of life. With one or two exceptions he has so far succeeded in calling at the homes of all our people in the several mission parishes and stations visited. Services held, 135; sermons preached, 94; addresses made, 42; lectures delivered, 53; baptized, 15; confirmed, 56; celebrations of Holy Communion, 33; marriages, 2; consultations with vestries and parish meetings, 14; attended three meetings of the Board of Missions, and assisted at the consecration of the church at Helena. After defining his future policy in regard to the work of the diocese, the Bishop-Coadjutor closed his admirable address with the following words:

I cannot close this, my first annual address to the Council, without some expression of appreciation and gratitude for the kind reception and cordial co-operation that have been accorded me by all our rectors and missionaries, and by every parish and mission station. Human nature being what it is, this is more than I had dared to hope for. I really expected and dreaded a good deal of coldness and some opposition. But in this I have been so far most happily disappointed, and as I have visited every congregation in the diocese, and have heard nothing to the contrary, I conclude that there is not a single clergyman or layman who would lay a straw in the way of my usefulness or happiness. Not only have I escaped opposition from the quarters in which it was expected, but some of my most efficient helpers have been from among those who were most strenuously opposed to my election and confirmation as the Bishop-Coadjutor of Arkansas; and I have no reason to doubt that all others who were on their side in that unhappy and prolonged controversy, would have been equally helpful with the same opportunities. For all this I bless God and thank my noble-hearted Christian brethren who, for the love they bear to Christ and His Church, have sacrificed so much for the peace and harmony of this diocese.

The sessions of the council were remarkable for the harmony and good will which prevailed. The next meeting will be held at the Cathedral, Little Rock, in May, 1900.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
Robert A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor

Bishop coadjutor Gibson will deliver the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class at Hampton Sidney, his alma mater.

Bishop Whittle visited Hamilton on the morning of April 15th, preached, and confirmed a class of eight. In the evening he preached at Round Hill. He confirmed a class of seven at St. James' church, Leesburg. The Bishop still preaches with all the ability and force of a man in the prime of life.

Ground has just been broken for the new parish hall to be erected at once by Epiphany church, Barton Heights.

Minnesota

Henry B. Whipple, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
M. N. Gilbert, D. D., LL. D., Bishop-coadjutor

The Rev. John Wright, of St. Paul, and Mrs. Wright expect to make an extensive trip through Europe on account of Mrs. Wright's health.

Christ church, Redwing, mourns the removal by death of one of its staunchest supporters and loyal Churchmen, Harry Bernard Lovgren, March 27th, vestryman, chorister, and lay-reader, aged 31.

Archdeacon Webber is holding Missions at Albert Lea and Janesville, with good results.

A very beautiful altar has been placed in Christ church, Austin.

Bishop Brown's lecture at Christ church, St. Paul, brought out a large and appreciative audience to hear the last of the Church Club lectures on the Seabury period.

The Rev. C. E. Haupt, rector of the church of the Messiah, St. Paul, after much hard and persistent labor, succeeded in lifting a $1,200 debt off his parish on Easter Day.

Church Club

At the Eastertide meeting, April 28th, held at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, the guests of honor were Bishop Edsall, of North Dakota, and Bishop Morrison, of Iowa. Addresses of welcome to the Northwest were made by Bishops Gilbert and Hare, to which both the guests made pleasing responses. Other addresses were made by Hon. John B. Winslow, associate justice of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, the Rev. Robert H. Paine, of Baltimore, and Dr. Sterling, of London, England.

Bishop Gilbert's Visitations

Rush City, 2; White Bear, 2; Minneapolis—Holy Trinity, 18; St. Mark's, 10; All Saints', 6; St. Ansgarius', 15; Gethsemane, 42; Grace, 17; St. Paul's, 13; St. Andrew's, 4; Farmington, 2; St. Paul—St. Stephen's, 3; St. James', 5; St. Mary's, 6; Messiah, 11; St. Peter's, 14; Christ church, 21; St. Matthew's, 7; Stillwater, 20; Dundas, 6; Austin, 6; Owatonna, 10.

The St. Paul Clericus

Met at Good Shepherd church, the Rev. Mr. Purdy, special preacher. After the celebration of the Blessed Sacrament, the rector, the Rev. W. C. Pope, delivered an interesting paper on "The objective and subjective in religion"; the Rev. Mr. Thomas reviewed Sandy's book on the Revelation. Both papers elicited interesting debate. Luncheon was served by the ladies of the parish.

Death of Mr. F. Farrington

Holy Trinity church, Minneapolis, has sustained an irreparable loss in the death of Mr. F. Farrington, a prominent official on the N. P. R'y, St. Paul, for many years warden and Sunday school superintendent, and a generous supporter of the Church. The funeral service was held in the church, the rector, the Rev. Stuart B. Purves, officiating. The body was conveyed to Owego, N. Y., for interment.

St. Paul's Church, Owatonna

Easter offering, $97.43; Sunday school offering, over $20. The vested choir of 40 voices rendered the musical programme very creditably. Annual vestry meeting largely attended, finances in better condition than for years past; future bright and hopeful. April 6th, Bishop Gilbert confirmed 10 whose ages ranged from 10 to 80 years, presented by the rector, the Rev. A. G. Pinkham.

Redwood Falls

Easter Day 40 out of a possible 47 received at the Celebrations; the offerings very satisfactory, despite the very heavy losses of communicants by removal during the past year. The debt on the parish has been reduced $1,025 during the past year. Signs of spiritual improvement are evident, and the prospects for the future are very encouraging.

Vermont

Arthur C. A. Hall, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. C. W. McCully who for several years past has been priest-in-charge of Trinity church, Winooski, has resigned, and for the present is assisting the clergy of St. Paul's, Burlington. Mr. McCully's labors at Winooski have been eminently successful, and many will be the regrets at his departure to new fields of work.

The new parish house at Trinity, Shelburne, which has already been described in these columns, is finished, furnished, and occupied.

The Rev. J. Isham Bliss, D. D., rector of St. Paul's, Burlington, is still confined to the house, and unable to discharge his duties. A severe illness during the past winter has left him in a weakened condition, but a complete restoration to health and strength is hopefully expected.

Alabama

Richard Hooker Wilmer, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
H. Melville Jackson, D. D., Bishop-coadjutor

Christ church parish, Mobile, 15 years ago had 350 members, and now has a few less than 500, yet during that time there have been 900 names on its communicant list. This church gives largely to other parishes in the city, and its guild and chapters do noble work among the poor of the parish.

The Sixty-eighth Annual Council

Convened in Grace church, Anniston, May 3d. The day previous the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held their council. Reports showed that while the Brotherhood had not made large gains during the year, it had accomplished a great deal of effective work, and that as lay-readers they were doing a most valuable missionary duty. The Rev. E. G. Murphy made the annual address.

The diocesan council opened with service, and sermon by the Rev. E. G. Murphy, upon "The dangers of the Church—her opportunities for life and glory." To the great joy of the council, Bishop Wilmer found himself able to stand the long journey from Mobile, and to be present at its sessions, though the actual duty of presiding fell upon the Rev. Dr. T. J. Beard. The serious illness of his father prevented the Bishop-coadjutor from being present, except for a short time on the second day. Bishop Wilmer delivered his pastoral charge at a special session. It was an amplification of the pastoral letter he had prepared for the House of Bishops at the last General Convention, but which was withdrawn.

The business sessions of the Council were held in the court room of Anniston. The Rev. Dr. R. H. Cobbs was re-elected secretary. For many years the diocese has been working under imperfect and ill-arranged canons. This year, the Hon. O. J. Semmes, of Mobile, at the request of the Standing Committee, undertook the task of preparing a new set. The result of his labor was presented to the Standing Committee, by whom it was carefully gone over, and finally presented to the council in printed form. The work had been so thoroughly done, and the reasons for every change were so clearly explained, that in one four-hours' session, the entire body of Constitution and Canons was accepted by the council with some few minor changes. Friday night the missionary meeting was held in Grace church, the Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, Missionary Bishop of Asheville, making an address.

Election of diocesan officers resulted in the choice of Mr. J. H. Fitts, of Tuscaloosa, as treasurer of the diocese. Standing Committee: Rev. Messrs. D. C. Peabody, R. W. Barnwell, and J. G. Murray; Messrs. O. J. Semmes, W. W. Screws, and W. K. P. Wilson. After an altogether pleasant and profitable session, the council adjourned, on Saturday morning, to meet in Mobile, May 16, 1900.

Central New York

F. D. Huntington, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Recent improvements have been made in the interior of Trinity church, Lowville, the Rev. E. B. Doolittle, rector, including electric light fixtures.

The will of the late Mrs. Helen E. Thomson, of Utica, devises $50,000 to various religious and charitable objects, as follows: Bishop Huntington, for the benefit of diocesan missions, $5,000; the Bishop's Relief Fund, $5,000; Grace church, Utica, for the Endowment Fund, $5,000; Woman's Auxiliary, $3,000; St. Stephen's church, New Hartford, St. Paul's church, Paris Hill, and memorial church of the Holy Cross, Utica, each $3,000, income to be applied to the support of its clergyman; House of Good Shepherd and Home for Aged Men and Couples, Utica, each $5,000, income to be applied to current expenses; Woman's Christian Association, $10,000, income to be applied in relieving the poor of the city of Utica; Working Girls' Club, Utica, $2,000; the Flower Mission, Utica, $1,000. The House of the Good Shepherd is also made one of the residuary legatees.

The Rt. Rev. Wm. D. Walker, acting for Bishop Huntington, visited Zion church, Rome, the Rev. Dr. J. H. Egar, rector, April 10th, and confirmed 32 persons. The Holy Week and Easter services in this parish were impressive, and of special interest. The well-trained choir sang Stainer's "Crucifixion" on the evening of Palm Sunday.

Second District Convocation

The regular meeting took place in St. Thomas' church, Hamilton, the Rev. A. H. Rogers, rector, April 25-26, the dean, the Rev. Oliver Owen, presiding. Addresses were made by the Rev. Dr. Egar and the Rev. Messrs. John Arthur and A. G. Singen. On Wednesday morning, remarks were made on "The encouragements and discouragements of the clergy." The Rev. J. J. Burd delivered a thoughtful sermon, on "The objective and subjective character of the Church." A joint meeting of the convocation and the Woman's Auxiliary was held, when reports were made by the dean and the presidents of the Woman's Auxiliary and the Junior Auxiliary of the district.

Texas

George H. Kinsolving, D.D., Bishop

The Bishop visited St. Mary's parish, Houston, on April 9th, preached a powerful and helpful sermon, and confirmed a class of 18, presented by the rector, the Rev. H. J. Brown, D. D. St. Mary's parish is composed entirely of laboring people, and sadly needs a new building. It is hoped those who have abundance will help those who are in need. In the afternoon, the Bishop visited Trinity mission, preached, and confirmed a class of nine, presented by the Rev. H. J. Brown, D. D., priest-in charge.

Florida

Edwin Gardner Weed, D. D., Bishop

Fifty-Sixth Annual Council

Met in St. John's church, Jacksonville, May 3rd. Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop, who preached a remarkably clear and strong sermon, his subject being, "The Church Idea," as running through the entire history of religion. The council met for business in the parish house, and organized by the re-election of the Rev. J. R. Bicknell as secretary; the Rev. A. B. Whitcombe, assistant; 18 clergymen, canonically resident, beside several others at work in the diocese, were present; 17 parishes and missions were represented. The Bishop read his annual address concerning the needs, encouragements, and discouragements of his field of work. It showed that, notwithstanding the great depression caused by the destruction of the principal products of the State by the past severe winter, the Church had fairly held its ground. Every parish and mission is filled by either resident clergy or temporary supply. The Bishop paid a touching tribute to the memory of the late Presiding Bishop, and the Rev. E. Gay, late rector of St. Peter's church, Fernandino.

The treasurer's report gave the gratifying statement that all financial obligations had been met, with a small balance in hand; the missionaries had been promptly paid, and the missionary board had a fair balance to its credit.

In the evening a good missionary service was held, with addresses by the Bishop and several of the clergy. Mr. R. D. Knight was re-elected treasurer.

Standing Committee: The Rev. Drs. V. W. Shields and W. H. Carter, the Rev. G. H. Ward; Messrs. R. D. Knight, H. E. Dotterer, and W. W. Hampton.

The council memorialized the General Convention in regard to the office of presiding bishop, suggesting that it should be elective rather than by seniority, as at present. This is on account of the pressure of work which is forced upon the eldest bishop of the Church, at a time when his burden should be lightened.

A resolution was passed and sent to the Legislature of the State, and to the Governor, asking that the tract of land in the Everglades, at present occupied by the Seminole Indians, but in constant danger of being taken away from them by the numerous settlers that are rapidly moving in there, be forever set apart for their use. The Seminoles are a peaceful, industrious, and honest tribe of about 400 people.

The Committee on Education and Sunday School Work recommended the appointment of a Sunday school board, which was adopted. It is hoped it will bring about some practical reforms in carrying on that most important branch of Church work.

Thursday morning an earnest meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held, beginning with a corporate Celebration by the Bishop. Their report for the past year exhibited the usual energetic labor of the women of the diocese, on which depends largely the success of its missionary work.

The music at all the services was excellent, especially that of Thursday night by a mixed choir of 40 voices, at which the Bishop made an admirable address on "Worship, in its spirit and its truth."

The council adjourned at 10:30 p. m. on Thursday, after appointing St. John's church, Tallahassee, as the next place of meeting.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Epiphany church, Lynchburg, has held divine service and Sunday school during the past two years, under the auspices of the St. Paul's chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. A meeting was held on Easter Monday of the congregation and vestry, and a rector called.

The Petersburg Convocation

Opened April 13th. The convocation sermon was preached by the Rev. W. B. Capers. In the afternoon an essay by Mr. D. L. Pulliam, on "The layman's place in the parish," was read, and voted to be printed. Evening Prayer, with sermon by the Rev. C. R. Kuyk, concluded the meetings.

Southwest Virginia Convocation

Held in St. Thomas' church, Christiansburg, on April 19-21st. The Rev. J. J. Lloyd, D. D., preached the opening sermon. Reports from the different parishes show a growing and healthy condition, and the financial reports are much larger than those of last year. An able sermon was preached at the large missionary meeting by the Rev. M. P. Logan. The Rev. R. W. Patton preached the last sermon of the convocation.

Fond du Lac

Charles Chapman Grafton, D.D., Bishop

The Rev. C. T. Lewis whose ordination to the priesthood is recorded in another column, has been in Tomahawk since All Saints' Day, 1898, and in that time the mission has flourished exceedingly. The church has been entirely repainted in the interior, had a new hot-air furnace placed in position, and has been completely seated with massive oak pews, choir stalls, and sedalia. All indebtedness has been wiped out, and preparations are being made to build a side chapel for the daily offices. On April 29th, the Bishop confirmed 7 in Tomahawk, and in the evening of April 30th, 5 in the church of the Ascension, Merrill. There have been 16 Baptisms in these two missions in the last two months, 7 of them adults.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

At a recent meeting of the trustees of the Berkeley Divinity School, Dr. Binney who has been for some time vice-dean, was elected to fill Bishop Williams' place as head of the school.

Christ church, South Farms, parts with regret with the Rev. Prof. Townsend who for 20 years has been its rector. Owing to increasing years and his duties at the Divinity School, he has resigned, and the Rev. George B. Gilbert, a Berkeley graduate of 1897, has been called to the rectorate.

New Haven County Convocation

The 244th meeting was held in Christ church, New Haven, April 18th. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the rector, the Rev. George B. Morgan, at 10:30; the dean, the Rev. C. E. Woodcock, was the preacher. After being entertained by the Rev. and Mrs. Morgan at the rectory, the clergy assembled in the crypt for the business and literary session. The exegesis on I. John v: 16, was delivered by Archdeacon Wildman. The Rev. R. H. Gesner read a scholarly paper, on "The origin and growth of Christian ceremonial." About 20 of the clergy were in attendance, besides four visiting clergy.

St. John's Church, New Haven

The debt has been wiped out, after six months' earnest work by the rector and vestry. On the 3d Sunday after Easter, the rector preached an historical sermon, and gave some statistics regarding the origin and development of the parish. Mr. Means became rector in 1885. Since that time, there have been 224 Baptisms, 140 Confirmations, 65 marriages, and 156 burials. There are about 260 communicants on the roll at present. Since 1883, $90,000 have been contributed for parochial support and work. On the Tuesday following the announcement that all the money necessary for the payment of the last of the $12,000 indebtedness had been raised, the wardens and vestry presented a silver and cut glass loving cup to Mr. Means, in recognition of his 16 years' service and his efforts to raise the debt. Col. Osborne, of The Evening Register, made the speech of presentation, and Mr. Means responded in a very happy and graceful vein. A large number of the parishioners were present to congratulate their rector and share in the mutual joy which all feel over the extinguishment of the debt.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew

There was a very large attendance at the spring meeting of the local conference in Christ church, New Haven, on the evening of April 12th. The subject proposed for the evening's debate, was "How can we best reach an unbeliever?" Dr. Wm. C. Sturgis who has lately returned from Europe, opened the subject in a stimulating address. The ensuing discussion was eagerly entered into by many of those present. An interesting feature of the meeting was the large number of boys present from the neighboring Junior chapters of the Brotherhood.

The Berkeley Association of Yale

This venerable association, which is an organization of the Churchmen of the university, has elected the following officers for the coming year: President, William B. Stoskopf, 1900; vice-president, Edward B. Greene, 1900; secretary and treasurer, E. N. Curtis, 1901. The association is glad to have the names of Churchmen entering the university, and endeavors to foster the love and loyalty of Churchmen to their Mother during their college course. There is a course of six sermons each year before the members of the association.

Kentucky

Thomas U. Dudley, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Bishop

One of the most prominent members of Christ church cathedral was buried from there recently, Judge Reginald H. Thompson, for over 27 years an upright police judge of Louisville. He had served for several years as president of the Newsboy's Home, and was very much interested in the betterment of the condition of these little fellows. He was a man who knew how to temper judgment with mercy, and to advise all whom he thought capable of any improvement whatever.

Calvary Church, Louisville

The choir sang Rossini's Stabat Mater with good effect, on the 4th Sunday after Trinity. This was the fourth of a series of splendid song services prepared by Mr. George Selby, the organist of Calvary. The others were Gaul's "Holy City," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Barnby's "The Lord is King." The fifth and last of the series was the oratorio of "St. Paul," and many of the leading singers of the city united in its rendition.

Large Easter Offerings

The Easter offerings in the churches of the city were very satisfactory. At St. Andrew's it was almost $5,000, within a few hundred dollars of the entire indebtedness on the building. The church will be consecrated on Tuesday, May 17th. At Grace church the offering was $520, a result due largely to the plain, practical teaching of their parish priest, the Rev. L. E. Johnston. At the cathedral the offerings were a little over $3,000, and at Calvary about $2,000. The Advent and St. Paul's made also a liberal offering.

Recent Confirmations

Hopkinsville, 9; Henderson—St. Paul's, 1; St. Clement's, 4; Christ church, Bowling Green, 8; Christ church, Guthrie, 2; Glasgow, 2; Louisville: St. Paul's, 16; the cathedral, 41; St. Peter's, 12; Epiphany, 17; Calvary, 24; Grace church, 9; Christ church, Elizabethtown, 1; Louisville: St. Andrew's, 18; Advent, 18; St. John's, 3; Trinity, 7; Trinity, Owensboro, 2; St. Mark's, Crescent Hill, Louisville, 9. It will be seen from this report that the Church is doing good work, especially in the see city. The archdeacon, the Rev. M. M. Benton, is laboring also at numerous other points near Louisville, such as Shelbyville, Cloverport, Madisonville, Kuttawa, and the dean of Paducah, the Rev. Benjamin E. Reed, is indefatigable in pushing the work at Princeton, Hickman, Columbus, and other places in the western end.

Albany

William Crosswell Doane, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. A. R. Hegeman, rector of Holy Innocents', has gone abroad for a month's vacation. The Rev. L. W. Richardson, D.D., LL.D., is in charge during his absence.

The Clericus of Albany, Troy, and vicinity held its last monthly meeting, with the Rev. Edward W. Babcock, president, in the rectory of the Holy Cross, Troy. The Rev. Dr. Nickerson read a very interesting paper, on "The lost Englishman."

St. Paul's Church, Albany

The late Rev. Dr. Reese, by will, leaves this church a legacy of $15,000. Dr. Reese was rector of St. Paul's for 27 years. The vestry of St. Paul's are to decide at once upon a date for making St. Andrew's chapel an independent church. This is quite necessary, owing to its rapid growth and the need of a curate to assist the rector, the Rev. F. G. Jewett, in the home work.

Confirmation at Holy Cross, Troy

Six candidates were confirmed. The clergy present besides Bishop Doane were the rector, the Rev. E. W. Babcock, the Rev. Messrs. H. R. Freeman, George A. Holbrook, Dr. E. A. Enos, and J. Mills Gilbert. The Bishop made an address. There was a large cross of flowers in memory of Dr. Tucker. The offerings on Easter Day far exceeded the amount required for diocesan missions.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Southern Archdeaconry of Brooklyn

The annual meeting was held on the evening of May 5th. The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving was elected archdeacon, to succeed the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop who has recently resigned. The Rev. W. D. Morgan was elected secretary, Charles M. Trowbridge, treasurer, and William H. Thomas, delegate to the Missionary Committee.

Daughters of the King

The annual meeting of the local assembly was held May 5th, in St. Luke's church, Brooklyn. There was a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, the rector, the Rev. H. C. Swentzel, celebrant, and a brief, practical address by the Rev. Dr. J. Clarence Jones who took for his topic, "The use of the Order as a factor in Church work." Officers were elected, and reports read from the diocesan chapters. Miss S. Bluxome who organized the local assembly of Long Island, and who has served as its president since, declined re-nomination on account of her change of residence. An interesting address was made by Miss E. L. Ryerson, general secretary of the order, on "Faithfulness of Work." Three papers were read on the motto, "Bravely Bearing the Cross." In the evening there was an open service. The Rev. Dr. James H. Darlington made an address.

Quarter-Centennial at Richmond Hill

The 25th anniversary of the church of the Resurrection, the Rev. Geo. Wm. Davenport, rector, was celebrated on Sunday, May 2nd. All of the clergymen now living who have acted as rector since its organization took part in the service: the Rev. Messrs. Davenport, Joshua Kimber, John Watson, and Arthur Sloane.

The Mission at Mineola

Begun in February, this is proving the need of its existence. The services are well attended. On Easter Day a class of five were confirmed by the Bishop of the diocese. The mission has been named "The church of the Nativity." The Misses Maria and Evelena Wood have deeded to the Bishop five lots for Church purposes, making sufficient ground for a church, parish house, and rectory in a very desirable location. There is a building fund of $350, and when this is increased to $1,000, the erection of a parish house will be begun. A choir of ten boys from St. Paul's School, Garden City, under the direction of Mr. Harden, have volunteered to furnish the music at the evening services. The school has presented the mission with a handsome organ, and has also promised to pay the salary of a lay-reader. The young men of the school have decided to devote their offerings for missions to the Mineola mission for one year.

Mission at Massapequa

The mission started by the rector of Grace church in a remote part of the parish, is steadily gaining ground. From one teacher and five pupils, it has grown to six teachers and more than 40 pupils. A neat chapel and guild house have been erected. On Easter Day there were 24 communicants. On Sunday, March 26th, a beautiful silver paten and chalice, given by Mr. Robert Redhead, in memory of his daughter Myra, were blessed.

St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn

This church, the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop, rector, has recently been the recipient of $1,000, by the will of Mrs. Catherine M. Spear. This will be added to the endowment fund, and the interest paid into the treasury, taking the place of what her offerings have been. Including this legacy, the endowment fund aggregates something over $25,000.

Georgia

Cleland Kinlock Nelson, D.D., Bishop

During his March visitations, Bishop Nelson confirmed 73 persons.

On Easter evening, in St. Michael's church, Waynesboro, an interesting service was held, the occasion being the unveiling of a beautiful font of Marietta veined marble, the gift of Mrs. Valeria B. W. Sallas, in memory of her husband. This church hopes to add a chancel to its building by Easter next.

St. Cyprian's church, Darien, destroyed by a cyclone last fall, is now to be rebuilt in a substantial material called tabby.

A local assembly of the Daughters of the King has been recently organized in this diocese, and will hold its first semi-annual meeting on May 16th, in St. Luke's church, Atlanta.

Bishop Nelson recently visited St. Simon's Island, Brunswick, and blessed the corner-stone of the new school building of St. Athanasius' church. This school will have industrial departments, as well as those for literary instruction, making it one of the most important institutions for colored people in the State.

Emmanuel church, Athens, the Rev. Troy Beatty, rector, will soon be in a condition to be used for Church services. The late Bishop Stevens, of Pennsylvania, while occupying the chair of belles lettres in the University of Georgia when a young man, was rector of this church.

Confirmations in Savannah

Bishop Nelson visited Christ church, Savannah, on Easter Day, confirming a class of 25. In the evening he visited St. Paul's church, preached and confirmed a class of 15, three among them having been Roman Catholics. During a visitation of ten days to this city, the Bishop confirmed 83 persons.

Parish House at Thomasville

The new parish house of St. Thomas' church, is due partly to the generous help of Dr. Frederick Humphrey's, of New York, who makes Thomasville his winter home. The building adjoining, and connected with the church, is very beautiful, Gothic in architecture, and faced with pressed brick, corresponding with that of the church, and finished with Georgia pine. The main hall will be used for Sunday school, guild, and like purposes, with space for the rector's study, class and robing rooms. The building cost $1,200, exclusive of furnishings. The offerings made at Easter were devoted to this purpose, as well as $300 donated by friends of the parish.

Indiana

The Rev. John Foster Kirk, Jr., rector of St. John's church, Washington, was married April 27th, to Miss Frances Anne Reid, at St. Luke's church, Germantown, Philadelphia, the rector, the Rev. Dr. Samuel Upjohn, officiating.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Christ Church, Crosswell

After months of waiting, the beautiful new stone church was opened April 19th, by Bishop Davies, with a sermon by the Rev. T. W. MacLean. In the evening was the opening service of the Saginaw Valley convocation, the Bishop preaching and administering Confirmation to a class of six. Two Celebrations followed on Thursday morning, at which time the highest number of Communion was made in the history of the parish. Thursday evening was the final service, with a masterly sermon by the dean, the Rev. Mr. MacLean. The new building was begun in July, 1898, and the corner-stone laid by the Rev. R. H. Weller, Jr., of Wisconsin, Aug. 23d, 1898. It is a complete and well arranged structure, designed by Mr. John Sutcliffe, of Chicago, who, for a small amount of money, planned a most desirable building. The present rector, the Rev. Francis M. Bacon, has been in charge two years and a half, and has done a successful work. At the beginning of his rectorship there were 26 confirmed persons in the parish, and now there are 65. The rector has presented 36 for Confirmation, and baptized 32 persons, the majority adults.

The Southern Convocation

Met in Tecumseh, April 27th. The morning session of business was preceded by a celebration of the Holy Eucharist, with a sermon by the Rev. Dr. McCarroll. In the afternoon the Rev. Wm. Gardam read a paper upon "The agitation in the mother Church—what does it mean?" After consideration of the Detroit convocation report on "A better plan than now in use for raising money for diocesan missions," a resolution was passed containing in part the following:

"Whatever be the judgment and decision of the convention of the diocese, in the opinion of the Southern convocation the best method must be supplemented by the creation of an enlightened public sentiment concerning diocesan missionary work. We would suggest, therefore, that the convention appoint and authorize a commission of clergy and laity, to visit parishes and missions throughout the diocese, and to represent and advocate the work.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

St. Mark's League and the Choir Festival

The combined service for the anniversary of St. Mark's Friendly League and the annual Choir Festival took place at St. Paul's church on the eve of St. Mark's Day, and was rendered by the vested choirs of Ascension church, St. Paul's, and Christ church and St. John's, Georgetown. Mr. D. B. MacLeod, choir-master of St. Paul's, was director, and Mr. Frank Camp, of the Ascension, organist. The service was rendered with perfect accord, and with great force and beauty of expression, the anthems—the Gloria from Mozart's "Twelfth Mass," and Tours' "God hath appointed a day"—being particularly effective. After shortened Evensong, the League hymn, "In the vineyard of our Father," was heartily sung, and the Rev. Dr. Elliott read the annual report, showing the missionary work done by the various parochial branches during the year past; he also gave a unique and interesting address. The Bishop spoke a few earnest words, suggesting some special work in St. Mary's county for the League's consideration.

Daughters of the King

The third annual convention of the diocesan branches met in Christ church, East Washington, April 27th. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, and an address was delivered by the Rev. A. S. Johns. Mrs. W. G. Davenport presided at the business meeting. Reports from the several chapters were read, all showing increased membership, and much good work accomplished. The afternoon session was devoted to the election of officers, consultation on methods of work, and five-minute papers by members. An evening service closed the convention, with addresses by the Rev. H. S. Smith, on "The relation of the Order to the parish;" Rev. J. B. Perry, on "Prayer of the Order," and Rev. G. W. Davenport, on "Personal work."

Woman's Auxiliary

The closing service and annual meeting took place at St. Paul's church on Tuesday, May 2nd. There was a large gathering of Church women, representing nearly all the city parishes, and delegates from recently-organized branches in the counties were welcomed with special pleasure. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the rector who, also, in the absence of the Bishop, gave a brief but excellent address upon work for missions as seed cast upon the waters. The annual report was read: 20 parish branches have taken an active part in the work during the past year. The aggregate value of boxes sent to missionaries, and donations of money, is over $5,200. Four new parochial branches, and also a "Baby's branch" have been organized. The president, Miss Wilkes, briefly reviewed the work of the winter. A very interesting letter was read from Dr. Gunton, in China, the first woman worker sent out through the United Off ring of 1898; and also a warm and appreciative letter of thanks from a missionary in Utah for a box sent at Easter to aid in his work among the children of Mormons. Officers were elected as follows: President, Miss Wilkes, of St. John's parish; vice presidents, Mrs. Satterlee, Miss Gilliss, of the Epiphany, Mrs. Addison, of St. Thomas'; treasurer, Mrs. Williams, of St. Mark's; secretary, Miss L. MacLeod, of St. Paul's. The balance of funds in the general treasury was voted to several missionary objects; luncheon was served, and a pleasant social hour concluded the work of the year.

Girls' Friendly Society

On Sunday evening, April 23rd, a special service for this society was held at the church of the Epiphany. The Bishop gave an address of earnest, practical advice to the members of the society, and the Rev. Dr. McKim spoke to the girls, especially on the importance of care in the choice of companions. Interest in the G. F. S. has grown very much during the past two years, and there are now several flourishing branches in Washington parishes.

Mississippi

Hugh Miller Thompson, S. T. D., LL. D., Bishop

The 72d Diocesan Council

Held in Holy Trinity church, Vicksburg, April 26th. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, the sermon being preached by the Rev. Geo. C. Harris, S. T. D. The usual routine work was gone through with, and reports of the several committees were heard, showing a satisfactory advance of the work in the diocese.

The following elections were had:

Standing Committee: Rev. Drs. Geo. C. Harris, president, and Nowell Logan; Rev. Messrs. H. W. Robinson and DeB. Waddell; Messrs. W. M. Moore, G. W. Howard, secretary; L. Brame, Marcellus Green.

Secretary: Rev. P. G. Sears, Holly Springs. Treasurer: Mr. E. M. Parker, Jackson.

The Bishop of Louisiana was present at the missionary meeting as the representative of the Board of Missions, and addressed the council in the interest of the foreign and domestic missionary work of the Church. A special committee was appointed to represent the Board in this diocese as follows: Rev. Messrs. Nowell Logan, D. D., and Irenaeus Trout; Messrs. J. C. Purnell, A. C. Lehigh, E. S. Butts.

The Bishop, in his address, noted the hindrances to the missionary work of the diocese, owing to quarantines and the unprecedented weather; but notwithstanding, the year has not been without its encouragements and a due measure of advance. The Rev. Charles Morris, as general missionary of the diocese, has spent a fruitful and most effective year of service. "The number of Confirmations will, I think, this year fall below the average. In some of our largest congregations, they have been few. In some, none at all. In others, again, St. Andrew's, Jackson, and Holy Trinity, Vicksburg, they have been very many. I have this year opened two new chapels: a very beautiful one completed at Lexington, to take the place of the one burned, and a very plain and cheap, but altogether sufficient, little chapel at Glass Station, below this city. During my episcopate, 31 churches have been built in the diocese. Some few are permanent churches of brick, as at Biloxi and Grenada, and Yazoo, taking the place of cheap wooden buildings, and as at Lexington, Water Valley, and Greenville, larger and better buildings, in place of others destroyed by fire—but with these excepted, the others are churches, larger or smaller, where we had none before. Of rectories, I can reckon but six newly acquired during these 16 years, but several old ones greatly improved. A parish can be scarcely considered equipped at all for its work without a rectory. There is nothing adds more to its sense of solidity and permanence than the possession of a comfortable home for its minister. A great and serious loss to the diocese during the past year, is that of St. Thomas' Hall, at Holly Springs. Through the persistent energy, under many discouragements and difficulties, of the Rev. P. G. Sears, the school had reached a point where it had conquered success and recognition. To restore the buildings destroyed by fire, and the insurance upon which barely paid the debt still owing, the citizens of Holly Springs pledged Mr. Sears $10,000. He needed at least $10,000 more, and hoped to obtain it in the diocese. I fear he has met with little response to his efforts. In other dioceses, ready givers among those of various denominations, have been, and are, earnest in establishing such schools. I regret to say that with us there has been exhibited, so far, no disposition to undertake such effort."

In our next issue we shall give a lengthy quotation from the Bishop's address, for which we have now not the space.

The next council will meet in St. Andrew's church, Jackson, on Tuesday, May 1, 1900.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

The "Daughters of the Church" of Trinity cathedral, gave a missionary tea at the cathedral house, April 26th. Three papers were read, bearing upon the missionary work in Africa, each full of interest and instruction.

The Rev. F. E. J. Lloyd writes to say that, "in an otherwise accurate report" of his sermon on Church Music before the Northwestern Convocation, in THE LIVING CHURCH of last week, there are two errors: instead of saying that Church Music should be: (1) "Churchly", it should have been congregational; and (2), instead of "universal," it should have been unisonal; under this head he spoke in favor of the Gregorian chant. "With these corrections, his ideal Church music will be Congregational, Hearty, Unisonal, Reverent, Congruous, Holy."

The Cleveland Convocation

Met in St. Mark's church on St. Mark's Day. The Holy Communion was celebrated at 9 A. M., Canon Hall, celebrant. A business meeting followed. Canon Hall was re-elected dean of the convocation, and the Rev. C. Frederick Brooks, secretary and treasurer. The Rev. A. L. Frazer, dean of the North-east convocation, presented a carefully prepared paper upon "The revision of the convocational system of the diocese." The Rev. A. B. Putnam, dean of the Central convocation, spoke briefly upon "The function of convocational meetings in relation to diocesan missions." At the afternoon session, the Rev. A. A. Abbott, archdeacon of Ohio, gave an able address upon "The planting and supervision of missions in the diocese." A free discussion followed, bringing out many points of interest in relation to the whole subject. A very large congregation was present at the evening service when the Rev. E. V. Shayler, dean of the N. W. convocation, preached. This service was the beginning of the special dedication festival services at St. Mark's, continuing till May 2d, with a service each day at 7:30 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. The evening services were choral, and sermons were preached by the Rev. Messrs. E. V. Shayler, E. Weary, Francis M. Hall, W. H. Jones, Walter C. Clapp, and the rector. At the close of each service, a reception was held in the parish house, in honor of the visiting clergy, and light refreshments were served.

Editorials and Contributions

The Turn of the Tide

SINCE the issue of the now famous manifesto of the English Church Union, the press generally in England has united in attacking the principles asserted in that document. It is true that hardly any principle appears there which has not been over and over again defined and maintained, not only by the leaders of the Catholic movement in past years, but by many influential persons, clerical and lay, not specially connected with that movement. But appearing at this particular time, as representing the views of an association of nearly 40,000 persons of culture and high standing, and expressing those views with unusual clearness and frankness, it aroused the surprised and even angry attention of many who had never before fully appreciated the situation. A universal chorus of disapproval was at once raised, but, as usual in such a case, the first unfavorable impression has been succeeded gradually by more reasonable consideration and discussion of the points at issue, and already the tendency may be discerned towards a more temperate and rational attitude. The main point in the declaration of the Church Union, and that which underlies its whole position, is the denial, notwithstanding the Establishment, that the State has any jurisdiction over questions of Faith within the Church, or that any difference is due to the decisions of non-ecclesiastical courts, touching matters of doctrine and worship. It is observable that two of the leading magazines devoted chiefly to public questions, The Contemporary Review and The Nineteenth Century, after having for months past made themselves the medium of constant, and often intemperate, attacks upon the Church position, have in their April numbers changed their policy so far as to admit important and well reasoned articles in defence of the attitude of the Church Union. The London Times itself, which has been more instrumental than any other journal in stirring up the present agitation, has at last admitted that the existing jurisdiction may not be best adapted to carry out its avowed objects, and it is not prepared to say "that some sections of Churchmen may not have had good reason to object to some recorded decisions."

BUT perhaps the most significant evidence that the principles which have been asserted in defence of the Church are beginning to affect the minds of prominent and leading men, is seen in the utterances of Mr. Arthur Balfour from his place in the House of Commons. In a speech which was by no means acceptable throughout to those who are engaged in the defence of Church principles, he makes the admission that the English Church Union had stated with great force two doctrines from which he did not dissent; one was, that the members of the English Church belonged not only to the English Church, but to the universal Church; and the other was, that the English Church, though it be an Established Church, nevertheless had, or ought to have, a spiritual independence of its own. He further said: "I am prejudiced in favor of giving to the Established Church in this country those liberties which the Scottish Established Church enjoys." English Churchmen have often insisted that the liberty of the Church of England ought to be at least as great in the management of its own spiritual affairs as those which the Scottish Kirk possesses. It is gratifying to see a leading statesman placing himself squarely upon the same side.

Denominational Decadence

THE Governor of New Hampshire (Rollins—all honor to the name!) has the courage of his observations, and acknowledges to be true what his eyes tell him. In a recent proclamation appointing a fast day (think of the Governor of Illinois or Kansas doing such a thing!) he says:

The decline of the Christian religion, particularly in our rural communities, is a marked feature of the times, and steps should be taken to remedy it. No matter what our belief may be in religious matters, every good citizen knows that when the restraining influences of religion are withdrawn from a community its decay—moral, mental, and financial—is swift and sure. To me, this is one of the strongest evidences of the fundamental truth of Christianity.

I suggest that, as far as possible, on fast day union meetings be held, made up of all shades of belief, including all who are interested in the welfare of our State, and that in your prayers and other devotions, and in your mutual counsels; you remember and consider the problem of the condition of religion in the rural communities. There are towns where no church bell sends forth its solemn call from January to January. There are villages where children grow to manhood unchristened. There are communities where the dead are laid away without the benison of the name of the Christ, and where marriages are solemnized only by justices of the peace. This does not augur well for the future. You can afford to devote one day in the year to your fellowmen, to work and thought and prayer for your children and your children's children.

This condition of things is true in other parts of the country, although our governors do not seem to have observed it. The religious decadence of the small towns in most of our Western and Southern States is a fact which ought to be taken into account*, and this process of dry-rot is most marked in those towns where there are the most "churches" to the square mile. One could point out many places of 2,000 to 4,000 population where there are ten and twelve houses for religious services, each one trying to sustain a minister (with the inevitable accompaniment of fairs, grab-bags, socials and oysters, minstrel shows, etc.), and, after all, less than one-half, sometimes less than one-third, of the people ever enter the houses aforesaid.

GOV. ROLLINS indulges in an unconscious irony when he advises "union meetings." That expedient has been tried to a disappointing extent, and experience has shown that it only tends to stereotype "denominational" differences more firmly than ever. Still, the principle remains true

*Says Bishop Burgess, in his last convention address: "The removal of families, especially from our rural parishes, and, indeed the very considerable decrease in the population of the country where they are situated, have weighed as a heavy cloud about all our efforts and prospects. I have been forced year by year to grieve over the lack of clergy. But in neither of these trials have we been alone. Our companions, the dioceses of this mid-West, have suffered as we."

that in union there is strength, and that the condition of things, which we all unite with Gov. Rollins in deploring, is the logical result of Protestant denominationalism. There is only one way now left by which the people can be compelled to see the need of the unity for which our Lord prayed, and that is the way of decadence and disaster. American paganism is the price we are paying for the error of separatism.

Easter Vestries in England

ONE of the surest proofs that the so-called "crisis" in the Church of England is in large measure "manufactured," is afforded by the results of the Easter elections. Notwithstanding the fact that the Church Association sent around printed instructions to its followers everywhere for the purpose of organizing strife at these elections, there was comparatively little appearance of trouble except in a very few instances. The agitation and excitement were very much less throughout the country than has been the case at some former periods. Nothing, it would seem, could show more clearly that the extraordinary agitation of the last few months has been almost wholly the work, not of those who have any claim to the name of Churchmen, but of those who have always been hostile to the Church. The reports in the English papers make it very evident that if parish elections had been in the hands only of those entitled to be considered adherents of the Church, there would hardly have been a breath of trouble anywhere. But the peculiar condition of things in England gives to all bona fide residents within the parish limits, a voice in the election of church wardens.

THE possible results of such a system are illustrated by the case of All Saints, Evesham. It happens that within the territorial limits of this parish there are five Dissenting chapels, and the large majority of the congregation in attendance at this church and contributing to its support, reside in the adjoining parish (under the charge of the same vicar), and, consequently, have no vote. It is a peculiarly English state of things. In ordinary times, the resident members of the congregation are left to attend to their own affairs; but at the recent election, prompted by the Church Association, and other agitators, an army of outsiders invaded the church, and triumphantly elected their candidate. The Church candidate received 61 votes, all, of course, residents, while 13 other members of the congregation voted for his opponent who, however, had 254 votes in all. An analysis of this vote shows, amongst the rest, twenty-three Baptists, thirteen Plymouth Brethren, twenty-eight Unitarians, twenty-one Quakers, forty-two Wesleyans, ten Salvationists, and five Roman Catholics. The effect of an election carried in this way is likely to be different from that intended by those who carried it through, and to bind more strongly together the members of the actual congregation. On the whole, The Church Times seems justified in announcing that the Protestant attack at the Easter vestries has, in fact, proved a complete fiasco.

Cremation and the Burial Service

A REPORT comes from England that the Bishop of London and others are considering the question of a change in the wording of the Burial Office, to meet the rapid increase of cremation as a means of disposing of the bodies of the dead. The change, of course, would come in connection with the formula of committal, but we are at a loss to surmise just what it may be. There is a story that a certain clergyman, officiating before the door of a cremation furnace, feeling some incongruity in the words which he was reciting, endeavored, on the spur of the moment, to adapt them to the situation, after this fashion: "Forasmuch as it hath pleased Almighty God, in His wise providence, to take out of this world the soul of our deceased brother, we therefore commit him to the flames." It is needless to say that this was not precisely satisfactory to the mourners, and it is hardly likely to commend itself to those who are concerned with the business of devising a suitable form of expression for permanent use. The present form reads: "We therefore commit his body to the ground; earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust," etc. Probably it is the word "ground" which furnishes the stumbling-block. Extremely literal people are ready to say that, in case of cremation, we do not commit the body to the "ground," but to the "fire." Perhaps it may be determined to use some such expression as this: "We commit his body to the elements from which it came." But, for our part, we see no great call for any change, even if cremation should come to be prevalent. It would probably lead to the general custom of completing the entire service, the committal included, in the church. Certainly, for our part, we should object to officiating at a crematory. The ultimate destination of the body of the deceased is the "ground," even though it may be reduced to dust and ashes beforehand. If it be said that the urn containing the ashes of the dead is not actually to be buried in the ground, but placed in a sepulchre or vault, the answer is that such a disposition has been made of the bodies of thousands from time immemorial, but no one has ever felt on that account that the words of the service were inappropriate. The form employed merely recognizes the fact that the physical structure must be dissolved and return to the ground from which it was taken. We repeat that we see no reason for any change.

The Church of Ireland

THE annual meeting of the General Synod of the Church of Ireland passed off with remarkable quietness. It was anticipated that the present disturbance in the Church of England would have the effect of producing some kind of sympathetic action on the part of the sister Church—sympathetic, it might be feared, with the more violent party—but this did not prove to be the case. It is true, abundant opportunity was given for lively scenes, but the Synod kept its head, and various attempts at aggressive action upon matters of controversy proved futile. It seemed certain that there would be a heated discussion on the subject of St. Clement's church, Belfast, which has been the centre of disturbance for months past; but nothing of the kind happened. Neither was any resolution passed expressive of the sentiments of the Church of Ireland on the "Ritual Crisis" in England. Most sensibly, the Synod left its neighbor's affairs alone. "It is easy," says The Ecclesiastical Gazette, "to talk of Reformation principles, but not so easy to define them." There was a warm debate about a cross in the chancel of St. Bartholomew's church, Dublin, which was denounced as symbolizing Eucharistic Sacrifice and the Real Presence, but an attempt to exclude the cross by an act of the Synod resulted in a vote of ninety-six ayes to one hundred and eighty-six noes. So the cross was left undisturbed. On the other hand, the bishops having been requested to appoint a special form of service for St. Patrick's Day, and virtually to place that day in the calendar, declined to do so, stating, at the same time, that it was within the power of any individual bishop to provide for such an occasion, as he might think fit. The Gazette regrets this, and thinks it was an opportunity lost of exhibiting the connection between the Church of the present and of the past. "We make a silent present of our past to the Church of Rome!" But, on the whole, thankfulness is expressed that "the Synod was a calm and peaceful one amidst a good deal of unrest and disturbance at home and elsewhere." It avoided everything sensational, and addressed itself strictly to business. While there has been much about the Irish Church to make an observer feel anxious, there are evident signs of hope. There is, on the one hand, a moderation of spirit which stands in favorable contrast with the tendencies of twenty-five years ago, and on the other, a wisdom of practical administration which is of excellent augury for the future.

Guilds

BY CLINTON LOCKE

I WANT to say a few words about guilds. No worried rector has asked me to do it, but the spirit moves me. Nobody is in a better position to do it, for I am not a rector, and have no guilds, and therefore can tread on nobody's toes; moreover, I have had great experience in guild management. Like walking on eggs, it requires experience. Guilds, as the Scotch say, are "kittle cattle." There are people in all the parishes who seem to think that zealous parishioners can get together and have a guild, or a society, or a confraternity, or a consisternity, without the rector having any control over it, or being able to dictate to it. Now, such people ought to read Canon IV., Title II., of the canons of the diocese of Chicago. They would learn there that the rector has "exclusive charge and care of all spiritual concerns, music, and ritual of the parish, subject and answerable only to the bishop." If that is not enough, let them read on a little further, and they will find this: "The rector or priest-in-charge shall have the full direction and control of all guilds, societies, and associations within the parish."

The plain fact is, that there is only one society in the parish that the rector cannot entirely control, and that is the vestry. It, like himself, is the creature of law, and all its rights and duties are defined by law, and no rector can interfere with them. Outside of that, all associations in the parish are the creatures of the rector. He forms them, he abolishes them, he controls their every movement, and they can do nothing except by power which he permits and which he can revoke at any moment. His will is law in such matters. Of course, unless he is a fool, he will be very careful what he does, and not unnecessarily put on a kettle of hot water. He will, when very necessary, consult with the elders, the diviners, the "cunning women," and the "wise virgins," though he need not do so unless he sees fit. If he chooses to appoint all the officers of all the guilds, it is his right, and in my opinion, he will be foolish ever to allow any voting about the heads of the guilds, whatever he may see fit to allow about the other officers.

I once created a guild. It did not seem to me to be profitable, and after a while I broke it up without asking its or any one else's advice. I was on the point, at another time, of abolishing a recalcitrant guild, and making a big row for myself, which I would fearlessly have encountered, when the objectionable questions were happily settled. The rector should let it clearly be known, and the parish should clearly understand, that every action of every guild is subject to his revision, and no action should be undertaken without his consent and sanction. In no other way, in my opinion, can there be harmony and progress in a parish. Experience has taught this, and therefore it was embodied in the law of the diocese. It is a perfectly free country, and if one does not like this "despotism," let him keep out of the guilds. Of course parishes will have to suffer from the unwisdom of ill-balanced rectors with power in their hands. This cannot be helped unless there should descend upon the earth a legion of infallible rectors. The legion of infallible parishioners descended long ago.

Heredity of Crime

JUDGE HORTON did not enunciate any new doctrine when he declared, in his address on "Our Young Men" before the Chicago Congregational Club, that crime is hereditary, but the statistics cited by the judge to support it admit of controversy.

"In the New York police reports," says the Judge, "it is shown that in every case a child of criminal parents turned out a criminal." But does this prove the doctrine of heredity? Supposing it were literally true—which it is not—that the child of every criminal in the United States became a criminal, does it follow as a law of natural sequence that the child of every criminal is born with inherited criminal instincts which it is unable to repress?

The testimony of the most advanced criminologists, combined with statistics, is against this deduction. The instances of children of criminal parentage developing into good citizens, when removed from criminal environment at a proper age and placed under elevating influences, are too numerous to support any inflexible theories regarding the "heredity of crime."

As a matter of fact, the preponderance of testimony is now against the theory that criminal tendencies are implanted in a child through birth. The child may inherit physical imperfections and deformities through violations of nature's laws on the part of the parents; it may, in fact, inherit a weak mind from vicious parents, but that it inherits a tendency to steal is denied by progressive students of criminology.

The doctrine of hereditary crime has given way to the doctrine of environment. It has been found that if children of criminals are taken from degrading associations at the right age, and placed in an uplifting environment, under a proper system of moral training and education, they may be developed into useful members of society. Criminality is a matter of training and association, not of birth.

If criminality is not in the blood, as criminologists now declare, the State is under a heavier obligation than ever to take the children of criminals away from debasing environment and educate them to earn an honest livelihood and to fulfill the highest duties of citizenship. Judge Horton's admonitions in this regard are eminently sensible and sound.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Letters to the Editor

FURTHER REVISION OF THE PRAYER BOOK

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Is it to be understood that we are not yet finished with the revision of the Prayer Book? It would seem so, if a recent event in the diocese of New York is of any significance.

A certain learned convert from Presbyterianism is awaiting ordination to the priesthood of the Church. In order to obtain that honor and privilege, it becomes necessary for him to take a solemn vow to "minister the doctrine and sacraments and discipline of Christ as this Church hath received the same," and also a vow to be ready "to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine." On the eve of his ordination, this learned doctor publishes a book upon the study of Holy Scripture, in which he flatly contradicts the Church's teaching regarding a certain portion of Holy Scripture, and yet is ready to take the aforesaid vows. The following are the words of Dr. Briggs regarding the gift of tongues at Pentecost, pp. 518-519 of his new book: "The speaking with tongues in the form both of unintelligible speech and its interpretation, is sustained by many allusions in the New Testament as entirely historical, and is psychologically and physically probable. But the speaking of different languages before unknown, is not only psychologically and physically improbable, but it has little historic support in the later and unsupported interpretation of the ancient documents by the author of our Book of Acts." If his words mean anything, then he denies the Church's explicit and recorded understanding of the Pentecostal gift, which is to be found in the Eucharistic Proper Preface for Whitsunday, which says: "... the Holy Ghost came down as at this time from heaven ... lighting upon the Apostles to teach them and lead them into all truth, giving them both the gift of divers languages, and also boldness with fervent zeal constantly to preach the Gospel unto all nations."

What does it mean, we ask, that in the face of such a statement, Dr. Briggs has been passed by the examining chaplains and recommended for ordination by the Standing Committee of the diocese? Do the words of the Whitsunday Preface mean nothing at all? Does not the Prayer Book voice the doctrine as this Church hath received the same? If the Church hath such a record of her Faith in the gift of tongues, how comes this gentleman to be a candidate for Priests' Orders? There is no question here which only higher critics are competent to answer. No theory of inspiration, verbal or otherwise, has anything to do with settling this plain fact of an absolute contradiction between Dr. Briggs' statement and that of the Prayer Book. How can any priest present such a man and say: "I have inquired concerning him, and think him apt and meet for learning and godly conversation, to exercise his ministry to the honor of God and the edifying of His Church?" Is he apt for learning who either denies or does not know what this Church teaches on the point mentioned? Can he exercise his ministry to the honor of God and the edifying of His Church, who has so little sense of the ethics and morality of taking a vow which he does not intend to keep? If such a man can be ordained to the priesthood, then, surely, further Prayer Book revision is necessary. We must discard the Whitsunday Proper Preface as useless and meaningless—nay, worse, as false. We must go on and cut out of the services for ordination the question about the learning and godly conversation of the candidate, for ignorance of the Church's teaching and lack of moral sense are no longer to be considered as bars to Holy Orders. Besides these things, we must cut out all vows about ministering the doctrine as this Church hath received the same, for evidently she has no doctrine any more.

Let no one be deceived as to the real issue in the present case. Criticism and scholarship do not effect the question, which is purely one of morals. Is any one fit to be a priest in the Church of God who, either from ignorance or pride, claims the right to contradict the Church's teaching, and is ready to take a vow which, before he has taken it, he has given evidence that he does not mean to keep?

The Higher Criticism has hitherto challenged gainsaying, on the ground that the Church has no theory of inspiration. Now we see what is really meant. Dr. Briggs has cleared the air of mist and fog. Fortunately for the Church, he has made a definite statement upon a passage of Holy Scripture to which the Church has set her seal. The issue must be met, and there is no escape. If Dr. Briggs is right, the Church is in error. We must choose between him and the Eucharist Preface for Whitsunday. Think of the blasphemy involved in its recitation, if it be false. It has been the boast of the higher critics that they have done the Church a great service in securing the ethical teaching of Holy Scripture by disposing of superstitions and untrue notions regarding the Bible. It would seem as though they had been so busy looking after the ethics of the Bible that the ethics of everyday life had been overlooked. It is indeed high time for the Churchmen of the metropolitan diocese to rouse themselves from their sweet dreams of peace, and prove that as true priests they at least have not forgotten their vows to "banish and drive away false doctrine," and to "maintain the doctrine as this Church hath received the same."

ALBAN RITCHIE.

GROWTH OF THE CHURCH

To the Editor of The Living Church:

I have before me the statistics of the Episcopal Church in the United States, as returned to the General Convention of October, 1868, and also its statistics for 1898, as given in the Living Church Quarterly for 1899, issued December 1, 1898, and the following is the result as to communicants; namely: In 1868, 194,692; in 1898, 679,604, showing a net increase in the thirty years of 484,912 communicants, or more than 248 per cent. During the same period the population of the United States only increased about 100 per cent., it having been, according to the census of 1870, 38,500,000, which would have given about 37,000,000 in 1868; and now the population is estimated at about 74,000,000, or just about 100 per cent. increase over 1868. And as the Church has increased more than 248 per cent., its increase has been about two and a half times as great in proportion as that of the population. In a word, it has gained largely on the population, and its increase has been spread over the entire country, as the following figures, giving the number of communicants in each State for 1868 and 1898, will show. Wherever there is more than one diocese in a State, the figures have been added together, so as to have the total for that State:

STATES	1868 COMMUNICANTS	1898 COMMUNICANTS
Alabama,	2,001	7,182
California,	1,500	15,271
Connecticut,	15,984	31,722
Delaware,	1,472	3,116
Florida,	738	5,500
Georgia,	2,428	7,153
Illinois,	5,280	25,945
Indiana,	2,102	6,770
Iowa,	1,684	8,293
Kansas,	373	4,945
Kentucky,	2,796	7,829
Louisiana,	1,864	7,473
Maine,	1,632	4,081
Maryland and Dist. of Columbia	12,269	36,827
Massachusetts,	10,867	37,650
Michigan,	5,568	22,324
Minnesota,	2,280	13,846
Mississippi,	1,540	3,627

Missouri,	2,061	10,847
Nebraska,	701	5,371
New Hampshire,	1,235	3,712
New Jersey,	9,140	38,604
New York,	50,061	157,061
North Carolina,	3,033	10,181
Ohio,	8,023	23,330
Pennsylvania,	23,328	74,898
Rhode Island,	4,043	12,445
South Carolina,	3,074	5,990
Tennessee,	1,256	5,515
Texas,	1,500	10,729
Vermont,	2,361	4,774
Virginia and West Virginia	7,575	25,538
Wisconsin,	4,573	13,044

Besides the above, there are the following States and Territories, some of which were not in existence in 1868, and in the others no reports as to communicants were made at that time, because, I suppose, that in some of them there were none to report, and in others the numbers were too small, but all of which had communicants in 1898, as follows:

STATES	1898 COMMUNICANTS
Alaska,	224
Arizona,	502
Arkansas,	2,186
Colorado,	5,232
Idaho,	1,200
Indian Territory,	308
Montana,	2,183
Nevada,	651
New Mexico,	507
North Dakota,	2,029
Oklahoma,	401
Oregon,	2,714
South Dakota,	4,847
Utah,	689
Washington,	3,484
Wyoming,	760

Now, an examination of the above tables shows that in the two States of New York and Pennsylvania alone, our Church now has considerably more communicants than it had in the entire United States in 1868, the figures being for the two States of New York and Pennsylvania in 1898, 231,959 communicants, and for our Church in the entire United States in 1868, only 194,692. But great as has been the increase in those two States, the table shows that the percentage of increase has been greater in many other States, and in some of them much greater.

Again, should the percentage of increase of our Church in the United States during the next thirty years be only one-half as great as it has been during the past thirty, a simple calculation shows that we would at the expiration of that time have more than one million and a half of communicants in this country. I will also add to this a statement, giving the amount of contributions of our Church in the United States for each of the years 1868 and 1898, which were as follows:

1868.....	$4 457,888.28
1898.....	$13,703,814.17

L.

CONFESSION AND ABSOLUTION

To the Editor of The Living Church:

Apropos of the much ado now being made in some quarters about confession and absolution, permit me to state two indisputable propositions which lie at the foundation of this subject.

1st. It is everyone's natural and inalienable right, if he chooses so to do, to confess his sins to anybody he pleases. Who shall say him nay? In fact, St. James, in his epistle, recommends it: "Confess your faults one to another." In making a formal confession, one would naturally seek a minister of God, "for the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts." (Malachi ii: 7.)

2d. It is the inalienable right of a priest of God to declare and pronounce to penitents confessing their sins, the pardon and remission of them, in the Name of Jesus Christ.

This is certain, since, when our Lord first commissioned His Apostles, "He breathed on them, and saith: Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." (St. John xx: 22, 23.) And when the Church now commissions her priests, the bishop uses the same words: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a priest in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands. Whose sins thou dost forgive, they are forgiven; and whose sins thou dost retain, they are retained." (See the Office for the Ordering of Priests in the Prayer Book.) Therefore it is certain that priests have commission and authority to declare and pronounce the remission of sins in the Name of Jesus Christ. They have "the ministry of reconciliation." (II. Cor. v: 18.)

This was exercised by St. Paul, as when he said: "If I forgave anything, to whom I forgave it for your sakes, forgave I it in the Person of Christ." (I. Cor. ii: 10. See also I. Cor. v: 4.)

Our priests exercise this authority when they stand and officially declare and pronounce the absolution in the public services of the Church, and must do so in private, as required in the Office for the Visitation of Prisoners.

These two indisputable propositions demonstrate the rightfulness and propriety of confession and absolution.

The Best Way to Encourage the Pastor

FIRST. Never speak any word of commendation to him. Never let him know that his sermons have comforted or instructed you or anybody else; it might make him proud and self-important; humility is an enjoined Christian virtue, you know. "God resisteth the proud." Be careful and keep your minister out of the way of temptation. Studiously see to it that God never has occasion to resist him. Let all his resistances be earthly and within his own parish.

Second. If you see any improvement in the parish, its devotion, attendance, etc., don't on any account let him know of it. On the contrary, be sure to tell him who is dissatisfied, who has left; criticize the mode of service, point out the defects in the music, the financial mismanagement, want of taste, etc., here and there. This comforts the minister, lifts his heart up, makes him feel stronger and more hopeful to work and write and pray; makes him go to bed with a blessing and rise with praise.

Third. If the parish owes a sixpence, let him hear frequently about that sixpence. Warn him continually about extravagance in religious affairs; though business men venture some in all their affairs, and frequently sink thousands and tens of thousands in some promising speculation, be careful that he ventures nothing for God or salvation. "Owe no man anything," applies, you know, only to religious things. Though there is money enough for the opera, theatres, and the mistrels, for dress, and the luxuries of the table, when you meet him talk of the hard times, and the necessity of retrenchment. In this way you greatly encourage him and stimulate his efforts. He feels like a new man after every such conversation, and immediately goes out confident of converting the whole world.

Fourth. When he gives notice of special sermons or lectures, be sure to stay away. There is nothing that stimulates a man to study hard all day, and pore over volumes, and refer to authorities, to get up a lecture or sermon, like the glorious prospect of delivering that same lecture or sermon to six or seven people, and they, perhaps, the very ones that least need the instruction. If by any means he learns that on that same evening, you went to the play or the circus, he will be so encouraged that he will take two days next time to prepare his lecture.

Fifth. If he earnestly exhorts his congregation to be present in force to praise God on Thanksgiving Day, Christmas, the occasion of an ordination, or the visit of the bishop, then be sure to find a pretext not to be present. By this the pastor understands that he has unbounded influence with his flock, and is encouraged accordingly.

Sixth. If he turns from the congregation to wipe his face, or by accident takes some unusual position, or makes some unusual gesture, then charge him with "Ritualism," or, if there are two ways of understanding his words, actions, or way of doing things, then select the unfavorable mode of interpretation. By this the pastor understands the depth of your confidence in him and his integrity of purpose, and at once is stimulated to work harder, and devise more abundant things for your spiritual benefit.

Seventh. Express frequently to other people your surprise at his actions, your fear of his course, your regret for much that he does. In this way you make him popular, and build up the congregation, and drive deeply the stakes for God's Zion.

A minister backed in this way, if he don't succeed it's his own fault, and he ought not to have entered the ministry at all.—St. Peter's Record, Pittsburgh.

Huntington, Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross. At the desire of the clergy, the fixed sum of two dollars has been made the fee, in place of a voluntary collection. Any priests desiring to attend are most cordially invited. Those wishing to do so, will kindly send notice as soon as possible to Rev. W. W. Webb, D. D., Nashotah House.

NOTICE is hereby given that the annual convocation of the District of North Dakota will be held at Grand Forks, on Thursday, June 1st, and Friday, June 2d. The convocation will be preceded by a Retreat for the clergy on Wednesday, May 31st, at which the Bishop earnestly requests the presence of every priest at work in the district. On the first day of the convocation will occur the consecration of St. Paul's church, Grand Forks. On Friday afternoon and evening, June 2d, will occur a meeting of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Clergy unable to be present should send their reports to the Bishop, care of Rev. A. T. Gesner, Grand Forks.

Women's organizations unable to send delegates in person, should mail their reports, not later than May 25th, to the secretary of the Diocesan Auxiliary, Miss Katherine Seward, Grand Forks.

In order to receive hospitality, it will be necessary for those intending to be present, individually to notify the Rev. Mr. Gesner not later than May 25th.

SAMUEL COOK EDSALL,
Bishop of North Dakota.

CHURCH MISSION TO DEAF-MUTES

THE field of the Rev. J. H. Cloud, minister, St. Thomas, St. Louis, and missionary to deaf-mutes in the dioceses of Missouri, West Missouri, and Springfield, has been enlarged so as to include the Trans-Mississippi dioceses generally. The missionary is arranging extended itineraries for Trinitytide, and will be pleased to serve rectors and others having deaf-mutes in their parishes.

Ordinations

On the 4th Sunday after Easter, in the church of St. Barnabas, Tomahawk, the Rt. Rev. C. C. Grafton, S. T. D., Bishop of Fond du Lac, ordained the Rev. Charles Trask Lewis to the priesthood. The Rev. W. R. Gardner, D. D., preached the sermon. The ordination proper was according to the full Catholic ceremonial. The ordinand was vested in the Eucharistic vestments and presented with the Bible, chalice, and paten. The music was furnished by the vested choir of the church of the Ascension, Merrill.

Unto the Hills

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY

Life cannot chain me to these rocks alway;
Above the beetling cliff my spirit sweeps;
It ranges with the sun the livelong day.
At night, each star above my prison creeps,
And sings of joy unto the soul it fills,
While "I lift up mine eyes unto the hills!"

Refrain:

And "I lift up mine eyes unto the hills,"
From whence cometh my help;
My help cometh to me,
And all my soul with freedom's rapture thrills
"God is our refuge wheresoe'er we be!"

What matters it, the pain and discontent?
'Tis such a little while, oh, heart, be strong,
Be true and steadfast! It was never meant
To clasp thy eagle, restless wings for long;
Look up! the mountains cleave the azure sea,
"God is our refuge, wheresoe'er we be!"

Refrain:

And "I lift mine eyes unto the hills," etc.

ONE of our city journals, noticing a criticism passed upon a certain noted preacher, adds a stricture of its own, which, particularly as coming from a secular source, is striking: "If Dr. — has erred at all, it is in calling his secular essays sermons and dressing them up for Church use by fitting texts to them as collars. As they are purely literary, and only remotely ethical, there is no good reason why they should masquerade as sermons." The point is well taken. Why call such productions sermons? The name is a misnomer, and this use of it, a perversion. To carry out the principle, why call the building where such preachers "hold forth," where they give concerts and entertainments, purely literary, æsthetic, and popular, and only remotely ethical or religious—why call these churches? It is just as much a misnomer and a perversion of terms as the other.

Pen-and-Ink-lings

ONE has heard much during the last year of the need of education in Spain. It is interesting, therefore, to learn that last summer a statue was erected in Orense, in Northern Spain, to Senora Arenal, a Spanish woman who had devoted her life to the study of sociology and criminology, for philanthropic purposes.

"WHY are Irishmen always laying bare the wrongs of their country?" asked some one in the House of Commons. "Because they want them redressed," thundered Major O'Gorman.

THAT the Jews are indeed turning Zionward, the following item from the report of the United States consul at Baireut indicates: "Out of a total population in Palestine of 290,000 souls, about 40,000 are Jews, as against 14,000 twenty years ago. In Jerusalem there are 22,000 Jews, half of whom have emigrated from Europe and America, and are called Ashkenazim, to distinguish them from the Oriental Israelites, the Sephardists."

LACK of practical knowledge of the laws which concern women, especially in the direction of the management of property, has been a constant drawback, and often a cause of serious loss. It is a hopeful indication, therefore, that forty-eight women have just graduated from New York University in a law class. This course does not aim to make lawyers out of women, but to give them the everyday knowledge they need.

MOST of the women who have taken the course, Harper's Bazar says, have had no idea of following the law as a profession. Helen Gould was one of the graduates several years ago. In this year's class were such women as Mrs. Washington Roebling, vice-president of Sorosis, and the wife of the famous engineer; Mrs. Bonner, the wife of the publisher; Miss Bessie Schlesinger, the daughter of a banker; Mrs. McKellway, wife of the editor of the Brooklyn Eagle; a daughter of ex-Mayor Gilroy; a daughter of Justice Leonard, of the Supreme Court; a daughter of Chancellor McCracken, and other women of wealth and position. About one-fourth of the number were married women who have, or are likely to have, property to manage. The graduates from the university are by no means all the New York women who have been studying the laws which govern the transaction of business. There are other classes, composed in several instances of rich women who meet in one another's drawing-room, quite as if they constituted a sewing society, or anything else traditionally feminine. They have an accredited lawyer as an instructor, and are said to be bright and interested pupils.

EVIDENCE is not wanting as to the lack of religious liberty in Russia. The following words form part of an enactment which is still in force in that empire: "Every Stundist who is found reading the Bible or praying with others, will be arrested and without further warning will, by 'administrative measures,' be transported to Siberia, or some other distant part of the empire. Every minister of this sect is to be sentenced to penal servitude in the mines."

PUBLIC school teachers, says The Congregationalist, rarely receive from the community the recognition and honor they deserve. It is good to learn that a beautiful window is soon to be placed by the alumni in the hall of the Albany High School, in memory of Miss Mary Morgan, teacher of English for thirty years. The window represents Hypatia searching for knowledge, holding in one hand a lamp and in the other, a book. The coloring is rich, and the symbols used in the border are full of significance.

MARGARET DELAND, in The Independent, writing on "The Ethics of the Novel," has this to say: "Books which show us the honest commonplace of life show also its beauty; just as sometimes we look at dear and common flowers, the dandelion, perhaps, or some humbler weed, and lo! we know it is the perfection of God! It is as beautiful—in its way—as an orchid—and how much more lovable. A book which shows us the beauty and dignity of life is always simple. Think of Homer. Is there any more perfect union of greatness with simplicity than Homer? . . . Indeed, the message of the great books always seems to me, that life will be simple in proportion as it is deep and high."

"OVER and over," she continues, "they bid us get a true sense of proportion in regard to what is essential and not essential; they declare that the things which endure are the things that really count. . . . They are not the things about which we often worry ourselves—our dress, our poverty, our discomforts:

If the man riding yonder looks a speck,
The town an ant-hill, that is but the trick of our perspective:—

I hold my hand up, so, before my face—
It blots ten miles of country, and a town.
This little lying lens that twists the rays,
So cheats the brain, that my house, my affairs,
My hunger, or my happiness, my ache,
And my religion, fill immensity!
Yours merely dot the landscape casually.
'Tis well God does not measure a man's worth
By the image on his neighbor's retina!

"HUMAN love, human courage, human character: when you come to think of it, all the great novels are built on the appreciation of these three things, and that is why they make for happiness; for such appreciation does make one look so much more widely at life, that one is ashamed to be unhappy over—well, say cooks! I remember once hearing a woman who had just gained some apprehension of what the great, passionate throb of human living meant, say: 'Oh, what does it matter if my front door steps are not painted!'"

THE Zoological Record indicates approximately the number of the living species of animals: Mammals, 2,500; reptiles and batrachians, 4,400; tunicata, 900; brachiopods, 150; crustaceans, 20,000; myriapods, 3,000; echinoderms, 3,000; celenterata, 2,000; protozoans, 6,100; birds, 12,500; fishes, 12,000; mollusks, 50,000; bryozoans, 1,800; arachnids, 10,000; insects, 230,000; vermes, 6,150; sponges, 1,500. General total, 366,000 distinct species.

"God's Sentinel"

BY LOUISA AH'MUTY NASH

THE largest bishopric in the world! It is called the bishopric of the Falkland Islands, but the bishop has to superintend the few and scattered English colonists, as well as the aboriginal races of South America, from Terra del Fuego northward; hence it is a diocese of 10,000 miles in circumference!

Forty years ago shipwrecked crews would rather drown than fall into the savage hands of the natives of Terra del Fuego. Forty years ago a band of missionaries were murdered in Navarin Island, while conducting service, they having believed that its inhabitants were less savage than the rest.

Four years later, Mr. Stirling, with his family, sailed for this terrible spot, and commenced work for God. After his wife's death, in two years, he took home to England four native youths, hoping they might be made useful for subsequent work. In 1869 he returned to live alone among the natives, and he writes: "I fancy myself God's sentinel, stationed at the southernmost outpost of His great army!"

"God's sentinel" had to face dangers; from starvation, for food was sometimes so scarce that he had to be buried up to his waist in snow, searching for fungus and berries to support life; and from savages. One day a native, armed with a tomahawk, glided up to him, apparently to take his life. The brave man looked him intently in the eyes, and he slunk away into the woods. A few years afterwards that man presented himself to him for Baptism.

Mr. Stirling was unexpectedly called home to receive the laying on of hands as the first Bishop of the Falkland Islands.

Some months after this, the shipwrecked crew of an American ship received kindness, instead of death, as they feared, at the hands of the natives, due doubtless to the Bishop's devoted work at the neighboring Ushuaia, now a Christian village.

His visitations are sometimes made in the "Allen Gardiner," schooner, sometimes in a bullock cart, sometimes in a canoe mounted on wheels, to be used, when required, on the water-ways.

A friend of his answered the exclamation, "What a wonderful bishop!" thus: "He doesn't think so; he regards all his life as the most ordinary existence, and sees nothing heroic about it."

Fr. Dolling's Special Mission

AND what of Father Dolling's special "mission"? In his own words, it is to make the Gospel—i.e., the Divine Message—the gospel of the Church of England in particular—"adaptable to all English people."

"Time was," said Mr. Dolling to our representative, "when the Established Church was notoriously the Church of the respectables, and of them alone. It was the Church of the wealthy, the Church of the squire and of the university don. In those days, and I am only referring to some sixty years ago, it was more or less openly expressed that the religion of the Dissenting chapel was more appropriate for the 'working classes' than the service of the parish church. It never occurred to the good Church people of those days that there was such a thing as adaptability, or that it was possible to offer a prayer that was not couched in the dignified phraseology of the Prayer Book. The Church of England has suffered disastrously from the stiff and narrow inflexibility, the attitude of earlier generations of its leaders—an attitude which they adopted in matters political and social, as well as religious. Even to-day some of our Right Reverend Fathers in God still cling to a cold respectability as the ideal of orthodox Churchmanship. For instance, just lately Dr. Creighton, Lord Bishop of London, addressed all the East End clergy and Church wardens, and seized the occasion to inform them that 'sound learning' was the base of Church of England teaching, and that whatever was not of 'sound learning,' was contrary to the mind of the Church. That is the Episcopal notion of preaching the Gospel to multitudes of hungry, illiterate people—'sound learning.' Of course no one ventured to say anything but soft words of eulogy when the Bishop had concluded."

"And how," said our representative, "is the parish clergyman to—how do you, in fact—make known the message of Christianity to the unlearned?"

"The parental instinct is the strongest and best feeling, the one live impulse amongst our starved and stunted populations in the slums," Mr. Dolling replied. "Mind you," he continued, "don't make the mistake of supposing our slums are filled entirely by what are called the 'submerged tenth.' There are respectable people who have come to dwell there as well. But to the illiterate slum-dweller a gospel of 'sound learning' is foolishness. It is a Divine Fatherhood that I tell them of; it is the belief in a God who counts the most unworthy as His child, and whose love is wider than the compass of man's mind—whose love, indeed, encompasses the earth, and cannot be frustrated by 'man's inhumanity to man'; this belief is the simple and acceptable Gospel to those who could make nothing of the 'incomparable liturgy' of our Book of Common Prayer."

"But what can you, bound by this Book of Common Prayer, do in the matter of adaptability in religious service?" we interrogated.

"Well, of course," said Mr. Dolling, "I say all the Prayer Book services, and you might as well know that, although we have the prescribed order of Morning and Evening Prayer said every day in church, as we are told to have it said, the parishioners never come to it. But the people come to our prayer-meetings, our special services, which have, I am afraid, very little of 'sound learning.' The Church of Rome has learnt how to retain in its fold the wise and the foolish, the rich and the poor, the clever and the ignorant. If the Church of England will dare to pray extempore, to adapt its language so that it may be understood, and to meet the thousand and one religious wants and desires—unexpressed for the most part—of its people, it may yet become the National Church."—New Age, London, March 16.

Book Reviews and Notices

An Incident. and Other Happenings. By Sarah Barnwell Elliott. New York: Harper & Bros. 1899. Price, $1.25.

These eight short stories of Southern life since the war, possess merit of the very highest order. There is a power in their clear-cut lines, every word telling, which sets one thinking rather than merely admiring. There is art, but it is art which conceals itself. One forgets the medium used, in the effect produced. The personages stand out before you. The words come from living lips. The deft touches, here and there, reveal the whole setting of the thrilling episodes, and the questions touched upon make the reader stop and think. There is silence before the inevitable and deserved applause which the art demands. Their genre is precisely like powerful impressionist pictures, truthful, often tragic, direct in method, and effective in result.

Those Dale Girls. By Frances Weston Carruth. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. Price, $1.25.

"Those Dale Girls" are two in number, but a "host in themselves" in respect to beauty, goodness, fun, and pluck. The elder turns her liking for cooking, and a certain amateur skill in it, to good account, by teaching her sister, and with her aid and that of one of those devoted family retainers so often found in fiction, supporting themselves by cake baking and the like. The girls carry off the honors at dinners and receptions, in the intervals of cooking, and win the matrimonial prizes for which their frivolous companions are striving. The results are not as inevitable as the author would have the reader believe, but the emphasis is put upon the right things—courage and the dignity of labor. It is a story that other girls will enjoy, and one from which they will derive no harm, and probable good.

Corn Plants; Their Uses and Ways of Life. By Frederick Leroy Sargent. With Numerous Illustrations. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Price, 75c.

The six important grain plants of the world are described in an interesting way by the author who has been instructor in botany in the universities of Wisconsin and Harvard. The plants are considered as living things, and the story of how they have helped man in his evolution from savagery is fascinatingly told. The reader is introduced to wheat, as the King of Cereals; to oats, the Grain of Hardiness; to rye, the Grain of Poverty; to barley, the Brewer's Grain; to rice, the Corn of the East; to maize, the Corn of the West. There are thirty-two admirable illustrations, either drawn by the author directly from nature, or copied from well-known studies. The frontispiece represents Ceres, the Roman goddess of grains. It is re-produced from a wall-painting in Pompeii. The book is to be heartily commended as complete and admirable in every respect.

Danish Fairy and Folk Tales. A Collection of Popular Stories and Fairy Tales. From the Danish of Svend Grundtvig. E.T. Kristensen, Ingvor Bondesen, and L. Budde. Translated by J. Christian Bay. New York and London: Harper & Bros. Price, $1.50.

We have here an addition to the literature of Andersen and Grimm. The outside of the book is quaintly attractive, to begin with. On a snowy field there squats a funny circle of gnome-like little figures in pointed red caps, hearkening to the entrancing tales told by the white-bearded narrator who holds them spellbound. He is telling them about "Peter Humbug and the White Cat," or "The Bull and the Princess at the Glass Mountain," or it may be that they are listening to the story of the brave boy who went to the North wind, or of the man without a heart. There are forty-eight of these Swedish fairy and folk tales, some of them somewhat familiar in plot, but most of them entirely new, and all of them very entertaining.

The Book of Revelation. By Theophilus W. Moore, D. D. Chicago and New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, $1.25.

This is one of the many feeble and useless attempts to make the Book of Revelation agree with the preconceived theories of the writer. His interpretation of the Epistles to the Seven Churches is especially far-fetched and untenable. Of course he clings tenaciously to the exploded theory that the Roman Church is typified by the scarlet woman. There are many other equally absurd interpretations. The book will not satisfy Churchmen.

Nicene and Post Nicene-Fathers. Second series. Translated into English with Prolegomena and Explanatory Notes Under the Editorial Supervision of Henry Wace, D.D., in Connection with a Number of Patristic Scholars of Europe and America. Volume XIII, Part II. Gregory the Great, Ephraim Syrus, Aphrahat. New York: The Christian Literature Company.

The first part of the selections from the writings of Gregory the Great and the valuable Prolegomena were given in Volume XII of this Library of the Fathers. Perhaps no one of the Fathers had a more direct influence upon Anglican Christianity than the first Gregory, and in none has the interest of Anglican Churchmen been more constant. His memory is bound up with the history of the Church of England and interleaved with the pages of our Prayer Book, whether the service be "said or sung." From his Sacramentary we have drawn a large number of liturgical treasures, and the musical tones of our most honored and ancient use still bear his name. He deserves to be held in grateful memory, also, for his unyielding opposition to the assumption of ecumenical authority by the Patriarch of Constantinople. He was the first protestant—a Roman protestant against a patriarchal supremacy in the East. He disclaimed for himself the title and authority of Universal Bishop, while he held that the offensive title was an infringement upon the rights and dignity of all patriarchs.

Our Country's Flag. By Edward S. Holden, LL.D. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

The first part of this little book is devoted to the history of the American flag; the second, to an account of flags in general, and of the flags of European nations in particular. In the author's preface, it is pointed out how, during the whole history of America, our flag has been the flag of a country, not a personal standard, as is the case with many other and older nations. This latest of the series of Appleton's Home Reading Books is a worthy and valuable addition to its predecessors.

I, Thou, and the Other One. A Love Story. By Amelia E. Barr. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. Price, $1.25.

Mrs. Barr's facile pen does not tend towards repetition. Each story comes with a distinct freshness of its own. This is particularly true of the one before us. Woven in with the historical events of the period in which the passing of the Reform Bill so greatly agitated England, is a charming, wholesome love story, and pretty pictures of family affection and devotion are put before us. The reader realizes afresh the truth of the oft repeated saying, that the strength of England is in the homes of England.

THE subject of the Sunday school lessons for Trinity season, is "The Church Catechism Illustrated by Scripture," a much more interesting topic, many teachers will think, than the series on the Epistles, which has just been completed. The quarterly publications for the various grades, edited by the Rev. Dr. Shinn, and published by Mr. Thomas Whitaker, are now ready, and should be seen and examined by all schools not already using them.

THE late issue of the "Library of Devotion" (Methuen & Co., London) is a dainty edition of "Lyra Innocentium," by John Keble, with notes and introduction by Walter Locke, D.D., warden of Keble College, Oxford. The price in England is two shillings. This "Library" is a series of masterpieces of devotional literature, edited with sympathetic and scholarly care, and the books are furnished at a small cost, being at the same time very attractive.

Periodicals

The Nineteenth Century for April is an excellent number, containing fifteen articles. Churchmen who are interested in the pending struggle between Church and State will do well to read Sir George Arthur's article on "The 'Lawless' Clergy of this Church and Realm," which is a very cogent plea for the spiritual independence of the Church, on the ground of the "Reformation Settlement" itself, considered in its legal aspect. "The English Bible from Henry VIII. to James I.," by W. H. Hoare, is a well-written and instructive paper. But it does not solve the question, By what authority did the King James Version come to be "the authorized version?" "The New Planet 'Eros'" is a pleasing astronomical paper by the Rev. Edmond Ledger. There are a number of political articles.

A portrait of "Little Susan Boudinot," daughter of Elias Boudinot, president of the Continental Congress, is the frontispiece of the May St. Nicholas. The poem by Ethel Parton, which follows it, celebrates the refusal of this nine-year-old maiden of the last century to drink a cup of taxed tea at the house of the royal governor. There is a description of a picnic in Japan attended by four little Americans. Samuel Scoville, Jr., tells how college athletes train. "Bright Sides of History" is concluded; Mrs. Barr's serial, "Trinity Bells," and Miss Well's "Story of Betty" are continued; "Quick-silver Sue," by Laura E. Richards, and a new "Lakerim" story by Rupert Hughes—"The Dozen from Lakerim"—are begun. "Admiral Dewey's Sword," by Carolyn Wells, is an illustrated description of one of the rewards voted by Congress to the victor at Manila Bay.

In recognition of the fact that the city of Malden, Mass., is about to celebrate its 250th anniversary, the May number of the New England Magazine contains a beautifully illustrated article entitled, "Two Centuries and a Half in Malden." Mr. Henry Robinson Palmer, a graduate of Brown University, here honors his Alma Mater by a record of its founding and growth, tracing in an interesting way its development into the well-equipped university of to-day. The article is illustrated with views of the University buildings and with portraits. Mr. J. Moss Ives contributes a valuable paper entitled, "Connecticut's Share in the Revolution." This article also is fully illustrated. Mr. Daniel Gregory Mason gives "A Glimpse of Colonel Henry Lee" in private life. A fine portrait of Colonel Lee appears with the sketch.

The May Atlantic opens with an article upon the "Australasian Extensions of Democracy," by H. de R. Walker who discusses the management of affairs, especially financial, in the five great Pacific colonies of England. H. Phelps Whitmarsh depicts the jealous care with which all other nations, especially England, cultivate their mercantile marine and shipping interests, and the disgraceful condition into which our own have been allowed to fall through systematic and long-continued neglect. Jacob A. Riis, in "The Battle with the Slum," picturesquely details the advances that have been made in New York during the last twenty years in improving the condition of the helpless poor. W. V. Pettit has an article on Puerto Rico, the reformatory needs of the people, and the outlook for future prosperity and wealth. "Some Economic Aspects of the Liquor Problem" gives facts, and statistics of great interest. Charles Mulford Robinson continues his papers on "Improvement in City Life," with an account of recent educational progress in the great cities—a movement without precedent in human history.

ORIGIN OF EVIL.—We notice that Professor John Fiske, one of the clearest and finest of present writers, has discussed the subject of evil. He finds it to be a necessary contrast to good—that the human soul would not be conscious of good if there were no evil with which to compare it. All such theories raise the "mystery," and are all a reflection upon the goodness of God. It is vain philosophy, the whole of it. It takes no account either of law or of fact. It is visionary theorizing, with no element in it of sound reason. The violation of good law—divine law, whether relating to the spiritual or the material—is injurious—to man's soul, if the violated law be spiritual; to his body, if it be material. Evil is a synonym of injury. It is mere childishness to ask: "Who introduced this evil?" It never was "introduced." Neither the word nor the idea applies. You choose to disobey law, find yourself in trouble, and then ask, in apparent surprise, "Who introduced this evil?"

St. Andrew's Cross

"NOMINAL ADHERENTS."—So far as the Church has failed to put forth adequate missionary effort on behalf of the people who have deliberately placed themselves under her influence, without having first accepted her standard of life, she may well be deeply concerned as she sees this field of usefulness passing beyond the pale of her influence. From another standpoint, the Church need not view this drift with alarm. It does not forebode dire disaster, either financial or spiritual. Its financial significance is hardly worth speaking of. Yet it may be said in passing that the amount of money which the "nominal adherents" give to the support of any parish is comparatively trifling in amount. The nominal adherent sees no inconsistency between investing twenty-five dollars for a bonnet or a coat, in which to appear at the Easter service, and placing twenty-five cents in the Easter offering. He may follow the example of Constantine in being only a nominal adherent, but he does not follow the example of Constantine in giving lavishly or even liberally. His departure, therefore, will not undermine the financial foundation of the average parish, or limit the need or support for faithful priests and pastors. So far as spiritual disaster is concerned, the Church has nothing to fear as the "nominal adherents" jauntily bid her good-by, and take refuge behind the canon, formulated by a self-satisfied "society," that "some Church connection is not necessary to social standing or to moral respectability." On the contrary, we think the Church has everything to gain.

CHARACTER AND ITS INFLUENCE.—The power of character lies largely in the very fact of its silence. It provokes no opposition. It makes no parade. It simply exists. There it is in plain view day after day, week after week. There is no escape from observing it, from realizing what it is, from being touched and molded by it sooner or later and in a greater or less degree. It may be overlooked to-day. To-morrow it will be noticed. It may be criticised to-day. To-morrow, or in some different mood, its genuineness and nobility will be recognized. It comes to be regarded as a fundamental, undeniable fact which must be reckoned with, and the impression which it makes is neither temporary nor superficial. Many a word has been spoken for Christ, which by its sincerity, its tenderness, its revelation of appreciation and sympathy, has accomplished wonderful things in the transforming of a soul. No one may undervalue or neglect the opportunity to bear witness in words for the Master. But none the less the true Christian must always aim to attain to a high type of character which shall tell its own story and preach its own sermon without the need of words. Then he will be doing the Master's work, even when he is not conscious of a special and definite intention to impress a given individual. Then, when he does speak, his words will have a double significance and power.

N. Y. Evening Post

THE DREYFUS SCANDAL.—Another element moving toward a new and fair trial for Dreyfus is the International Exposition of 1900. Here the public opinion of the world will have free exercise and full play. It is greatly feared by the French government that the thoughtful classes of other lands will show their displeasure by quietly staying at home next year. A boycott upon the Exposition by the intelligence and sobriety of all other nations would have a blighting influence, not merely on its financial results, but also on the future standing and influence of the Republic. It would be a verdict of condemnation by the world's jury, which nothing could ever obliterate. It would be evidence that mankind distrusts France as an element of civilization. The one thing upon which Christendom is agreed is that all men must be secure in their persons and estates, and that they cannot be secure without fair public trial for every accusation brought against them. If men can be sent to perpetual imprisonment without such trial, whether they be in military or civil life, then the day of the Bastille and of the lettres de cachet have returned. To say that a man charged with betraying his country for money, cannot have an open trial lest diplomatic trouble should ensue, is to say that the opinion or prejudice, or malice of persons in power for the time being is substituted for law. These persons may be the real scoundrels, and it is now generally believed that they were—the Henrys, the Esterhazys, and the Paty du Clams—those who have committed suicide and those who have till to do so.

CHAPTER XII.

ON a certain fine summer evening in that year of 1776, Alan Underhill might have been seen with cloak thrown off, pulling a boat up the Hudson river toward Greenwich village. The young man was quite alone in his little craft, although there were many other boats on the river that night, some of them filled with soldiers from the new forts, others with idle young people from the gay city below. Across the smooth water came distinctly the sound of light banter and, too often, of coarse and profane jests. Women's voices, too, shrill or melodious, drifted across the mellow night air from some not too rigidly chaperoned party. Now and then was heard a snatch of loud song to the tune of "Yankee Doodle" or "God Save the King," and this seemed the only fleeting reminder of grim War who even then hovered over the city.

But Alan's eyes were fixed upon the distant fortifications which loomed in the gathering darkness from the further bank of the noble river, and his mind was pre-occupied with gravest matters. Already within the limits of the Queen's Glebe, and in his intercourse with neighbors of the Mohawk Valley, he had imbibed, as we have seen, the spirit of liberty. There in New York, where active preparations for war were going on at every hand, and where the Commander-in-chief himself was present, it could not but be intensified. There was indeed the counter influence of the loyal clergy and of home ties to be reckoned with, but in the earnest mind of Alan was already a highly charged train which might need but a spark to kindle it.

In the midst of his silent questionings with himself, he had reached the deserted landing of the quiet village of Greenwich, where he hoped to find an external counselor in his warm friend and fellow-student, Eugene Beaumont. It was the work of a moment to make fast the boat, and then Alan, with quick strides, walked on through the village streets, with their low, two-story dwellings set back in the midst of their gardens. All was peaceful within and without the white-paled fences, and the young man's muffled footfall upon the somewhat springy ground alone broke the silence.

Opening the low gate which gave entrance to one of these sheltered houses, he paused at sight of two figures standing arm-in-arm upon the vine-clad porch. They were plainly a young man and woman, talking in low tones. Alan would have turned back, astonished at this revelation of his friend's intimacy with a young woman, for he knew Beaumont lived alone with his aged parents; but though his step had been unheard, the western light, which there was naught to interrupt, must have shown his figure plainly to the others.

"This is well done, Underhill," cried Eugene, coming forward. "What good fortune prompted your coming to-night?"

"The need of exercise, and perhaps of a friend to look into mine eyes and say: Courage, the Cause is assured."

"Then you shall hear it, not only from me, but from my fair niece yonder who is as ardent a patriot as yourself."

"Your niece?"

"Aye, the daughter of my dead eldest sister. Come and be made known to her, and think not lightly of me who am ancient uncle to anything so sage and discreet as our Margaret." He led Alan forward with quick, light steps, and gaily presented him. "You are to say: 'Alan, the Cause is won,'" he finished to his niece.

Even in the fast fading light, Alan could see that the girl's pale face was proud and fair, and that the sheen of her hair was like burnished metal, half gold, half silver, in its tint. She spoke with a peculiar melody of accent, perhaps derived from her French ancestry, but with none of the airy light-heartedness of her youthful uncle.

"If I may amend the phrase and better the manners by saying: 'Mr. Underhill, I do not hesitate to pronounce the Cause assured'," she said. "Is not right might, and is not the 'little one become a strong nation' under the Heaven-inspired command of General Washington? But tell us the news from town, and whether the Declaration hath yet been signed in Philadelphia."

Within the house, Eugene lighted wax candles in ancient, twisted iron sconces, which showed every detail of the large room whose long French windows opened directly upon the piazza. To Alan, accustomed to the plainness of his King street lodging, it seemed a most luxurious apartment. The furniture indeed was not so massive as that of Johnson Hall, but there were here some choice prints upon the walls, and a mirror in a Florentine frame, while the carved backs of the chairs and the inlaying of the Viennese writing table were a study in themselves. As for Margaret Delafield, now seen in the full light, the young man felt the subtle charm of her exquisite womanliness and controlled serenity as a new power in his life.

The talk ran on the subjects dearest to the hearts of all three, the events of the day and hour, and the expected news from the Congress assembled in Philadelphia. Beaumont was, as usual, ardent, impulsive, extreme in all his views; while Alan, with native reserve, found it difficult to give voice to his feelings, even in this congenial comradeship. Margaret, a quiet listener at first, soon joined in the earnest talk, surprising Alan by her intimate knowledge of present and past political history, as with keen wit she pointed out some radical defect in the ancient or future Utopia which Eugene was sketching.

Nine o'clock had struck from the small Dresden time-piece when the still eager talk was interrupted by the appearance in the door-way of a very old gentleman in powdered wig, gray velvet coat faced with satin, gray satin trunks, and one silver buckled shoe. For though this one foot was daintily shod, the other was swathed in bandages and ludicrous in size and shape. The finely chisled face and animated glance of Mr. Beaumont—for it was he—gave one a strange foresight of what Eugene might be in old age. He spoke in a melodious, though somewhat tremulous, voice, at the same time presenting to Alan's use a Watteau snuff-box.

"Methinks from our southern casement I hear strange sounds from the city," he said, "and there are many riotous youths abroad in our own quiet village. My good wife's deafness fortunately keeps her unaware of the disturbance, but were it not for my gout, which is somewhat troublesome this evening, I should myself go to inquire the news."

The noises without were now plainly audible, and Eugene could hardly curb his impatience until the end of his father's somewhat formal speech. Hurrying out upon the piazza, he was soon across the garden, to the street. The old gentleman, with a stately bow to Alan, and a hardly less ceremonious one to his granddaughter, hobbled away to rejoin his wife. Alan, left alone with Margaret Delafield, hesitated to follow Eugene.

He was surprised when Margaret came up to him and laid her hand on his arm, almost in command. "Take me with you," she said, "I must see and know for myself. It may be Independence at last!" Her sweet voice sank in a half sob. Her large eyes, of a rare tawny hazel, brilliant with suppressed excitement, were fastened on his face.

With scarcely less agitation, and without one word of protest, Alan drew her arm in his, and catching a light wrap from the back of a chair, flung it around her and hurried her out through the open window.

The breathless summer night was now heavily overcast, and in the dark, unfamiliar streets, Alan stumbled many times. But the hand on his arm was a guiding force which seemed impelled by a sure instinct. They had turned southward, whence came the faint and confused sounds, and struck into a lane which led into one of the main thoroughfares to the city. Many others were encountered who like themselves, had come out to seek the cause of the unusual stir. Women's heads were occasionally thrust from lighted windows, or a feminine voice made itself heard from among a group clustered by a gateway, but the passing figures in the open streets were mostly those of men.

Closer to the river a band of noisy youths was met, bearing torches or lighted brands, and waking the echoes of the usually quiet streets, with cries of "Long live Hamilton and Jefferson!" "Hail to Independence Day!"

"What is it?" asked Alan, accosting one of these rowdies, "what news do you celebrate?"

"Do you come from New York, stranger, to ask the news at the village?" cried he addressed. "Go duck your brains in the river, my friend, then join us in ringing the bells for the Declaration of Independence, signed in Philadelphia on the fourth of the month present, and just read in the Fields to all New York."

"What!" exclaimed Alan, "is it indeed a reality? Then God hath marked the day! It shall be a watchword of liberty forever!"

But his fervent outbreak was unheeded by the riotous throng, his words lost in the hideous din which was recommencing. One of the rude youngsters stepped back, and held up his torch to let the light fall full upon Margaret. "Aha," he cried, "no wonder her sweetheart's brain is addled when he has so beauteous a face beside him! Now three cheers for the fair daughter of a free land!"

As the huzza arose, Margaret, with a cry like one who has received a physical hurt, pulled her cloak about her, and dropped her hand from Alan's arm. He, boiling with indignation, was obliged to let the ruffian escape, as the noisy crowd surged onward, bearing their companion along.

"Brute," cried Alan, "you deserve sore punishment, even though liberty be the plea for drunken folly."

"Hark," said Margaret, lifting once more her head, "they are firing cannon in the city. Take me home, and do you go to join those who celebrate. Nay, what do I say? I can go quite alone. Oh, hasten, and thank God you are a man to serve your country!" She turned as she spoke, but Alan detained her gently. "I will not leave you," he said, "until you are under the roof from whence I took you."

When Underhill had left Margaret safe on her grandfather's threshold, he ran as with winged feet to the river. There, thanks to the darkness, still lay his boat, and with a spring and a shove he was afloat. He was rowing against both wind and tide this time, for both were setting up the river, but the current was with him, and under his vigorous strokes the boat bounded forward almost as a thing alive.

Alan's mind was in a tumult as he thought of the patriotic leaders assembled in Philadelphia—Samuel Adams, Jefferson, Hamilton, Hancock, who had at last achieved the independence of their country. Though, no, not yet. What of Washington and the army encamped above the city? What of Arnold on the Hudson, and Herkimer in the Mohawk Valley? What would be their fate, and that of their men, in the months to come? Many of those who rejoiced now would never reap the victory sown in their blood! And where was his own part in this glad liberty to be? Was he even now traitor to his country while he prated the loudest, or had he chosen the right path? Was duty paramount with him as with his father? or could he be carried beyond its steadfast bounds by the inspiration of such a spirit as Margaret Delafield's?

Thinking thus rapidly, and arriving at no solutions, down the river he rowed until he reached the Canal street rivulet. Eastward through this sluggish waterway he felt his course carefully, then out upon the broader bosom of the Collect Pond. Leaving his boat at the southern shore of this little lake, he struck into a beaten road which brought him out upon Nassau street. Here he found himself part of a moving throng, hurrying on toward Wall street. In front of the old City Hall was found a still denser mass of human beings, giving vent to all sorts of shouts or snatches of song, to the accompaniment of anything which would make a noise, while at the head of the street another crowd surged up and down in front of Trinity church. Alan's pulses throbbed with the same excitement which stirred the hearts of others, and he joined lustily in the cheers for the Declaration, for the Congress, for Washington and the army.

While at the City Hall bonfires were lighted, and some one was trying to make a speech, suddenly a sound of pealing bells broke out upon the air, and with it came a simultaneous movement of the crowd toward Broadway, or Great George street. There was a momentary listening silence among the moving people, then wild cheering from hundreds of throats, wild clapping of hands and tossing of hats, while above all exulted the notes of the jubilant bells!

Alan, struck full in the face by a heavy descending hat of beaver, turned to find Eugene Beaumont at his side.

"Eugene!" he cried. You here? How came so fast?"

"On horseback, man, the Hudson road, then Mortkile street to Broadway. I had to dismount by St. Paul's church. There was no getting through the crowd else. Ah! is it not glorious?"

"Yes," replied Alan, with a deep breath.

"My voice has been heard," returned Alan, "but I am mindful of the injunction, 'Let not him that girdeth on his armor boast himself as he that putteth it off.'"

"Hark!" cried Eugene, irrelevantly. "Is not that fire arms? Ah, 'tis but a salute."

"Aye, but powder and lead had best be husbanded," put in a bystander. "They will be wanted soon."

"There's a plenty of lead in King George's statue," cried a voice in the throng, and in a moment the crowd was moving, as by a common impulse, toward the equestrian statue of George III. on the Bowling Green. With them, nolens volens, went Beaumont and Underhill.

The colossal leaden mass was soon torn from its pedestal, to be dragged ignominiously through street after street, in the midst of a howling and jeering mob. Then those who were clamoring for bullets had their way. Portions of the battered statue, after being treated with every indignity, were cast into the huge bonfire prepared for their reception. The licking flames encircled now the limbs of the complacent monarch torn from his steed, and now the be-wigged head was punched with heated barrel staves. Some of the melting metal was at once scooped into moulds of sand to form into bullets, though it chanced that the greater bulk of the statue was afterwards sent to Connecticut for the same purpose.

And constantly the riotous rejoicing went on, and the fire-scorched figures of men and women ran backward and forward through the thrice-heated summer air, until the light of dawn joined with the glow of revelry.

Such was the celebration in New York of the news of Independence.

CHAPTER V.

GETTING IT OUT OF MOLLIE.

ALL serenely unconscious of the hornet's nest buzzing so near them, the girls of St Dorothy started in to work with a will. Scarcely a day passed but what the cream-colored ponies drew up before either the Rookery or Eleanor's home, when Virginia held long consultations with the girls, and generally carried one or both of them off to the bluff with her.

Nor were the other members at all backward. Evelyn had fashioned the daintiest of badges of pale blue ribbon—true blue—she said, with the initials "S.D.S." painted on each in gold letters, and Laura and Alice had already begun a crusade among the girls of their acquaintance.

So a whole week went by, and still the "Tabby Club" flourished, and there had been no caterwauling, much to the disappointment of the special secret-service spy from the Excelsiors. Jerry had sought in vain to win his sister's confidence. Not a word would Eleanor breathe of the new club, and so Saturday morning came around again, and not a single item of news did the special spy have to lay before the regular meeting of the Excelsiors that night.

"Did you boys get anything out of Mollie?"

Jerry leaned over the fence around the Rookery as he anxiously put the question. Dave and Arthur were cleaning their wheels under the shade of the apple trees, but at the sound of his voice they turned around.

"Nope," answered Dave dolefully, "not a thing."

"She's only home to meals," said Art., giving the pedals a savage whirl with his foot. "She's up at the Hardy's all the time now, going through a course of young ladyism, and she hasn't smashed anything for over a week, not even her own head. Oh, Mollie's getting high-toned!"

"I asked her where the Tabby Club met," added Dave, rubbing his nose reflectively, and she said: 'Not in an old barn, anyway.'"

"Humph," said the spy, gravely, his eagle eye glancing around the place in search of clues. "Seems to me we'd better—"

"Give up the ghost," concluded a saucy voice from a window just above their heads, and Mollie laughed teasingly as she leaned out of it to look down into the three surprised faces. Her hair was rough and tumbled, and there was a pen behind her ear. Now, a pen in active, voluntary use in Mollie's possession was as interesting and novel a sight as if Pirate had suddenly developed a fancy for flirting a fan, and the spy took note of the marvel.

"Oh, there you are," said Dave cheerfully. "Can't you come down and help a fellow clean this wheel after you've galloped all over town on it?"

Mollie only laughed and shook her head. "Can't, you see she's busy," Arthur murmured rebukingly. "It's poetry. See her eye in a fine frenzy rolling."

"No such thing," came the indignant protest.

"Oh, yes, it is! We can see it, you know. Why don't you let the other eye roll a little while, and give that one a rest, Mollie?"

Mollie's hand reached for the pitcher of water standing so temptingly near, and then she remembered herself, and merely smiled down on her tormentors in the most tantalizing way.

Jerry perched himself on the fence, and prepared to exercise a little diplomacy.

"It's an ode on the Tabbies," he said solemnly, and runs thusly:

'Oh, the Tabbies gave a party, and it was a dandy crowd.
The man in the moon was asked to come, but no other boys allowed.'

"I think you're horrid," cried Mollie, flushing hotly. "Does that look like poetry?"

She snatched a slip of cardboard from the table behind her, and held it up for the boys to see.

"What is it?" asked Dave mildly, "milk ticket?"

Now, one element lacking in Mollie's character was discretion, and it was always at critical moments like the present that it deserted her. She forgot the promise of strict secrecy enjoined by Eleanor, forgot that the boys were Excelsiors, forgot everything except that she must refute such an insinuation, and dazzle the eyes of the scoffers with the news of the coming event.

"No, sirree, it isn't a milk ticket," she said, waving it in the air. "It's a ticket to a glorious moonlight masquerade given at Virginia Hardy's by the S.D.S., and I've got one hundred and forty-nine more of the same kind here, numbering them, and we're going to beat the Ex—"

She stopped abruptly and vanished as though some one had pulled her backwards, and the boys never smiled or looked at each other at all; only Jerry whistled softly.

"I rapped and rapped at the door," Virginia said, as Mollie faced her, still excited and red-faced. "Put on your hat, quick, and come down with me to see about the lanterns. Papa's sent them over to me by this morning's boat from Chicago."

"Oh, but I've got to fix these tickets," began Mollie.

Virginia laughed.

"Bother the tickets. Hurry up," she said and Mollie needed no further coaxing.

As the trap and cream colored ponies passed down the street towards the docks, Jerry dropped from the fence to the ground hastily.

"I've got an idea," he gasped. "She gave the whole snap away, and now we can settle their lemonade, I guess."

"Nothing mean, now," interposed Dave warningly; but Jerry ignored the warning with the scorn it deserved, coming from one Excelsior boy to another, and unfolded his plot in a hushed voice, until the other two were as full of enthusiasm over its success as he himself.

"It's elegant," Arthur said, fairly hugging himself. "Talk about revenge! Oh, my, we won't do a thing, will we?"

"No boys allowed," chuckled Dave. "Wait till we tell the boys to-night."

"Oh, but we've got to do most of the work to-day, before the tickets are missed," said Jerry. "Climb up, and get them, Dave. Try that first branch, and it will swing you up to the sill."

Off went Dave's coat, and he had climbed the apple tree next the window in a jiffy. A moment, and he sat in triumph on the window sill, from which so short a time before Mollie had leaned out. The tickets were stacked in neat piles on the desk, secured by rubber bands, and he tossed them to the eager hands below.

"That's all," he said, when the descent had been safely made. "Come on."

"I wonder what the boys are doing down town," Mollie remarked, as they drove leisurely up hill from the docks, the gayly colored Chinese lanterns in a bulky package under the seat.

Virginia drew the ponies to a halt, and looked after the three forms wheeling down the main street.

"Some nonsense, I suppose," she said carelessly. "Let's go over to Nell's and tell the girls what we've got."

"But those tickets," Mollie said, "we ought to sell some to-day."

"Oh, Monday will do. They won't run away, you know," Virginia returned laughingly, and she turned the ponies' heads towards the Edsall's, with never a second thought for the three Excelsior boys and the hundred and fifty S.D.S. tickets which reposed snugly in their pockets.

Wrong Side Out

JACK was cross, and nothing pleased him. After giving him the choicest morsels for his breakfast, and providing for all his wants with tender care, while he did nothing but fret and complain, his mother finally said:

"Jack, I want you now to go right up to your room, and put on every garment wrong side out."

Jack stared. He thought his mother must be out of her wits.

"I mean it, Jack," she repeated. And she did mean it. Jack had to mind. He had to turn his stockings, even; and when his mother came to him, there he stood—a forlorn and funny looking boy, all linings and seams and ravelings—before the glass, wondering what his mother meant, but not quite clear in his conscience.

"Now this," said his mother, turning him around, "is what you have been doing all day; you have been determined to make the worst of everything. In other words, you would turn everything wrong side. Do you really like your things this way so much, Jack?"

"No, mamma," answered Jack, shamefaced. "Cannot I turn them right?"

"You may, if you will remember this: there is a right and a wrong side to whatever happens—I mean a pleasant part and a part you do not like as well; and you must do as you prefer to with your clothes; wear them right side out. Do not be so foolish any more, little man, as to persist in turning things wrong side out."—Lutheran Observer.

A Beetle's Eye as a Photographic Lens

DR. G. F. ALLEN, of Aurora, Ill., has accomplished the feat of taking a photograph through a lens composed of a beetle's eye. A separate outline of the image at which the camera was directed was seen on every one of the hundreds of facets which are part and parcel of the eye of the insect. Writing of this photograph, Prof. Stine, of the Armour Institute, says of Dr. Allen's picture of the insect's sight world: "To make it Dr. Allen took the corner of the eye of a beetle and employed it in the place of the usual photographic lens of the camera used for making photographs of microscopic objects. A silhouette of a head was pasted on a piece of ground glass and a lamp placed upon it. A photographic dry plate was exposed to the light coming through the beetle's eye from the silhouette and developed in the usual manner. As can be seen, the resulting multigraph was circular, and contained 700 images of the profile, one, indeed, for each facet of the eye." Although though the image is shown a hundred or more times, in every instance it is clear and perfect. Very fine and delicate are the lines, to be sure, and the features are only distinguishable clearly by the aid of a microscope, but nothing is omitted, and the wonderful handiwork of nature has never been more clearly shown than when this eye with artificial stimulus carries out the part for which it was created.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Finance and Commerce

THE writer of weekly commercial articles might well be forgiven if he longed for something to appear to vary the monotony of this regular song of prosperity. But no discordant notes yet appear in the harmonious co-operation of busy wheels and deft hands, where all who do not choose to be idle are now fully employed.

The uniform verdict is business is good. There is in some trades the usual spring uneasiness among laborers. Strikes are here and there threatened, and, in a few cases, have been inaugurated, but no general discontent among laborers exists. Each week enlarges wider the extent of the circle where wages have been, in the main, voluntarily increased, and this tendency will, no doubt, continue. So far, however, it has not reached to any general extent the vast army of railroad employes, and it is not unlikely that as the summer comes on agitation to that end will follow.

Bank clearances show the volume of trade throughout the country is holding its previous excess over all former years. Railway earnings are large, West-bound business being particularly large. In the iron trade in all its branches production is still crowded to its maximum. In the export trade there has been some falling off in clearance of leading cereals, as compared with last year, but our exports of manufactured products are immensely satisfactory, being for the month of March slightly over $6 million dollars—much the largest on record for that month; considering, too, that sharply advanced prices early in the winter were expected to lessen our exports of manufactured goods, this record is very gratifying.

There is no ripple to financial affairs. Money is in abundance for all legitimate wants, and the rate only holds stiff at the better rate we have all along foretold. The government has delivered the warrants to the amount of 20 million dollars to the agent of Spain for the payment of our indebtedness assumed by the treaty, and it is thought the banks in New York, through which the matter was financed, have already secured the necessary foreign exchange to satisfy that need. So far, there are no indications of any exportation of gold for that purpose, the amount being easily absorbed out of the large balance of trade in our favor. In the grain market there has been a tendency towards lower prices. Foreigners have been fair buyers of both wheat and corn. In wheat the speculative feeling has been that somehow, with the advancing season, reports of the growing crop would improve. This has not happened. Where wheat was uninjured by frost, of course it is further along, and to that extent it has improved, but time only develops more and more the fact that winter wheat over a large part of five or six of the principal producing States is badly winter killed, and statisticians and crop reporters are steadily and almost uniformly modifying these former estimates. The spring wheat sowing is also unsatisfactory. Throughout the territory north of the Northern Pacific road in Northern Minnesota, North Dakota, and Manitoba, practically no seeding has been done, and a reduction of 15 to 20 per cent. in the acreage in this best wheat territory is almost certain.

South of that the seeding is fairly well finished, with acreage generally estimated at less than last year. With these bullish conditions and the market failing to respond, holders have become somewhat disheartened, and much liquidation has followed.

It is difficult to believe, however, that these conditions will not ultimately be felt in the price when once fully recognized.

Commercial China

RECENT statements indicating an agreement between the English and Russian governments, touching their future course with reference to the trade of certain sections of China, lends interest to a publication just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, entitled, "Commercial China in 1899." This document, as its name indicates, presents a careful survey of present commercial conditions in China, showing location of railway lines, navigable waterways now opened to the commerce of the world, the treaty ports which are the commercial doorways to China, steamship and cable lines, and the imports and exports in detail during the past quarter of a century, showing the growth of demand for each of the important articles, the principal countries from which they have been drawn, and the growth of the commerce between China and the United States, and especially the sales by the people of the United States to those of China. A part of this publication, which discusses the commerce of the Yang-tse Kiang and West River valleys is of especial interest at this moment, because of the recently published assertion that an agreement has been made between the British and Russian governments, by which the latter confines its commercial ambitions for the present, at least, to Northern China. The valleys of the Yang-tse Kiang and West Rivers, which occupy Central and Southern China, are shown by this report to be the great commercial section of the empire. Not only so, but their importance has been greatly increased by recent events. One of these events is an agreement by the Chinese government, that no section of the Yang-tse Valley shall be "alienated," to any foreign government, so far as relates to trade privileges, while another of equal importance, is the opening of the West River to the commerce of all nations, free from any "alienation" or special privileges to any. That the Yang-tse and West River valleys are by far the most important part of China from a commercial standpoint, is quite apparent. Two-thirds of the foreign commerce of China passes through Shanghai, located at the mouth of the Yang-tse, which is the Mississippi river of China, extending westwardly from the Pacific to the extreme boundary of the empire proper, and penetrating an extremely fertile, productive, and densely populated area. Next in importance to Shanghai, from a commercial standpoint, are Canton and the British possession of Hongkong, which lies adjacent, both of them being practically at the mouth of the West River, which is also an extremely important waterway and route of commerce to the interior.

Beware of Food Samples

Quite recently in New York two deaths occurred from poisoning by the use of powders sent to the victims by mail. In Leavenworth, Kans., the other day, nearly every doctor in town was called to attend the children who had gathered up, eaten, and been made ill, by samples of an article left at houses by canvassers for advertising purposes.

Alum baking powders have always been favorite articles for this sampling business. Yet there is nothing more liable to lead to danger than the practice of using the various samples of baking powder left at the door. They are presented by irresponsible parties, in appearance are not distinguishable from arsenic, and, indeed, in Indiana, some time since, one package was found, after it had caused the death of the housewife, to have been mixed with that poison.

It is safer to refuse all samples of food or medicine offered at the door. Pure cream of tartar baking powders sell upon their merits, and are never peddled or sampled.

Hints to Mothers

It seems a shame to connect thoughts of poison with, for instance, such delicate and lovely things as that baby of the flowers, the snow-drop, as the narcissus with its delicious breath, as the hyacinth and the jonquil. But one is obliged to see to it that the children do not put the bulbs of these flowers into their mouths. The oxalis also is not a safe thing to put between the lips; and all the lobelias will produce dizziness and general disaster. The monk's hood, too, and the beautiful fox glove as well, are noxious affairs from which powerful drugs are obtained, more than a few drops of their extracts being usually a fatal dose. Certain of the crocuses, if eaten, even if nothing be swallowed but the juice, produce vomiting; the bulb of the intricately beautiful lady's slipper poisons externally, as the noxious ivy, dogwood, and sumach do; the quaint old jack-in-the-pulpit, although not a garden plant, is another enemy to health and life; and so also is the marvelous Queen Anne's lace, which now and then will creep in through the paling, and looks so enchanting when far and wide it embroders field and roadside. The laughing little buttercup, that might be a drop of visible sunlight, is by no means as innocent as it looks; the cow in the pasture knows enough to avoid it; that and all its cousins, the rich, profuse peonies, the dazzlingly blue larkspurs, and the rest, are full of toxic properties. The oleander-tree, that is set out-doors when spring comes, and that lines the streets of various of our Southern cities, is another hive of deadly poison. The superb catalpa-tree, towering with its great leaves and its masses of white and fragrant flowers, is a charming thing in the garden, but its bark is exceedingly injurious, and the laburnum, that looks like a fountain of gold leaping into the sun, is poison in leaf and flower and seed; and even the grass beneath it is best thrown away when cut, instead of being fed to cattle.

It would seem that it is very far from a safe thing to turn a little child loose in a garden, whether it be the formal modern thing of splendor or the dear old-fashioned grandmother's garden, as a very few moments there may serve not only for the destruction of the garden, but of the child. And with these facts in mind, it is a wise thing, in directing the attention of the child to the beauty of grouping and combination of color and shape, to give also some sufficient idea of the properties of the several plants, teaching what is to be avoided, and teaching also that the mouth is the last place in which these properties are best tested.—Harper's Bazar.

OF PRACTICAL benefit in a nursery is a table for the child's use. An ordinary kitchen table of the largest size should have the legs cut off until it stands about eighteen inches from the ground. Nail a three inch rail around the edge of the table, and tack down with brass-headed nails on the top of the table, an old felt piano cover. In this oblong the child passes many delightful hours. Marbles and balls do not roll away beyond its reach; toys and books are easily accessible, and the child enjoys its slight vantage ground above the level of the floor. The table serves many purposes besides that of a playground for the baby.—N. Y. Evening Post.

The Living Church

A Weekly Record of the News, the Work, and the Thought of the Church

"Thy Golden Street, Jerusalem!"

BY MARGARET DOORIS

A day of May!
And all along the road I pass
The golden blossoms fleck the grass;
Where'er I stray,
Through happy hours,
I cannot choose but walk on flowers.
Was ever pathway decked so sweet,
Outside thy glorious, golden street,
Jerusalem?

Such wealth of bloom!
On every hand in shining gold,
The dandelion flowers unfold.
What wondrous loom
Their fabric wrought?
I marvel whence the gold was brought
That glitters broadcast 'neath my feet.
Oh, was it from thy golden street,
Jerusalem?

The sunshine beams,
And all the splendid flowers unfold.
The lawn is like to cloth of gold,—
A thing of dreams;
A soft breeze sighs—
Oh! everywhere I turn my eyes
The earth to-day is passing sweet;
Oh! what must be thy golden street,
Jerusalem?

London, Ohio.

My thoughts soar up,
Beyond the sun or shining star,
The while I look, all near or far;
Each buttercup
That gleams in view,
O'erflowing with the morning dew,
And dandelions 'neath my feet
Bring to my mind thy golden street,
Jerusalem!

Come, gather gold!
Laburnum trees are whispering,
And all the shining blooms of spring,—
And all untold,
The May day long,
The happy birds make glad with song.
I like their ringing music sweet,
To harps upon thy golden street,
Jerusalem!

The Warden.

By HENRY A. FAIRBAIRN, M.D. 12mo, cloth, embellished. Price, $1.00.

An extremely interesting sketch of Dr. Robert B. Fairbairn, for many years the warden of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., and widely known as an author and an educator. The story of his life is told in a bright and entertaining way, interspersed with many character studies.

The "dullness" of the average biography is not in evidence here, and the book will thus appeal to other readers beside the host of loving friends of the old warden.

An Epic of the Soul.

Printed in best style, on feather weight paper, with deckle edges, and bound in white vellum, cloth, gilt top. Price, $1.00 net.

This cycle of eighty short poems, of a new form, records the experience of one who has sounded the depths of doubt and despair, and emerged into light on the further side.

The author, whose name at present is withheld, is already known in more than one department of literature.

Irish Life and Character

By MICHAEL McDONAGH. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, uncut edges. Price, $1.75.

The lovers of Celtic wit and humor will have an opportunity to enjoy a veritable feast in this volume. The numerous illustrative anecdotes are chiefly new and extremely good.

Mr. McDonagh does for the Irish character what Dean Ramsey did some years ago for the Scotch in his famous Reminiscences.

Notes of the World's Progress

CONSUL MARSHAL HALSTEAD, OF Birmingham, has made a careful and suggestive report on the labor conditions in Great Britain, to the Department of State, and it is published under date of May 6th. He begins by stating that "free-trade Great Britain" is really well protected, because of the loyalty shown to home manufactured goods by all purchasers. The word "imported" does not sell an article in Great Britain as it does in America. Foreign goods are often refused, even though the quality and price are better than can be found at home. The press, the people, and the labor unions all unite in making it unpleasant for the large manufacturer even to buy his machines in the United States. Consul Halstead then quotes from British papers showing how severely a number of firms have been criticised for placing orders in the United States. He thinks that the labor unions are responsible for the conditions which make it necessary to order goods from America, and warns labor organizations of the United States against falling into the same error. The English workman, he says, takes too many vacations. After a bank holiday, it is sometimes ten days before the men can be got to work again. The labor unions, too, insist that one man shall be employed to each machine. An English plowmaker decided to visit the United States to see how competitors were able to produce machines cheaper than he could. As soon as he entered the door of a factory and saw one man superintending six machines, he refused to go farther, saying it would be an impossibility in England.

FOR THE PAST FEW WEEKS THE PAYMENT and disbandment of native Cuban troops has been under discussion, it appearing at times as though negotiations toward that end would be entirely broken off. The action of certain generals and members of the Assembly has been antagonistic, as under the terms made by General Brooke each Cuban soldier, in order to receive his pro rata share of the $3,000,000 to be disbursed, was to be forced to surrender his arms and ammunitions to American officers. Recent dispatches state that the matter has been finally and amicably arranged, a concession being made by General Brooke which permits the surrender of arms to civil authorities. To this plan, General Gomez gives cordial approval, and it is probable that disbandment of the native troops is now but a matter of a few weeks' time.

MR. ROBERTS, DIRECTOR OF THE Mint, has decided upon the design for the Lafayette silver dollar to be coined in aid of the Lafayette Monument Association which proposes to erect a monument to Lafayette in Paris next year. Congress authorized the coinage of 50,000 of these dollars, and it is expected that they will be sold at a premium, and add very materially to the fund which has been donated by the school children of this country. It was hoped that the subscriptions would amount to a large sum, but only $40,000 has so far been contributed, and the 50,000 souvenir dollars will have to be sold at a large premium to realize the $250,000 desired. On one side of the dollar will be the heads of Washington and Lafayette, and on the other a representation of the monument to be erected in Paris. The proposal to have the Lafayette prayer or some passage from his address inscribed, has been abandoned, and the dollar will have no words except the customary , "United States of America," and something to indicate that it belongs to a special issue.

ANOTHER PHASE HAS BEEN ADDED TO the Chinese situation by the report that Russia has demanded a concession for a railroad to connect Port Arthur with Peking, the Chinese capital city. In view of the recently announced compact between England and Russia, the demand of the latter may cause a re-opening of the entire question. The proposed railway would open a territory which was regarded as immune from all foreign influence, and one that would place the capital of China within close connection with Russia's great fortress at Port Arthur. While granting many concessions to foreigners, China has steadily refused to allow any of this foreign influence to touch the sacred city which is the capital of the Celestial Empire. A railroad has been built from Peking to Tien-Tsin, the nearest seaport, and extended from Tien-Tsin to Shan Hai Kwan, a treaty port to the north. Another road has been built from Peking south to Ching-Tieng. Both these roads are owned and controlled by the Chinese government, but neither has been allowed really to enter the walled city of Peking. They are connected with the capital city by electric roads.

AN EXPEDITION FOR THE FINDING and relief of Andree and his party will start for the northeast coast of Greenland within a few weeks. The relief party will be in charge of Prof. A. G. Nathorst, and will sail on the steam whaler Antarctic, of which he is a part owner. The expense of the expedition will be almost entirely defrayed by a wealthy Norwegian merchant named Hammer, of Christiania. Prof. Nathorst is peculiarly fitted for an expedition of this nature. He took part in the Nordenskiöld expedition that wintered in Spitzbergen twenty-five years ago, and was with the Nordenskiöld expedition to Greenland. He was also one of the party who made the famous Vega voyage around Asia. He is a member of the Swedish Academy of Sciences, and of the Geographical society.

IN VIEW OF PRESENT AGITATION against expansion, unusual interest is attached to sentiments expressed by Secretary Long, on the occasion of a recent speech delivered in Boston. As to the programme of the administration in the Philippines, Mr. Long says: "You may be sure that it has not the least idea of putting any shackle or fetter on any Filipino—not so much as a cotton twine string around his ankles. You may be sure that it is more eager to stop bloodshed and secure peace than you are, because it has to bear the responsibility. You may be sure that it will do everything it can to carry the blessings of our own civilization to those islands of the sea, and that its highest ambition will be fulfilled, if through its efforts the people there, emerging from the oppression and darkness of centuries, shall come out into the light of the new world, and be set upon the way to the enjoyment of the same liberties, the same education, the same progress, the same homes, the same government, the same large, generous, happy life, which is now the heritage of every American citizen, in whatever part of the great American Union he lives."

THE FIFTY-SIXTH CONGRESS IS LIKELY to be called upon to legislate against undesirable immigration. Commissioner Powderly, of the immigration bureau, recently completed investigations of the question, and finds that the influx of immigrants to the United States at the present time is 25 per cent. greater than for any period in recent years. Immigration has always been greatest in times of prosperity. In 1892, when commerce and industry reached high-water mark, the total number of immigrants arriving during the year was 623,084. Since that year it has gradually declined, the total immigration in 1898 being only 229,299. The increase therefore, while affording proof of a gratifying industrial condition, shows the necessity of some form of protection for our own labor. Although a large number of immigrants are of the class which make good citizens, a considerable portion will merely augment the slum element of the larger cities. Mr. Powderly expresses an opinion that newcomers from the south of Italy, Hungary, and portions of Poland, that are now arriving daily, are undesirable, not possessed of qualities contributing to good citizenship, and in fact will never become Americanized. It seems to be incumbent upon the next Congress to devise restrictive measures.

SYRIA, IT IS REPORTED, WILL MAKE an attempt to throw off Turkish rule. A revolutionary party, with headquarters in New York, has issued a call to arms, and agents of the junta are said to be at work enlisting the support of Syrians throughout the world. It is claimed there are 25,000 members of the revolutionary party in this country alone. So far, no aid or encouragement has been openly given the movement. Even the members of the junta are not known, as it is claimed knowledge of the identity of leaders and sympathizers would subject their relatives in Syria to persecution. The misrule of Turkey will be responsible for the uprising. Syria is the southwestern leg of Asiatic Turkey, bounded on the east and south by Arabia, and west by the Mediterranean Sea. It includes Palestine, and the estimated area of the land is 146,070 square miles, its population being about 3,000,000. Most of these, either by choice or of necessity, are Mohammedans, but there are also 350,000 Greek Christians, 250,000 Maronites and Roman Catholics, 175,000 Jews, 48,000 Druses, and scattering small bodies of believers representing other sects.

THE NUMBER OF APPOINTMENTS based upon examinations was larger last year than ever before in the history of the Civil Service Commission. This is shown by the recently issued fifteenth annual report of the Commission. During the year, over forty-five thousand applicants were examined, of which two thirds passed successfully. The classification of the entire customs service was completed, and the free delivery postal service extended, bringing many offices within the provisions of civil service. The report says: "Officials in charge of collecting the customs duties of the government emphatically stated that there has been a saving of about one-fourth in the cost of gathering this part of the public revenue. If their estimate is correct, this item alone shows a saving of nearly $2,000,000 per annum. The Commission is satisfied that if the internal revenue service were conducted with the same regard for the Civil Service Law and rules as the customs service has been, a very large saving would also be shown in the cost of collecting that part of the revenue." According to the report, salaries in the executive branch of the service exceed one hundred million dollars, and the Commission believes the operation of Civil Service rules effects a saving of ten per cent.

The News of the Church

The Church Abroad

Canon Knox Little who left England last year for a long stay in South Africa, has just returned home, and is reported to have greatly benefited by the change and rest. He has been advised, however, for some time yet to limit his engagements to work that is strictly necessary.

The Lenten Ordinations in England

The total number of candidates was—according to the Guardian statistics, 102—50 deacons and 52 priests, as compared with 113—62 deacons and 51 priests—at the same time last year, so that the decline still continues. The number of dioceses represented is, however, less. The educational antecedents of the candidates showed that about 48 per cent., an extraordinarily low proportion, were graduates of either Oxford or Cambridge.

Voluntary Offerings in the Church

A review of the voluntary offerings in the Church of England during 1898 ought to relieve the minds of those who feel that voluntaryism is a great danger to the Church. The total raised during the year was $37,531,770, more than $2,500,000 above the amount received the year before. Of this amount, foreign missions received $1,180,000; Church building, $950,000; Church extension, $280,000, and home missions, $150,000. If the Church of England would break loose from its fetters it would find itself growing rather than weakening.

The Board of Missions

The Board of Managers met at the Church Missions House on Tuesday, May 9th, the Bishop of Albany, vice-president, in the chair. There were present nine bishops, 12 presbyters, and nine laymen.

The Executive Committee reported with regard to arrangements made by them for deputations to represent the work of the society at diocesan conventions; 28 such appointments having been made and 18 more being in course of adjustment.

A letter was read from the Rev. J. B. Funsten, dated Portsmouth, Va., April 24th, and it was explained that the postponement of the consecration therein referred to was at Mr. Funsten's own request.

The General Secretary

A communication was received from the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop declining the position of general secretary to which he was chosen the previous month. He says:

No one could estimate more highly than I do the importance of the position, and the wideness of the influence likely to be exerted by the man who successfully fills it. The honor done me by the action of the Board I greatly appreciate. In reaching a conclusion I have tried to pay due regard to all claims upon me. I have sought most earnestly divine guidance, asking day by day for a good conscience and a right judgment. I have weighed most carefully the reasons pro and con, and gradually my mind has settled to the conviction that it would not be wise for me to enter upon a work so exacting and so different from that to which I have been accustomed. If this decision gives pain to my friends, or serious disappointment to the members of the Board who have honored me with their suffrages, I can only say that I am sincerely sorry to be compelled to pain and disappoint those whom I hold in such high esteem.

Treasurer's Report

The report stated that a lithographed certificate was in preparation, a copy of which duly engrossed will be presented to every Sunday school which has contributed to this year's Lenten offering, and so has become a member of the Sunday School Auxiliary to the Board of Missions. It was apparent from the treasurer's report that while the usual contributions are not below those of last year to the corresponding date, yet because of the considerable increase of the work, and because of a smaller amount received from legacies, large contributions are imperatively needed between this time and the close of the fiscal year, Aug. 31st.

Report of the Joint Commission

The Executive Committee of the Commission on Increased Responsibilities, acting with the authority of the other members of the Commission, decide to make an appeal to the Church now for the immediate founding in or near Cuba, of an orphanage for the care of some of the destitute children in Cuba, and ask the sympathy and endorsement of the Board. The inquiry which the Commission were instructed by the General Convention to make as to means and methods of work, has been further prosecuted since the last report, and deepens the conviction of the wisdom and duty of making provision for the relief of these orphans. With full and cordial recognition of other efforts that are making, the members of the committee feel that the work is so enormous in its extent and so pathetic in its appeal, as to require all the interest that can possibly be aroused. They believe, too, that no undertaking of this duty by others can relieve the Church of its obligation to throw its resources, material and spiritual, into the work.

There is no need to dwell upon the patent and pressing necessity of such a movement, as the best expression of our desire that this Church should assume its responsibility for the Christian care and training of this most dependent class.

Under the oversight of the Bishop of Pennsylvania and with the active support of the American Church Missionary Society, clergymen and Christian men and women are at work in Cuba representing this Church in organized services and in schools. And nothing can better become the Church now than to commend and enlarge this missionary service by the provision of a home in which the helpless and homeless waifs may be rescued from misery and immorality and irreligion.

In order to make a beginning, the members of the Commission appeal for $30,000, and ask the prompt and active interest and sympathy of American Churchmen and Churchwomen in parochial offerings, in individual gifts, and in the organization of auxiliary committees. The decision as to the place and plan of the work will be in the hands of the undersigned, with such assistance as they can obtain from our Church workers in Cuba, and from Churchmen acquainted with the situation there. Moneys may be sent to Mr. Robert Bacon, of the House of J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall st., New York, designated "For the Church Orphanage in Cuba."

WM. CROSWELL DOANE,
H. C. POTTER,
D. H. GREER,
JAMES J. GOODWIN.

It was

Resolved: That the Board hereby expresses its endorsement of and sympathy with the movement brought to its attention, looking to the establishment of an orphanage in Cuba under the auspices of this Church.

United Offering of Woman's Auxiliary

As stipendiaries, under the United Offering of 1898, the following persons nominated by their respective bishops, received appointment: Mrs. Alice M. Fox, of San Francisco, as matron of the hospital in Skaguay, Alaska; and Sister Ella Smith, deaconess, at Waynesville, N. C., with Miss Duffy as her assistant; Miss Ida Ramsaner, as teacher at Chunn's Cove, N. C., and Miss Elizabeth O. Pearson, as teacher in Burke county, N. C.—all in the missionary district of Asheville. Several other appointments of beneficiaries of this fund were renewed.

Appropriations for Domestic Work

Letters were received from the Commission on Work among the Colored People, and from eight of the bishops having domestic missionary work under their jurisdiction, and favorable action was taken where required. The Bishop of Georgia appeared before the Board, representing the Commission on Work among the Colored People, to advocate an enlarged appropriation. The question of the increase was referred to the advisory committee for consideration and report at the next meeting. The appropriation to the Missionary District of Southern Florida for the new fiscal year, "in view of the Bishop's singular success and local financial hindrances to self-support," was increased in the amount of $1,000, and, after some minor changes, the appropriations for the next fiscal year for domestic missions, including Indian missions and work among the colored people, were made substantially at present rates. Moreover, from a special fund, $750 was appropriated for the year beginning Sept. 1st, for work among the Swedes in the diocese of Quincy, it being understood that two missionaries are to be employed.

Good Progress of the Foreign Missions

Letters were at hand from several bishops in the foreign field, and a number of their missionaries. For China, an appropriation was made of $1,300, one-half of the amount required, for an addition to the Boone School; the Rev. Mr. Partridge having undertaken to provide the remainder from funds at his disposal. In connection with this, Bishop Graves remarked: The great changes in Wuchang and Hankow . . . have given a tremendous push to all educational work. . . . We have been forced to increase our numbers, although we turn away hundreds from the doors." He wrote very interestingly of his recent visit to the up-river stations, and said that with two exceptions where the work had been interfered with by local disturbances, rapid progress is being made. The Bishop reports the Confirmation of 79 persons. During recent months, the staff of the mission has been enlarged, which fact, besides the local increase of the work, demanded a larger appropriation for the coming year, and the Bishop's estimate, amounting to $86,244 50, was adopted. By reason of the considerable enlargement of the number of missionaries in Japan, it required $83,032 to meet Bishop McKim's estimate, which was adopted and the sum granted. His appointment of Miss Jane Thompson Cook was consummated, the needed expense being provided for, to take effect when she shall have completed her course in the Philadelphia Deaconess House. Likewise the estimate from the Bishop of Cape Palmas was larger because of the prosperity of his work. This was approved, and appropriations made to meet it in the sum of $42,054. The sum of $7,160 was set apart for the salary of the Bishop of Haiti, the stipends of his clergy who are missionaries of this Board and of the Rev. B. I. Wilson, in Dominica, and for the Farm School and the Bishop's contingent expenses. Moreover, Bishop Holly was invited by the Board to attend the next Missionary Council as its guest. A very urgent appeal was received from Bishop Ferguson for $4,000 for the purchase of a small sea-going steamer, which in his circumstances seems to be almost, if not quite, an absolute necessity. A resolution was adopted ordering this letter of Bishop Ferguson's to be published to the Church. The Rev. Dr. Moort, of Monrovia, Liberia, reports that the walls of Trinity church have fallen, and the vestry are very anxious to rebuild. The church was originally built by St. George's, New York, and the doctor says that he would be rejoiced if another of like spirit to the late Rev. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Sr., would rise up to assist them. It is a serious matter, as Trinity is the building which represents our Church at the capital of the Republic. The Rev. N. H. B. Cassell, just returned from the general convocation of the jurisdiction, writes that the Bishop's address "showed that the work had made marked improvement during the last two years."

The Society's Trust Funds

The by-laws of the Board of Managers were so amended as to authorize the Standing Committee on Trust Funds to commit all such funds belonging to the society to the care and custody of a trust company (to be designated by the Board) for the future, the business, however, remaining under the Committee's supervision. In connection with this change, which was initiated at the previous meeting, the following minute was unanimously adopted:

Resolved: That in taking this action the Board cannot refrain from placing on record its high appreciation of the distinguished services of two members, especially, of the Committee on Trust Funds—the Very Rev. Dean Hoffman and Cornelius Vanderbilt, Esq., the latter of whom has placed the Board under enduring obligations by his able counsel and untiring vigilance; as the first-named has done by eminent wisdom, foresight, and discrimination in the financial administration of a large trust. That, during all his guardianship of it, through times of great financial depression and disaster, there has never been lost a dollar, whether of interest or principal, of the funds of the Board, is a record worthy of most cordial and grateful recognition.

It was stated on behalf of the Auditing Committee that they had caused the books and accounts of the treasurer to be examined to the first instant, and had certified the same to be correct.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The Bishop will preside at the closing exercises of the Western Theological Seminary, on the evening of the 24th, in the cathedral, when, after choral Evensong, the sermon will be preached by the Rev. C. P. Anderson.

The Rev. W. C. Richardson, rector of Trinity, will preach the annual sermon before the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary, in St. Peter's, on June 1st, and also that before the diocese of Fond du Lac, on June 6th.

Ascension Day was this year more generally observed than usual; in several churches there was an elaborate evening service; that at the Epiphany was made attractive by its musical programme, well rendered by the very efficient choir. A very large congregation attended.

At the cathedral clergy house, the dean rejoices in the acquisition of a fully-supplied printing press which will be utilized by the boys of the school.

The Rev. Percival McIntyre has now entirely recovered his health, and has resumed his work.

St. Paul's, Kankakee

The plans of the new church are so far advanced that Dean Phillips expects to have tenders for the construction in a few days, and the corner-stone laid concurrently with the meeting of the Southern Deanery next month.

Rector's Salary Increased

By the vestry of Christ church, Woodlawn, the Rev. A. L. Williams has been relieved of payment of interest for the debt on the rectory. This means an increase of salary to the amount of $350 per annum.

St. Andrew's Parish Meeting

From returns made to the annual parish meeting of St. Andrew's on the 8th, it appears that the amount actually raised during the diocesan year was $9,059.86. The vestry was re-elected, with the addition of Mr. C. S. Senyard, long a faithful worker in the parochial associations.

Death of Judge Van Buren

The parish in particular, and the diocese in general, mourns the death, on the 9th, after an illness of only 22 hours, of Mr. Augustus Van Buren who had long been a parishioner of Epiphany. His widow is a daughter of the late Dr. Groesbeck, and a sister of the president of the diocesan G. F. S.; a family ranking among the oldest of this diocese.

Confirmation at Grand Crossing

On Sunday last the Bishop confirmed a class of 18, chiefly adults, presented by the Rev. T. J. O. Curran, in St. George's, Grand Crossing. A noticeable feature of the service was the large number of children attending. Among the confirmed was a lady who leaves this week to join her husband, recently of the 2nd Regiment of the I. N. Guard, but now on the civil service in Cuba.

A Rare Prayer Book

Bishop McLaren has recently come into possession of a rare work, a folio copy edition of 1795 of the First Prayer Book of the Church in the United States. It was given him by the surviving relatives of the late Rev. Henry G. Perry as a souvenir of their brother.

Meeting of the Clerica

The members, to the number of 25, were entertained at Oak Park, on the 10th, at the residence of Mrs. Anderson, with whom were associated Mesdames Tait, McMurphy, and Rouse. In succession to Mrs. Morrison, who has moved to Iowa, Mrs. Edwards was elected vice-president, and the latter's place as secretary is filled by Mrs. Rouse.

The North-eastern Deanery

The spring meeting was held in St. Ansgarius' church, Chicago, May 9th. The Rev. Dr. Rushton officiated as celebrant at the 10:30 A.M. service, and 33 members, the dean, Dr. Clinton Locke, presiding, responded to the roll-call. The subjects discussed were not numerous; chief among them was the scheme of life assurance proposed to the diocese by a strong Michigan company, whereby in 10 or 15 years the sum of a quarter of million dollars would accrue for the endowment of the diocese, with an immediate income of from $2,000 to $3,000. The plan, briefly stated, is the securing of the insurance of 500 lives for $500 each. Besides being approved by the "New York Life," the scheme commended itself to the deanery as feasible and safe, as is evidenced by the passing of a resolution on motion of the Rev. C. P. Anderson. The Rev. Dr. Stone introduced the subject of the ordination in New York which has been engaging attention in the papers, but, while several members gave expression to their views, it was not deemed expedient to pass a resolution. Dr. Stone referred to the forthcoming 350th anniversary of the English Prayer Book on Whitsun Day, asked his brethren to refer to it on Sunday next, and extended an invitation to them to attend the commemorative service at 4 P.M. of Sunday, the 20th, in St. James' church. Professor F. J. Hall secured unanimous assent to a request that Dr. Locke would entrust a copy of his "Reminiscences," as a valuable contribution to the diocesan history, to the keeping of the registrar. The Dean promised to do so, and it is satisfactory to know that the papers will be published. After an enjoyable lunch in the guild room, for which hearty thanks were tendered to the wife of the pastor, the Rev. H. Lindskog, and the ladies who assisted her, the meeting listened for an hour to a continuation of the "Reminiscences of the diocese of Chicago," as told in that fascinating, though at times critical, style for which the diocesan Nestor is so well known among his brethren.

Pledge for Missions in St. James' Church

On Sunday last, the Rev. Dr. Rushton pleaded the cause of missions in St. James' church, and received pledges to the amount of $750 for diocesan missions. The rector went to Omaha on Monday, appointed by the General Board of Missions, to address the convention of Nebraska on the 16th, and the Woman's Auxiliary next day.

Church of the Epiphany

On the evening of the 3d, the members of the vestry and their wives gave a very successful and well attended reception to the rector and Mrs. Hopkins in the parish building. Another will be given to Mr. Hopkins by the men of the St. Andrew's Brotherhood on the 18th. At the annual parish meeting on Rogation Monday, the finances were reported to be in remarkably good condition, and the old vestry was re-elected. The Rev. John H. Hopkins, on appointment by the General Board of Missions, was to address the convention of the diocese of Quincy on the 17th. Mrs. Hopkins accompanied him to address the Woman's Auxiliary.

Woman's Auxiliary

The regular monthly meeting of the Chicago branch was held in the Church Club rooms, May 4th. Noon-day prayers were said by the Rev. Dr. Fleetwood who spoke a few words in commendation of woman's work. The treasurer gave a report of the month's financial account.

Miss Prophet who is the woman assistant in the city missionary work, gave a bright and very interesting address on the work she is doing. She told of her visits to the County Hospital, and to the homes of the poor inmates, and of her efforts to lift up the sick and dying to a brighter and higher thought beyond themselves. The address was very helpful to the members who were present. The president, Mrs. Lyman, congratulated the auxiliary on having such a faithful and competent young woman to do this work for them, and reminded the branches that all pledges for the city missionary work are now due, and should be paid before June 1st, when, at the annual meeting, all branches will be asked to renew their pledges for another year. Miss Banks, secretary of the missionary library committee, read an excellent paper on the study of missions and the better ways to gather, and give a deeper interest in, missionary intelligence. The paper was carefully prepared, and the library, as it now is, and is growing to be, surely deserves the careful consideration and help of all who are interested in missionary work. A letter from the Rev. George B. Pratt, our missionary in Puerto Rico, was read by the secretary, and was deeply interesting. The president asked the auxiliary to remember the needs of Mr. Pratt in this new work. Contributions were asked to help Bishop Graves, of Shanghai, in building a mission house for women workers in Hankow, China. Notice of the annual meeting was given, to be held in St. Peter's church, on Thursday, June 1st. There will be a celebration of Holy Communion at 10:30 A.M. Luncheon will be served by the ladies of St. Peter's parish at noon, and a business meeting with missionary addresses will be held in the afternoon. All branches are requested to notify the president of St. Peter's branch, Mrs. W. B. Randall, as to how many delegates will attend. The roll was called, showing 40 members present, representing 15 branches. The offerings were taken, and the meeting adjourned.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

At St. Peter's church, Peekskill, a special service was held Ascension Day, in celebration of the 25th anniversary of the vested boys choir.

At Trinity chapel, the Rev. Dr. Vibbert, vicar, there has just been a successful exhibition of the varied industrial work of the schools of Trinity parish.

Bishop Potter has issued a pastoral, authorizing a special prayer for use in the churches of the diocese, for the divine blessing upon the labors of the Peace Conference at The Hague.

In connection with the Briggs controversy, the Rev. R. Heber Newton, D.D., preached a special sermon on Sunday, May 14th, on "The limits of liberty in the Protestant Episcopal Church."

Confirmation Classes

Bishop Potter administered the rite of Confirmation at Trinity Church, Mt. Vernon, on Sunday afternoon, May 14th, to a class presented by the rector, the Rev. S. T. Graham. At the church of the Transfiguration, New York city, a class of 65 persons presented by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Houghton, received the rite of Confirmation on Sunday, May 7th.

Choir Festival at St. John's, Tuckahoe.

The annual choir festival was held on the evening of Ascension Day. The preacher was the Rev. Prof. Theodore M. Riley, D.D., of the General Theological Seminary.

Memorial Font for Trinity, Sing Sing

A handsome Baptismal font has been placed in memory of Miss Mary Churchill. It is of Virginia marble, supported by five Tennessee marble columns, with Old English capitals. It rests on an oak platform, and is nearly surrounded by a handsome brass and oak railing. The font was provided by a legacy left for the purpose.

Sons of the Revolution

At a special dinner given Ascension Day by the officers of the Sons of the Revolution, of this State, to the National delegates of the Society of the Cincinnati, Bishop White, of Michigan City, the Rev. Canon Frank L. Humphreys, and the Rev. Brockholst Morgan, were guests of honor, as also many prominent laymen of the Church.

General Theological Seminary

Bishop Satterlee, of Washington, preached the baccalaureate sermon in the chapel of the Good Shepherd, May 15th. Dean Hoffman gave a reception at the deanery, on the evening of May 16th. On Wednesday were to be held the commencement exercises, on conclusion of which the corner stone of the new Hoffman hall was to be laid.

Annual Meeting C. A. I. L.

The annual meeting of the Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor, was held May 9th, in the chapel of Calvary church, the Rev. Joseph Reynolds, vice-president, in the chair. Officers were elected as follows: President, Bishop Huntington of Central New York; vice-president, the Rev. Joseph Reynolds; secretary, Miss Harriett A. Keyser; treasurer, Mr. H. B. Livingston.

Silver Cross Lectures

At the church of the Holy Communion, the Rev. Henry Mottet, D. D., rector, the last of the Silver Cross Society addresses was given May 9th, when Bishop Doane, of Albany, spoke on "The Church." Invitations were sent to the faculties and students of the General Theological Seminary, the Union Theological Seminary, Columbia University, and other institutions of education in the city.

Fresh Air Work

A special effort is being made by the City Mission Society to secure funds to defray the expense of the fresh-air work for women and children during the heated season. A summer home at Sound Beach, Conn., received last year for longer or shorter intervals of rest, over 400 such inmates. The church of the Epiphany, the Rev. Joseph Hutcheson, rector, has been so fortunate as to secure by loan for use in the fresh-air work of the approaching season, the summer home formerly used by Grace parish.

Columbia University

An important announcement of the past week assures the erection of the long-desired dormitory, for which the alumni have been earnestly working. It will be built entirely by private capital, and will be therefore for the time under private management. The trustees have allowed the official contact of the university with the project, and will institute a system of tutor supervision similar to that now in vogue in the Harvard dormitories. The new building will be 100 by 50 ft. in dimensions, and will be arranged in student suites. It is expected that it will be sufficiently completed to be put to use by New Year's Day, 1900.

New Church for the Italians

The Italian church of San Salvatore, the edifice of which was sold some time ago in consequence of street changes made by the city government, has been forced since leaving the building, to undergo the inconveniences of temporary quarters. It has now requested canonical permission from the city authorities to build a new church in the district between Broadway and the Bowery, and Bleeker and Spring sts. From the city government $67,500 has been received, which will be available for the purchase of land and the cost of construction. The new site is very centrally located for the Italian population of the city.

Daughters of the King

The spring local assembly was held at St. James' church, Fordham, on May 13th. The Holy Communion was celebrated, the Rev. Chas. J. Holt, celebrant. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Pascal Harrower. Luncheon was provided by St. James' chapter, in the parish House. The conference followed. The Rev.

Chas. S. Olmsted addressed the Daughters briefly, assuring them of his good will and earnest desire that they should know his interest and well-wishes for their order; he well knew how dearly loved the Daughters and their welfare had been to the heart of his predecessor at St. Agnes, the late Rev. Dr. Bradley; and that any attempt to fill his place would be very difficult. Fourteen chapters were represented by 60 members in attendance, and reports of work were given by each delegate, of her respective chapter. An invitation from St. Agnes' and St. Mary's chapters of St. Agnes' chapel, to hold the fall assembly at that church, was accepted unanimously.

Church of the Holy Trinity

At the consecration of the new edifice referred to in these columns last week, the music was rendered by the choir of Grace church, under the direction of Mr. J. M. Helfenstein, organist and choirmaster. The Instrument of Donation was read by the Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, and the articles of agreement by Mr. William Rhinelander Stewart, who represented the donor, Miss Rhinelander. The Sentence of Consecration was read by the Rev. Cornelius B. Smith, D. D., rector emeritus of St. James' parish, of which Holy Trinity is a part, and the morning service was conducted by the vicar of the chapel, the Rev. James V. Chalmers. Before the sermon, the rector of St. James', the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, D. D., read resolutions of the vestry of the parish, thanking Miss Rhinelander for her noble gift, and an engrossed copy of this document was presented to her through Mr. Stewart. The preacher, the Rev. Dr. Wm. R. Huntington, took for his text, 1 Chron. xxii: 5; "The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical." A large number of clergymen were present.

Ordination of Dr. Briggs

Protest was made on Ascension Eve by the New York Catholic Club, which transmitted to Bishop Potter a resolution:

That in view of the published statements with regard to the teachings of the Rev. Dr. Briggs concerning Holy Scriptures, the New York Catholic Club respectfully and earnestly requests the Bishop of New York to defer the ordination of Dr. Briggs to the priesthood.

On Sunday morning, May 14th, Bishop Potter ordained the Rev. Charles A. Briggs, D. D., professor in the Union Theological Seminary, of the Presbyterians, as a priest in the Church. The service was held at the time originally appointed, the Bishop having paid no regard to the vigorous protests made to prevent or delay it. The place selected was the pro-cathedral chapel where, it is said, Dr. Briggs will perform Sunday or other work after his return from Europe. The professor was presented by the Rev. Cornelius B. Smith, D. D., rector emeritus of St. James' church. At the same time the Rev. Chas. H. Snedeker, deacon, one of the curates of St. Bartholomew's church, was advanced to the priesthood, being presented by the Bishop's secretary, the Rev. Geo. Francis Nelson, D. D. The preacher was the Rev. George William Douglas, D. D.

Reception of Roman Converts

On St. George's Day, at St. George's church, Kansas City, the Rev. P. Gavan Duffy, rector, four Roman Catholics, three men and one woman, were received into the Church at the High Celebration. They publicly renounced the errors of the Church of Rome and recited the Creed. The Miserere was then sung. This reception caused considerable comment in Kansas City, as this makes eight communicant members of the Roman Church received in the past eight months. On the Octave of St. George, Mozart's "Seventh Mass," was sung, and the rector preached for the last time, his resignation taking effect on May 1st. The Rev. Mr. Duffy resigned in February last, on account of failing health in an unsuitable climate. The vestry would not accept his resignation, but an illness in Lent caused the rector to insist upon it. In April, a petition, signed by a large number of the electors of the parish, begging him to remain, was presented to him, but he could not alter his mind. On May 2d, a farewell reception was given to the rector at the home of a parishioner, when he was presented with a purse of gold and some silver plate.

Pittsburgh

Cortlandt Whitehead, D. D., Bishop

The May meeting of the Clerical Union took place May 8th, beginning with luncheon at the Hotel Henry. A very interesting and suggestive paper was read by the Rev. Dr. Ward, on "Conditional Immortality," followed by a spirited discussion.

St. Thomas' Church, Barnesboro'

Is just now in a flourishing condition. On the occasion of the Bishop's recent visitation on May 4th, a class consisting of 39 candidates was presented for Confirmation. At the close of the service a reception was given to the Bishop, and plans are under advisement for the building of a rectory during the summer, if at all possible.

Festival of the Ascension, Pittsburgh

Ascension Day was very generally observed in all the churches throughout the city. Among the more notable services held were the annual parish festival of the church of the Ascension. The day also marked the 10th anniversary of the occupation of the first Church building, and of the rectorship of the Rev. R. W. Grange, and was notable as being the first annual parish festival held in the magnificent new church. The service was largely choral. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Thaddeus A. Snively, of Chicago. The Holy Communion was celebrated by the Bishop. Other clergymen taking part were the rector, and the Rev. Messrs. Thompson, Wightman, and Heffern. The music was furnished by the large vested choir of the parish. An elegant luncheon was served in the parish house to the clergy and invited guests.

Musical Service on Ascension Day

On the evening of Ascension there took place in Trinity church a grand musical service, under the auspices of the Tancred Commandery, K. T., the Bishop officiating. Four other commanderies were present as guests, making in all about 350 Sir Knights. The anthems were a grand Te Deum and "Heaven is my home and earth is my footstool." The music was furnished by the vested choir, led by the organ, augmented by several brass instruments. The sermon was preached by Bishop Whitehead. Assisting in the service were the rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. Arundel, and the Rev. Messrs. Benton and Taylor. The offerings of the congregation were received in behalf of the Bishop's Charity Fund.

Shelter for Unprotected Girls, Syracuse

The 22nd annual report has just been issued, and shows the character of this practical and beneficent charity. A new building, called Faith Cottage, for the younger girls, has been erected during the year, a generous gift of money covering its cost. During the same period, 55 girls have been cared for, and the income, meeting the expenses, was $4,703.48. The inmates are taught laundry and housework, sewing, music, physical culture, and other elements of useful knowledge.

Rogation Observance

Sunday, May 7th, being Rogation Sunday, was observed as follows, at Grace church, Wilkesdale: At the conclusion of the Holy Eucharist, an invitation was given to follow the celebrant into the fields, with a view to uniting in a short function, asking the Divine Blessing on the labors of the husbandman at this season. The congregation responded unanimously, no one remaining behind or going away. Psalm civ was recited, a few prayers from the Book of Common Prayer were said, and the benediction was pronounced. It would, of course, have been more "correct" to have engaged in this service on one or other of the regular Rogation Days, but it was felt that such a course might (and very probably would) have interfered with the attendance on Ascension Day, specially because farmers find it hard to spare their horses to drive worshipers to church at this busy season when the rush of spring work is upon them.

St. John's School, Manlius

The Bishop confirmed a class of nine persons, presented by the Rev. A. C. Clarke, chaplain, on Palm Sunday. The Rev. W. F. Faber recently held a series of instructions and devotions for the students. Ascension Day is observed as a marked day in the school year.

Trinity Church, Watertown

It is rumored that a well-known capitalist has signified his willingness to contribute $2,000, on certain conditions, towards the erection of a permanent club house for the Workingmen's Club of the parish. Since its organization (Nov., 1893), 721 laboring men have been elected to membership; the sum of $2,805.15 has been paid in for dues, and $2,000 distributed in sick and funeral benefits, and rent of house. All debts are paid, and there is a cash balance in bank of $700. On the expiration of the lease of the club house, it was voted to remove to the opera house, where ten rooms have been fitted up, and furnished with the best periodicals of the day. The janitor reports a large increase in the daily attendance. The Sunday school has six officers, 34 teachers, and 325 scholars; it supports four missionary scholarships. Of the 41 persons recently confirmed in the parish (11 men, 18 married persons, 10 young women, and four children), one had been a Universalist, one, a Presbyterian, one, a Lutheran, two, Romanists, six, Methodists, and seven had grown up without having come to Baptism. The Rev. J. Sanders Reed is rector of this church. The Woman's Auxilliary held 21 meetings for work during the winter, with an unusually good attendance; total of cash receipts for the season, $854.50. A chime of bells is to be set in the tower of Trinity church during the present summer, as the gift of Anson R. Flower, a member of the vestry. It will consist of nine bells, with the "tenor," or largest bell, of 2,000 lbs. weight, and will include the full "octave" of the musical scale, together with the "flat seventh" tone. This extra bell is furnished so as to enable the chime to produce tunes in two keys, and really doubles the scope of any chime as to the number of tunes or "changes" which can be played. The makers, the Meneely Bell Company, Troy, N. Y., say that the bells are to be the very finest that excellent patterning and fine composition can produce.

Kansas

Frank Rosebrook Millspaugh, D.D., Bishop

The Convocation of Salina

Met in Clay Centre, May 2nd-4th. There was a large attendance of both clergy and laity. The first service was held in St. Paul's church, Tuesday evening. After Evening Prayer, Canon Bywater delivered a helpful address. Holy Communion was celebrated Wednesday morning at 7:30, Archdeacon Watkins, celebrant. Morning Prayer was said at 10 o'clock, after which the dean of convocation, the Very Rev. Joseph H. Leeds, preached a very excellent sermon. An address from Mrs. Millspaugh, delivered to the Woman's Auxilliary, followed. Every one spoke highly of it, and it helped to give new life to the Clay Centre branch of the society. Luncheon was served in the rectory by the ladies of the church. In the afternoon five stirring addresses were delivered, upon the following subjects: "The false (club) idea of our Church," Archdeacon Watkins; "The ecclesiasticism and spirituality of our Church," the Rev. I. E. Baxter; "The Churchman's proper attitude toward research," the Rev. W. P.

James; "The Churchman's duty towards missions," the Rev. Canon Bywater; "Love, the Pleroma," the Rev. John Albert Williams. The addresses called forth interesting discussions. Regrets were expressed that this was the dean's last meeting with the clergy of this convocation, as he expects to return to England next month; he will be greatly missed. The church was taxed to its utmost Wednesday evening, when missionary addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. J. A. Williams, W. B. Clark, W. P. James, and I. E. Baxter. A farewell Eucharist was celebrated Thursday morning, at 7:30, after which convocation adjourned. It was thought to be the most successful one ever had.

Grace Church, Kiowa

Bishop Millspaugh made his annual visitations in Southwestern Kansas recently, and reports energetic work along all lines in the various missions attached to Kingman, and in charge of the Rev. L. L. Swan, the faithful and hard-working missionary in this district. At Kiowa, property for Church purposes which cost $1,800, has been secured, and $250 has been raised by the people of the mission to renovate it. The improvements in the church building, while expensive, will be pretty and Churchly.

St. Mark's, Medicine Lodge

The foundation for the church here is put in, with $600 in the bank and $600 more pledged from the people of the town toward the building. Bishop Millspaugh recently confirmed a class of nine, presented by the missionary in charge, the Rev. L. L. Swan. It is expected the church will be finished free of debt in the next three months.

Southern Virginia

Alfred M. Randolph, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Old St. John's church, Portsmouth, is being torn down, and dwelling houses are to be erected on the site. The new church has been erected in another locality.

A very beautiful silver memorial plate has been put on the new organ in Trinity church, Portsmouth. It bears the inscription: "In loving memory of Miss Louisiana Wilson, 58 years organist of this church, 1839-1897."

The congregation of our Church recently organized in Atlantic City Ward, Norfolk, is rapidly augmenting in numbers. Services are being held Sunday nights in the W. C. T. U. hall, and as soon as a suitable site can be secured, a costly chapel will be erected.

An interesting entertainment was given by the Sunday school of Christ church, Norfolk, recently. The annual reports were read, showing that the school had nearly doubled its numbers during the past year. Beautiful floral displays were made by the various classes. The Rev. Mr. Hubbard and Dr. Grammer took part in the exercises.

Louisiana

Davis Sessums, D.D., Bishop

The new church at Bastrop is about completed. It is a very neat and Churchly looking structure, and is an ornament to the town. During Lent, the Rev. W. P. Browne, missionary priest-in-charge, and an able and enthusiastic worker, managed to arrange for daily services.

Florida

Edwin Gardner Weed, D. D., Bishop

Church Life in Jacksonville

This has advanced very materially during the past winter. The church of the Good Shepherd has a substantial sum toward the new church which they hope to build soon. The foundation is already laid. The Rev. E. C. Belcher, priest-in-charge, has built up an interest which was all but dead. At St. Andrew's the people have rallied around the rector, and are growing enthusiastic in the upbuilding of the spiritual life of the parish. With one of the most beautiful church edifices in the diocese, and with nearly 200 communicants, there is no reason why the people of St. Andrew's should not carry forward a grand work. On Easter Day there were a number of beautiful gifts presented, among them a pair of bronze candelabra for the altar, an altar rail, made and put in by one of St. Andrew's devoted sons; a pulpit in mahogany and Florida pine, Gothic in design, to correspond with the rest of the church, was made by the same man that built the rail, and is a gem of artistic woodwork.

South Dakota

William Hobart Hare, D.D., Bishop

Bishop Hare visited the Black Hills deanery during the last two weeks in April. Throughout this deanery there has been a steady and large growth in members and in good works.

St. Thomas' Church, Sturgis

On the evening of the 15th, the Bishop preached, and confirmed a class of 16. The following morning he preached again, and administered the Holy Communion; 160 persons have been baptized during the past six years. The Rev. F. North Tummon, in charge here, holds services also at Fort Meade. A rectory will soon be purchased.

Progress in Lead City

Services were held on the evening of April 30th. The large church was entirely filled. After Evening Prayer, Bishop Hare delivered one of the most interesting and instructive sermons ever listened to in the Hills. A class of 30 was presented by the rector, the Rev. Geo. G. Ware, for Confirmation. When he became rector, nearly eight years ago, the whole number of communicants at that time was only half the number presented by him for Confirmation during the last year; the church was a small wood structure in a remote part of the city; now it is on Main st., a brick and stone edifice, worth at least $25,000, and in point of Churchly appearance and arrangement, not equalled elsewhere in the State. From a very small, irregular choir, Archdeacon Ware now has a vested choir of 90 members, containing many of the finest voices in the Hills, and, without question, the best choir within a radius of a thousand miles. His active and self-sacrificing labors have built up a strong congregation which is zealously engaged in good works. During the past year, the Bishop, at two visitations, has confirmed 62 persons.

Consecration of Church at Spearfish

April 22d, the Bishop and the Rev. W. H. Pond went by rail to Deadwood, and drove from that town to Spearfish, a distance of 20 miles, over a rough and rugged road, reaching Spearfish in time for a service in the evening. Six persons were confirmed, and the beautiful new church consecrated. Mr. Pond's faithful labors in the three or four places under his charge have been abundantly blessed.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

Bishop Leonard arrived at home on May 6th, after a three months' tour in Europe, visiting the churches on the continent under his care, and presiding at a convocation of the clergy, held at Nice. On Sunday morning he preached at Trinity cathedral, at which service the Rev. A. A. Abbott was installed as archdeacon. Dean Williams presented the candidate. The dean has been absent on a short vacation, and was gladly welcomed back by his people by whom he is greatly beloved.

The Rev. N. P. Charlot, the oldest clergyman in Ohio, has returned to Cleveland from his winter sojourn in Florida, in excellent health and spirits.

The Rev. E. S. Barkdull has been given a two months' vacation, in recognition of his somewhat arduous work during the vacancy in the rectorship of Trinity church, Toledo, and he, with Canon Watson, of Trinity cathedral, who has done faithful work in the diocese during the absence of the Bishop, will make a tour in Europe together, leaving about May 27th, and returning Aug. 1st.

Western New York

Wm. D. Walker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

A fine Tiffany window has been unveiled in St. Paul's church, Rochester, a memorial of the late beloved rector, the Rev. Dr. Foote. It was reported that the new St. Paul's would be consecrated during Whitsun-week.

The parish house of Christ church, Albion, the Rev. S. F. Dunham, rector, has been enlarged to more than double its former capacity, and now offers every facility for general parochial work. It has an open-timbered roof, and is beautifully finished in quartered oak.

A new work has been successfully launched at Dundee. Here we have come into possession of a fine church property, and the Rev. W. L. Davis has become the resident minister.

The Buffalo Archdeaconry

The annual meeting was held in St. James' church, the Rev. Chas. H. Smith, D.D., rector, April 25th. The opening service included a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Bishop celebrant. The annual report of the Missionary Board showed that ten meetings had been held; also sectional meetings in Jamestown and Lockport, from which clerical delegates had been sent out to hold services in the "next towns," with excellent results in creating and deepening an interest in missions. The treasurer's report showed a balance in the treasury of $878.42. Archdeacon Bragdon made a detailed report of his work, noting the progress that had been made in new fields, and calling special attention to the surprising neglect of the teaching of the Church catechism in nearly all the mission Sunday schools. In accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Mission Sunday schools, it was Resolved: (1) That the archdeacon be requested to make particular inquiry in each mission station as to the methods and work of the Sunday school, and to take steps for the organization of schools where as yet none have existed; (2) that the Missionary Board be requested to make an appropriation to be expended under the direction of the archdeacon, for the supply of requisites to schools unable to provide for themselves; (3) that bands of Sunday school helpers be formed among the children of our Sunday schools to further assist the archdeacon in aiding such schools in the mission stations.

Several of the clergy engaged in mission work gave encouraging verbal reports of their labors. Bishop Walker spoke of the general success of the year's work, commending the energy and faithfulness of the archdeacon. The report of the Laymen's League, which supplies lay-readers for missions, was read by the superintendent, Mr. A. L. Harrison, and was listened to with great interest. The following were elected on the Missionary Board: Rev. Nathan W. Stanton, secretary; Mr. Nath'l Rochester, treasurer; Rev. Messrs. Richards, Wrigley, and Faber; Messrs. Hopkins, Boynton, and Hodge.

Presentation to Rev. J. S. Wilson

The vestry and parishioners of St. Mary's church, Buffalo, gave a farewell reception in the parish house, April 24th, to the Rev. and Mrs. J. S. Wilson who have recently removed to New York. Mr. Wilson has been assistant to the rector, the Rev. C. F. J. Wrigley, for several years, and as a mark of appreciation of his service, a silver tea service was presented to him and his wife.

Confirmation in Buffalo

Bishop Walker visited the parish of the Good Shepherd on the evening of May 2d, and confirmed 15 persons, 10 being adults, and two from St. Peter's parish. In the class were two converts from the Lutheran body, three from the Presbyterians, one Methodist, and one Romanist.

Grace Church, Lockport

The Keep memorial windows have recently been placed in position. St. Peter is represented as an aged man bearing in his right hand the traditional keys of the apostolic office. St. Paul stands with hand uplifted in the attitude of preaching, the whole figure tense with purpose, intelligence and force beaming from his face. The canopies and base panels are in design identical with those in the St. Andrew and St. Stephen windows, and form the last in the series of historical character windows on the north side of the church.

St. Paul's, Mayville

A memorial polished brass altar cross was presented and blessed at the mid-day service on Easter Day. The inscription reads:

To the glory of God, and in loving memory of Ruth, infant daughter of J. and H. E. Kessel. This memorial is given by sorrowing parents. Easter, 1899.

Archdeaconry of Rochester

The annual meeting was held in St. Luke's church, April 28th. On Wednesday evening, the 27th, a missionary meeting was held, at which Bishop Walker, Archdeacon Washburn, and several of the clergy made brief and stirring addresses. The good work which the archdeacon and his missionaries are doing has called forth general commendation, and at no time has the work presented such hopeful features as now. The year closes without debt.

St. Stephen's Mission, Rochester

The Rev. Evan H. Martin who recently resigned St. Mark's, N. Tonawanda, has entered upon his work at the new St. Stephen's mission. The prospect for the growth and stability of this mission is bright and encouraging. On March 21st the Bishop confirmed 17 persons, and was expected, on the eve of Whitsunday, to confirm an additional number. A litany desk has been given by Mr. and Mrs. Isaac B. Hendrickson, a memorial of Mary A., mother of Mr. Hendrickson.

Western Michigan

George De Normandie Gillespie, D.D., Bishop

Grace Church, Grand Rapids

In honor of the 25th anniversary of the organization of the Ladies' Aid Society, a banquet was given by all the ladies in the parish, on April 20th. The Rev. R. H. F. Gairdner was toastmaster for the evening, and was very happy in his remarks. Music was furnished by the choir boys and others. Mr. Jacob Kleinhaus gave a history of the Ladies' Society. Collins H. Johnston, M.D., toasted "The ladies." The Rev. Wm. H. Knowlton, one of the first ministers of the parish, spoke of the faithful work done by the society 20 years ago. Dr. Daniel Bradley, pastor of Park Congregational church, spoke of what all Christian workers have at heart. Mrs. Myrtle Koon Cherryman, in her recitation of "House-top Christians," set forth a high standard of personal religion. This feast of reason closed with the singing of the doxology.

Woman's Auxiliary

In the following week, April 29th, a joint meeting of the several branches of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in Grace church, Grand Rapids. The Bishop presided, and eloquent speeches were made by the Rev. J. N. McCormick and the Rev. R. R. Claiborne who had been invited from Kalamazoo to address this meeting. Renewed interest in missions is evident among the ladies of Grand Rapids.

Rhode Island

Thomas March Clark, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Memorial Window at Newport

Mr. Lispenard Stewart has just placed a memorial window in Trinity church, to his mother, Mary Rhinelander Stewart. The window represents a female figure with clasped hands, and seated in a marble niche, with a heavy festoon of fruit and flowers hanging over it. Above are two angels holding a crown and cross, and a scroll inscribed: "A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised. Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own work praise her in the gates. Proverbs xxxi: 30-31." The angels are in silvery tones against a background of dull pink. The drapery of the main figure is fawn colored, with a jeweled border. A memorial inscription is placed at the base.

Alabama

Richard Hooker Wilmer, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
H. Melville Jackson, D.D., Bishop-coadjutor

The church at Lowndesboro is having a beautiful altar made of curly pine, which is said to compare favorably with those made at the North, and costs not nearly as much.

The church property at Troy has been much improved, adding greatly to the attractiveness of the building. The chancel and vestry room have been newly carpeted.

The church at Carlowville is to undergo improvements; part of the money for this purpose is already in hand.

St. Luke's church, Jacksonville, has recently placed a fine-toned organ in the church, and donated their former instrument to the chapel of the Good Shepherd, at White's Gap.

The congregation of the mission of Grace church, at Clayton, consists of only five families. With this small congregation, there are constant Church services held; the church property has been greatly improved, the interior beautifully decorated, and a new organ has been purchased.

St. John's Parish, Montgomery

This parish, which has been for some time without a rector, is now undergoing reorganization. Within the present month the regular current expense income has been increased by more than $2,100 a year, and it is hoped that under the new rector's administration, this parish will be in a better condition than has been the case in a number of years.

Extinction of Debt at Tuscaloosa

The parish of Tuscaloosa are rejoicing over the liquidation of their entire parish debt, amounting to more than $1,000. This sum was raised by popular subscriptions of the congregation in one hour, $800 of the sum required being then received, and the remainder on the following day. The parish has just received a gift of Prayer Books and Hymnals.

Arkansas

Henry Niles Pierce, D.D., LL.D., Bishop
Wm. M. Brown, D.D., Bishop-Coadjutor

The work of the Church in Arkansas is progressing slowly but surely. The record of Bishop Brown's visitations for March is gratifying, both as to the number of places visited and the good work accomplished. He spent the last days of February and the first of March at Van Buren, and visited all the Church people there, thus becoming acquainted with the individual members. On March 2nd he delivered his second lecture of a Lenten course in the cathedral, in the afternoon, and at Christ church, Little Rock, in the evening. The 5th, and the following two days he spent at Fort Smith, conducting services and Mission meetings. On the 9th and 10th the Bishop lectured again at the cathedral, and Christ church, Little Rock, respectively. At Searcy, on the 12th, morning service was held in the Methodist church, the number present must have been fully 600. Among the congregation were all the young ladies from Galloway College, about 75. Again at night, service was held. For the following four days the Bishop worked at Searcy, holding Mission meetings, visiting from house to house, and in other ways building up the Kingdom. The Church has a splendid lot at Searcy. On the 16th, Bishop Brown again lectured at the cathedral, Little Rock. On Sunday, the 19th, he visited Pine Bluff, the Rev. W. D. Buckner, rector, and spent four days holding Mission services. On the 23d he delivered another lecture at the cathedral. The congregations which greet the Bishop are usually large, but on the 25th he reached Wynne on his way to Helena, held Morning Prayer, and preached at the Methodist Church; the congregation consisted of ten persons. Judge Daggett, of Marianna, secretary of the diocese, happened to be present, and played the organ. Wynne is a railroad center, and soon the few Church people will increase in number as well as influence. Bishop Brown arrived at Helena the same day, and spent the balance of the month there, preaching, instructing, visiting; and on Good Friday he conducted the Three Hours' service. The Church at Helena is strong, and is a faithful witness to the truth. The rector is the Rev. Charles H. Lockwood, president of the Standing Committee.

The Church people of Jonesboro are to be congratulated on their new church, which is almost finished. It is a beautiful and Churchly edifice, and a gem of its kind.

Michigan

Thomas F. Davies, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Rev. R. W. Clark, D. D., Chaplain-general of the Sons of the Revolution, was much in request at the largely attended and interesting convention of the Sons of the Revolution that met in Detroit two weeks ago. He preached the opening sermon April 30th.

The Detroit Convocation

The spring meeting was held, April 24th, in Trinity church, Monroe, one of the oldest parishes in the diocese, the Rev. John Evans, rector. This parish is small in numbers, but admirable in equipment, having a handsome church, chapel, and rectory, all of stone. The town has about 5,000 inhabitants, but the population is very largely foreign, and the Romanists have an important educational institution and are very strong. The Woman's Auxiliary met at the same time and place. The attendance was not quite up to expectation. The Rev. Everett P. Smith preached the convocation sermon. There was no business of special importance. Dean McConnell read a report of much interest, and the reports from missionaries covered almost the whole district of the convocation, in which there is now very little waste ground. There are very few convocations as well worked as this. The Church families at Plymouth, Northville, Romeo, and other points where the Church has not been known, or has been long dormant, now have regular services, with encouraging interest. At a largely attended service in the evening, in Trinity church, the Rev. J. C. H. Mockridge delivered an excellent address, on "The mission of the Church to the American people." The Woman's Auxiliary have helped effectively by contributions to the newer missionary work in the convocation, and the members of the latter were much pleased to have a number of them present at some of the services, where the value of their help and sympathy was most apparent.

Virginia

Francis M. Whittle, D. D., LL. D., Bishop
Robert A. Gibson, D.D., Bishop-Coadjutor

Bishop Whittle visited St. Paul's church, Alexandria, on April 30th, in the evening, and confirmed a class of 17 persons. In the morning he visited the Theological Seminary, confirming a class of four, three of whom were students at the Episcopal High School.

Dallas

Alexander Chas. Garrett, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Fourth Annual Diocesan Council

Held May 9-11th, in the hall attached to St. Matthew's cathedral, Dallas. There was a good attendance of the clergy, and lay delegates from 12 parishes and three missions. Judge Richard Morgan was elected secretary. The Rev. Bartow B. Rammage read resolutions laudatory of Bishop Garrett, an tion of arrangements for an appropriate celebration of the 25th anniversary of the Bishop's work in this field. On motion of Mr. W. M. Robinson, the resolutions were referred to a committee of five. The Rev. Edwin Wickens was re-elected treasurer of the diocese. The annual address of the Bishop referred to the work of the last General Convention, and spoke of the aggressive forces of materialism and idealism, the latter appearing under "the alluring dress of Christian Science," "a pantheistic virus," which is the dangerous enemy the Church is called upon to confront to-day." He spoke at length, also, upon ministerial character, Christian education, and what he considered the paramount duty of the Church—missions. He said in part:

Nor may the Church wait until all things are made easy. She is sent, as her Lord was, into the "valley of humiliation," to learn how great things she must suffer for "Christ's Name" before she can be privileged to enter into "His joy." Nor may she stay in comfortable quarters until invited to enter a field where a "thousand dollars a year and a house" can be guaranteed, with pleasant climate and agreeable surroundings. No such stipulations are laid down in the original charter. If those who have made this phrase historic at this time would give, out of their large abundance, as God hath given to them, there would be more than sufficient means in the Lord's treasury to divide out to all as every man hath need. There can be no more cruel and suicidal blunder made than to affirm that the Church may be excused from carrying the Gospel ministry to any people until they are prepared to support the ministry, as above described. Had such principles been allowed to rule, the Church would never have extended beyond the walls of Jerusalem; her martyrs would have fed no savage beasts in the arena, her heroes left no bones to bleach in "Greenland's icy mountains," or "India's coral strand," by "Africa's sunny fountains," on the banks of the Canadian lakes, or the swamps of the Mississippi, or the islands of the South sea.

The reports of the various diocesan officers indicated that the diocese was in a most flourishing condition financially, one item, for instance, showing that the Church received over $4,000 annually from endowments.

The Bishop suggested the necessity of taking cognizance of the acts of offending clergymen. This called forth comment by one of the clergymen present who said that he believed it would be a reflection upon the clergy to bring before the council such a question imputing to them, he declared, immoral acts. There were several calls for the question, and the Bishop was sustained. The Rev. Hudson Stuck and others explained that the appointment of a court or committee to try such questions was not intended as a reflection upon any one; but merely to establish the innocence of an innocent party slandered, as well as to establish the guilt of a guilty party. The committee appointed for this purpose was as follows: Messrs. W. S. Simkins and Richard Morgan, of Dallas; John Church, of McKinney; Major J. S. Grinnan, of Terrell, and the chancellor.

At night a service was held in the cathedral, the Rt. Rev. W. Montgomery Brown, of Arkansas, speaking in behalf of the Board of Missions.

Marquette

Gershon Mott Williams, D.D., Bishop

The minister-in-charge of St. Stephen's church, Escanaba, presented 14 for Confirmation before retiring from his engagement.

At St. James', Sault Ste. Marie, the Bishop confirmed 42 on Rogation Sunday, and strongly advised the building of a new church.

Fourteen were confirmed at Epiphany church, Bay Mills, on May 8th. The mission will at once build a rectory, for which money is at hand.

St. Thomas' chapel, Rockland, is being removed to a larger and better plot of ground.

Trinity Church, Houghton

A handsome brass pulpit, as a memorial of Mrs. Courtney Douglas, has been received. The parish has been much stricken by disease and death. The Bishop confirmed nine candidates on Low Sunday.

St. Luke's Church, Dollar Bay

This church was put completely out of debt by an Easter offering of $195. The vestry immediately resolved to go into debt again, and a basement will soon be built. The Bishop confirmed six candidates on the evening of Low Sunday. The rector is taking a brief vacation in lower Michigan, but the church is kept open.

Christ Church, Calumet

A special offering of $500 was given in addition to other collections on Easter, and will put a basement and guild room under the church. The Bishop confirmed 12 candidates on the Monday following Low Sunday.

Grace Church, Menominee

This parish will soon be without a rector. The Rev. Jos. McConnell has resigned, and will take a leave of absence for one year, to visit England and Ireland. The Bishop has recently confirmed 10.

The Bishop's Three Years' Record

The Bishop completed three years in the episcopate on May 1st. He has ordained nine deacons and eight priests, baptized 101 persons, and confirmed 932, delivering 667 sermons and addresses.

The Church in Marquette

Twenty-two were confirmed on Easter at the cathedral. A second mission Sunday school has been established in the city, called St. Timothy's. A beautiful altar rail has been placed in the cathedral, in memory of Frank B. Stone. The old Salvation Army barracks at Newberry have been rented for a chapel. Six have been lately confirmed, presented by the Rev. A. Andrew.

New Jersey

John Scarborough, D.D., Bishop

115th Annual Diocesan Convention

Held in Trinity church, Princeton, May 9th and 10th. At the opening service the Bishop was the celebrant, and the Rev. R. A. Rodrick, the preacher. The Rev. Elvin K. Smith was elected secretary, and the Rev. Herbert Stanley Smith, assistant. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Treasurer, Mr. C. E. Merritt. Delegates to Missionary Council, the Rev. E. J. Knight, Mr. James Parker.

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. Alfred B. Baker, D.D., Charles M. Perkins, H. H. Oberly, and Richard G. Moses; Messrs. Richard S. Conover, J. B. Woodward, Howard Richards, and Edward R. Shubrick. A cordial invitation having been received from President Patton, the convention adjourned to attend a reception held in the university library, and afterwards guided by professors appointed for the purpose, visited the museums and various beautiful buildings.

The Bishop in his 25th annual report deprecated the present divorce laws, urging a law forbidding the remarriage of divorced persons while the husband or wife is still living, and attributed the troubles of the English Church to the power given to Parliament in ecclesiastical matters. On the divorce question he said:

The evil has grown to such proportions that the very foundations of society are being weakened, and marriage is looked upon by many as only a temporary bargain, with no binding force higher than convenience. Some shocking instances of late amongst those who are commonly called the better class of society have shown how very lenient public opinion can be in condoning the sin and shame of those who deliberately set at naught the laws of God and man. I am happy in the belief of an ever increasing number of the clergy and laity of our Church who are determined to close the door against the re-marriage of divorced persons under any and all circumstances. Doubtless there will be cases of real hardship by the enforcement of a law so strict and unyielding, but there seems to me no middle ground—no room for compromise. The public conscience needs to be instructed as to the sanctity of the marriage vow, and our Church should proclaim from the house tops that nothing but death can sunder such a solemn compact, and that no human statute can repeal or annul the law of God. No power on earth can compel any clergyman to sanction such a marriage by his presence, or to give the Church blessing where he feels that God does not bless. Separation may be, and often is, a merciful provision, but remarriage of either man or wife during the life time of the other party, is to me a thing abhorrent.

Resolutions were passed regarding the 25th anniversary of Bishop Scarborough's consecration, and promising a strong effort to complete the $100,000 endowment of the episcopate, this year. The convention very wisely determined to set aside each year a generous sum of money toward defraying the expenses of Deputies to the General Convention in San Francisco, in 1901. The Bishop of Pennsylvania, representing the Board of Missions, made a stirring address, emphasizing the duty of all taking part in the general missionary work of the Church.

The greatest interest of the session was centered in the report of a joint committee from the dioceses of Newark and New Jersey, which had prepared a proposed supplement, in the interest of the Church, to the civil legislation affecting all "religious societies" in the State. A number of the sections provoked warm discussion, especially those relating to the change in date of the annual parish election, and the dividing vestries into three classes, giving either class the power to call meetings in case the others refused. A proposition giving suffrage and right of holding parish offices to women, was defeated.

The next convention will be held the second Tuesday in May, 1900, at St. James' church, Atlantic City.

Montana

Leigh Richmond Brewer, D.D., Bishop

The trustees of the mission at Lewistown have raised about $1,000, and expect to build a chapel this summer.

The Rev. C. E. Dobson resigned the rectorship of St. Mark's, Anaconda, on account of ill health, and the Rev. Alfred Brown was called to fill the vacancy. Mr. Brown has been an earnest and faithful missionary, and his brethren of the clergy are pleased to see this honor awarded him.

Progress at Butte

The new mission at Butte, under the able and earnest ministrations of the Rev. Mr. Bowker, has made splendid progress in the past year. The building has been erected and paid for. A vested choir has been trained and organized, and about 25 confirmed.

Easter Offerings

At the Incarnation, Great Falls, the Rev. E. A. Wasson, Ph. D., rector, the Easter offering was $600, and the parish has gone steadily onward in growth and improvement. At St. Paul's, Fort Benton, the Easter offering was $476. The Sunday school offering for missions, $27.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

By the will of the late Laura A. Morse, Trinity church, Thomaston, comes into possession of what is known as the Sanford Block.

The parish debt of St. Peter's, Plymouth, has lately been diminished by $200. Of this amount, $150 was left, for this purpose, by Mrs. Mason, a faithful communicant recently deceased, and the remainder was given by members of the parish.

A new Estey organ has been purchased by the young people of Christ church, Roxbury, who, under the leadership of the rector's wife, have been working earnestly to raise money for this object.

St. John's, Salisbury

On Easter Even was received a gift of a beautiful baptismal bowl of solid silver. It is six inches and a half in diameter, and is encircled with a wreath of clover leaves, emblem of the Trinity. In the wreath are the words: "One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." It was presented to the parish by Miss Grace Scoville, a member of the family which has done much for the town and parish.

Christ Church, Sharon

At Easter-tide, the young ladies of the Junior

Auxiliary presented a very handsome chalice and paten of sterling silver, in memory of Bishop Williams. A communicant forwarded, from a distance of several hundred miles, a substantial cheque "to go towards the payment of the rector's salary." A young lady of Brooklyn, N. Y., sent a choice set of "fair linen," in memory of her grandmother, lately deceased, a devoted member of this parish; and flowers were sent from far and near, to decorate and make glad the sanctuary. During this year the church has been thoroughly repainted, and has received some needed repairs; a friend and a liberal subscriber to the needs of the parish, who summers in Sharon, but resides in New York city, gave liberally toward the painting.

St. Paul's Church, Woodbury

This delightful old parish, full of historic memories, is growing in financial and spiritual strength, under its present rector, the Rev. L. R. Sheffield. At Easter, the treasurer was able to report that contributions and expenses had a little more than met during the past year. As this removes a debt which had severely burdened the parish, there was great rejoicing. During the year the congregation has shown a steady increase. The mission at Hotchkissville is prospering, as many as 100 sometimes being present at the services.

Berkeley Divinity School

The Rev. William Allen Johnson, professor of Church history at the Berkeley Divinity School for the past quarter of a century, has resigned. His resignation has been accepted, and he has been made professor emeritus. In recording, last week, the resignation of the Rev. John Townsend, as rector of Christ church, South Farms, there was an error in speaking of him as a professor in the Berkeley Divinity School. He has never given any instruction in the school, but is a trustee and one of its alumni. He has been made rector emeritus of Christ church.

Long Island

Abram N. Littlejohn, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

From the Year Book, lately issued, of Christ church, Clinton st., the Rev. A. B. Kinsolving, rector, it is seen that the parish is in a flourishing condition. There are enrolled 790 families and 1,000 communicants; Baptisms the past year have been 81; Confirmations, 54; there are in the Sunday school, 1,200 scholars and teachers. For foreign missions and for missions in the borough of Brooklyn, a total of $7,003.85 was contributed. Besides this, $3,361 was given for charities, and a general total raised of $23,869.71.

Daughters of the King

At the ninth annual meeting of the local assembly, held May 4th, and recorded in our last issue, the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. W. H. Barnes, of College Point; vice-president, Mrs. A. V. Gateson, of Brooklyn; secretary, Miss M. T. Worthington, of Riverhead; treasurer, Miss E. L. Scharfenberg, of Brooklyn.

Church Charity Foundation

In the chapel of St. John's Hospital, on the afternoon of Holy Thursday, the Bishop confirmed a class of 20. Three were adults, and the remainder, children from the Orphans' Home. The graduation exercises of the Order of Trained Nurses followed. The nurses entered the chapel from the door of the women's ward, singing as a processional, "Come, Thou almighty king." A short service was conducted by the Rev. A. C. Bunn who also made a brief address. He was followed by the chief of the medical staff, Dr. Henry A. Fairbairn who, after congratulatory words to the nurses, and a complimentary reference to the zeal and ability of the superintendent of the nurses school, Miss Grace C. Barnhardt, explained the object of the school, and the significance of the diplomas and insignia. The diplomas were presented by the Rev. Dr. Henry C. Swentzel, chairman of the hospital committee, and the badges were bestowed by Miss Barnhardt. In response to a request from Dr. Bunn, the Bishop spoke a few words to the graduates, and gave them his blessing.

The Northern Archdeaconry

Held its regular meeting on the evening of April 25th, in the Hall memorial chapel of the church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. The Rev. S. D. McConnell, archdeacon, presided. There were about 70 clergymen and lay delegates present. The report of the treasurer showed a balance on hand. The financial committee recommended that appropriations be made to St. Timothy's, the Rev. W. I. Stecher in charge; Holy Cross mission; St. Alban's mission, the Rev. Edward Heim in charge, and the church of the Holy Comforter (Schenck Memorial), the Rev. S. R. Bailey, rector. The archdeacon stated that an endowment had been promised for St. Michael's mission, N. Fifth st., if the church and rectory should be devoted to an Italian congregation. A resolution was passed in memory of the late Rev. Dr. Charles R. Baker. Mr. Davison was re-elected treasurer, and the Rev. W. I. Stecher, secretary for the ensuing year.

Offerings at St. Luke's, Brooklyn

On Easter Day, the offering amounted to $5,189.13, the larger part of which was devoted to missionary and charitable works. Among the gifts were a handsome stole, an altar cloth with the inscription, "I am the Bread of Life"; a pulpit antependium, markers for the Bible, and frontals for the credence. All were presented as a memorial of Alice Lydia Gardiner.

Iowa

Theodore Nevil Morrison, D.D., Bishop

On the completion of the fifth year of the rectorate of the Rev. C. W. Tyler, Grace church, Lyons, he was agreeably surprised by the members of the parish, who presented their rector with a gold-headed cane, and his wife with a fine etching, subject, "A Kentish Farm."

Albany

William Croswell Doane, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Confirmation at Saratoga

The Bishop visited Bethseda church, the Ven. Joseph Carey, D.D., LL.D., rector, April 28th, confirmed a class of 63 persons, and preached a scholarly sermon.

Benefit for St. Andrew's, Schroon Lake

A musical and dramatic tea for the benefit of the rectory and parish house was given at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York city, April 18th, under the patronage of the Misses Clarke's sewing class. About $1,000 was realized from the afternoon's entertainment.

Confirmation at Kinderhook

The Bishop visited St. Paul's parish on the morning of May 3d, and confirmed a class, the second presented by the rector within seven months. The rector was the recipient of a fine new surplice from some ladies of the parish.

Archdeaconry of the Susquehanna

The spring meeting was held in St. Matthew's church, Unadilla, May 2nd and 3rd. On the evening of the 2nd, the Rev. J. E. Hall spoke on "The Lord's Day and worship"; the Rev. S. M. Cook, on "The making of a Christian." On Wednesday morning the diocesan missionary was celebrant at the early celebration of the Holy Communion. At 10 A. M., there was a second Celebration, the archdeacon celebrating. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Thomas Boone. At 3 P. M. the clergy assembled in the church to hear reports from the missionaries. At the request of the archdeacon, the diocesan missionary explained the object of the Marvin memorial. The Rev. Dr. Shreve, the Rev. Messrs. J. E. Bold and J. E. Hall paid glowing words of tribute to the life and work of General Marvin. A committee was appointed to further the object of the memorial. The archdeaconry, as a body, contributed $25; the essay was read by the archdeacon, the Ven. R. N. Parke, D. D., subject, "Ecclesiastical autonomy and clerical obedience"; it showed a wide reading and close observation. In the evening, a missionary meeting closed the session.

Massachusetts

William Lawrence, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. Fr. Longridge, in charge of the mission church of St. John the Evangelist, Boston, will shortly sail for Europe. During his absence, the church will be in charge of the Rev. Fr. Osborne.

The Rev. Dr. Cunningham, of Trinity College, Cambridge, Eng., was the preacher at the annual service held in the interest of the Christian Social Union, Sunday evening, April 30th, in St. Stephen's church.

Gifts to the Rev. R. W. Hudgell

A large gathering of parishioners and friends assembled recently at the residence of the rector of St. George's, Maynard, the Rev. R. W. Hudgell, to congratulate him on the anniversary of his birthday, and to present him with a beautiful gold pen with silver and pearl holder, and a silver blotting roll. Refreshments were served by the ladies of St. Hilda's Guild, and the gifts presented by Mr. George Salisbury, on behalf of the Church corporation and others. A very pleasant evening was spent in games of various kinds.

Presentation to Rev. Philo W. Sprague

The 15th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. Philo W. Sprague was observed by his parishioners, Charlestown, on May 9th. After the reception, a purse of $250 was presented to him. Bishop Lawrence was unable to be present, but sent a letter of congratulation.

Confirmation at St. George's, Lee

Bishop Lawrence visited St. George's church, May 7th, and confirmed 16 persons. The rector, the Rev. G. M. Murray, after doing an excellent work, has resigned. He will be succeeded by the Rev. Frank E. Aitkens, assistant at Trinity church, Lenox.

South Carolina

Ellison Capers, D.D., Bishop

During Bishop Capers' April visitations he confirmed 94 persons.

St. David's church, Cheraw, has recently been undergoing repairs, and has been very much beautified. This is one of the oldest parishes in the diocese, being of the venerable age of 150 years.

A bell tower has just been added to the church at Blocksburg, which adds greatly to the appearance of the building.

Easter Day, in the church of the Good Shepherd, Yorkville, the offerings, which amounted to $150.57, were devoted to the Church Building Fund and diocesan missions.

A new organ has recently been placed in St. Matthew's church, Fort Motte, and is said to be a very fine instrument.

At a recent visit to St. Mark's church, Charleston, Bishop Capers confirmed a class of 34 candidates, the largest that has ever been presented in this church.

Annual Diocesan Council

Held in St. David's church, Cheraw. It opened on the evening of May 3d, the Rev. Dr. W. E. Evans, preaching. Thursday, Morning Prayer was said, and a sermon delivered by the Rev. W. B. Gordon. The celebration of the Holy Communion followed, by Bishop Capers, assisted by Bishops Nelson and Cheshire. Thirty-two clerical delegates responded to roll call, but the lay attendance was not large. The Bishop of Georgia delivered an able address on missions. The Rev. Jas. Glass was re-elected secretary; assistant, the Rev. A. E. Cornish. Mr. F. A. Mitchell, of Charleston, was re-elected treasurer; he made the encouraging report that he had collected more money during this year than at any time in the history of the diocese. The Rev. Mr. Johnson preached at night, and Bishop Capers confirmed a large class. The Bishop's annual address gave an interesting sketch of St. David's church. In reference to the division of the diocese, he said he was willing to do all the work, and that it would be best to wait. The Bishop's address showed 2 clergymen deceased, 2 transferred, and 3 received; 4 priests and 4 deacons added by ordination; 12 candidates for Holy Orders, and 2 postulants; 428 confirmed.

The committee appointed to report on the advisability of making St. Mary's School at Raleigh the diocesan school for girls, reported favorably. Bishop Cheshire recommended this step, and pointed out the advantages of the plan. After discussion, the council accepted the report, and St. Mary's School is now the diocesan school for girls of the two Carolinas.

The reports of the Board of Missions, and of the archdeacon of the work among colored people, gave an encouraging view of work in both fields. After a discussion as to certain diocesan funds, a resolution was adopted—"that a committee of two clergymen and two laymen from each missionary district be appointed to consider the advisability and feasibility of dividing the diocese; and, if they deem best, to bring in a scheme for such division, reporting to the council of 1900." The report of the treasurer of the Board of Missions, showed a collection of $5,657.09.

The committee on finance recommended a scheme for raising diocesan funds, by an assessment on parochial incomes. The committee on constitution and canons made a favorable report upon a resolution referred to them to strike out the word "Male" from the canon concerning parish elections, which, wanting one vote of a majority of two thirds, awaits the action of the next council.

A resolution was passed authorizing the Bishop to employ a secretary.

The election of Standing Committee: The Rev. Drs. A. T. Porter, John Johnson, W. E. Evaas, the Rev. Messrs. John Kershaw and W. B. Gordon; Messrs. F. L. Frost, H. P. Archer, J. P. Thomas, Jr., R. I. Manning, and W. H. Parker. The Rev. E. N. Joyner and Mr. S. T. Poiner were elected delegates to the Missionary Council. The next council will meet at Aiken in 1900.

Washington

Henry Yates Satterlee, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The Churchman's League

The fifth anniversary took place at the Epiphany parish rooms, on the evening of May 9th. The annual report of the executive committee reviewed the work of the past year, special mention being made of that in connection with the General Convention, the Jamestown pilgrimage, and the unveiling of the Peace Cross. The regular meetings have been well attended, and there has been an increase of 70 in the membership. The League was organized in May, 1894, with 127 members; it now has 380. Many of its members have performed honorable service during the Spanish war; amongst them Captain Chadwick, of the "New York," and Captain Lamberton, Admiral Dewey's chief of staff. The executive committee reported a resolution approving the Bishop's proposal that the League should assist in securing from the country at large the remainder of the funds needed in payment of the cathedral site. This was adopted, and a committee of 20 appointed to take charge of the matter. Bishop Paret, of Maryland, made a brief address, referring in feeling terms to old memories, and his connection with the League in its early days. He was followed by Mr. Norris, of Baltimore, who spoke for the Church Club of that city. The assembly was then hospitably entertained at supper; 170 men were present. The officers elected were as follows: President, Lewis J. Davis; vice-presidents, James Lowndes, M. T. Endicott, William B. Orme; secretary, Edward F. Looker; treasurer, Wm. P. Young, and an executive committee of three clergymen and three laymen.

Fourth Annual Diocesan Convention

Assembled in Trinity church, May 10th. The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion, and the Rev. Dr. McKim preached the sermon. The convention organized for business in the commodious parish hall. The Bishop delivered an address, reviewing the work of the diocese during the past year. In concluding, he spoke strongly against the sin of covetousness, that "nineteenth century idolatry," now so widespread and apparent in the all-absorbing passion for money-getting.

In our boasted progress may be found startling signs of decay. In the last presidential election the banners were not inscribed, "God and our country," as in days of old, but on them were the words, "Silver and gold." The one ruling passion that blots out worship of God, love of family, every noble impulse, is the greed for money. It is true that the late war roused a better spirit, and "Humanity, the Brotherhood of man," was written on our banners, and the men who carried them did not question the cost; "the spirit of '76" was again strong. But now that the war is over, the spirit of covetousness is once more predominant, and history tells us that on the nation that worships Mammon will surely come the awful judgment of God.

The Rev. A. S. Johns was re-elected secretary, Mr. Seymour Tulloch, treasurer.

The evening session was devoted to the subject of missionary work. The report of the committee of missions was read, and the resolution appended, appropriating $5,500 to be apportioned among the parishes of the diocese, was passed. Brief addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Boyden and La Roche, and the Rev. O. M. Waller spoke of the needs of the work for the colored people.

Standing Committee elected: The Rev. Drs. J. H. Elliott and R. H. McKim, the Rev. Messrs. Alfred Harding and J. McChesley; Messrs. Charles Stanley, A. S. Brown, and J. Holdsworth Gordon.

The parish at Brookland, D. C., was admitted into union with the convention.

The Rev. Dr. McKim, chairman of the committee on canons, reported alterations in the canons for the trial of a clergyman, which led to the most important debate of the session. Dr. McKim explained the principles embodied in the new canons. These are chiefly the introduction of laymen into the ecclesiastical court, when the accused clergyman so prefers, and the establishment of an appellate court, to be composed of the Bishop and the Standing Committee, the accused having the right to challenge one member. The Rev. Dr. Elliott opposed the changes proposed, and Gen. Wilmer offered a number of amendments, some of which were accepted by the committee and others were voted down. Finally the Bishop called Dr. Elliott to the chair, and said he had desired the convention to consider this question without reference to his preferences which had been expressed to no one, but he would now call attention to points in which the new canons would work injustice to the Bishop. These were the provision that he should appoint three persons to investigate charges in the first instance, instead of the old method by the Standing Committee; the loss of the power given by the old canons to review the findings of the court, and the fact that by an amendment adopted, the Bishop was not to be a member of the court of appeals. He spoke of ecclesiastical trials in general, and the evils arising from them, but declared himself ready to bear any responsibility rightly belonging to him. The whole speech was so straightforward, so true and brave, that the convention broke into applause, and there was an earnest desire apparent to meet the Bishop's views. Motions to re-commit and postpone were lost, and amendments passed that the convention should elect three presenters to investigate charges, restoring the right of the Bishop to pass upon verdicts, and making him a member of the appellate court in case of a trial for heresy. Under the provisions of the canons as adopted, the ecclesiastical court elected consists of the Rev. Dr. A. R. Stuart, the Rev. Messrs. C. E. Buck, Sontag, Poindexter, and Mayo; Mr. Blair Lee, and Gen. Wilmer. After some routine business, and the usual resolutions, the convention, with a brief closing service in the church, adjourned sine die.

Editorials and Contributions

Bishop Potter's Letter

DR. BRIGGS was ordained to the priesthood, on Sunday, at the Pro-cathedral, New York, by Bishop Potter. No public protest was made. All had been done before that could be done with dignity or effect. The only reply, so far as has transpired, which the Bishop saw fit to make to the protesting clergymen, was the announcement that the ordination would take place. A protest presented at the service itself would plainly have been of no effect. It appears, however, that the Bishop paid somewhat more regard to the expostulations of an influential layman, and a letter has now been given to the press which contains the Bishop's defence of his own action in the matter.

THIS letter contains two points: First, the Bishop argues that he had no option in the matter, but that the Standing Committee having recommended the candidate, he was obliged to ordain him, since the canons of ordination declare that the bishop "shall," not "may," then proceed to take order for the ordination of the person who has met the preliminary tests in the premises. It would really seem as if this must have been written hastily, and without due reflection. The fact is, the Standing Committee can recommend no one unless he presents a certificate from the Bishop. During the last week, the members of the New York Standing Committee are reported to have defended their action on the ground that it was pro forma; the proper papers being before them, they had no option but to recommend the candidate. This is an interesting position of affairs. Nobody seems to have any responsibility in the matter, if we are to accept these explanations. Both Bishop and Standing Committee become mere automatons going solemnly through with a system of red-tape processes. Credat Judeus!

THE Bishop draws attention to the word "shall" in the canons, as leaving him no choice in the matter. It is true that word occurs in Title I, Canon 7: x, "Of Ordination to the Diaconate," but it is coupled with other conditions than the presentation of certain certificates. The words added are as follows: "and there being no known objection to the ordination of the candidate, on grounds physical, intellectual, or moral." Even if the word "shall" were mandatory, this leaves the Bishop sufficiently wide discretion. But the surprising feature of the matter is the fact that in connection with the provisions for ordination to the priesthood, the word "shall" does not occur. This would seem to render nugatory the entire argument based upon that word in the present instance.

THE second part of the Bishop's letter is more courageous. In it he expresses his willingness to bear the responsibility of this ordination. His ground is that Dr. Briggs' works have been commended by competent scholars in and out of the Church, who have failed to find in them anything of an heretical or dangerous tendency. The Bishop therefore thinks that the opposition to Dr. Briggs is partly owing to the want of a "larger knowledge." We have dealt with some aspects of this subject elsewhere. There is a wide margin between the admission, if it can be justly made, that a man's utterances possibly bear an orthodox explanation, and the deliberate sanction which approves the author of them as an accredited teacher and preacher of the truth.

Ordination of Dr. Briggs

THE protest of the Rev. Dr. Clendenin against the use of his church for the ordination of Dr. Briggs to the priesthood, and the subsequent protest of Dr. De Costa, have aroused an intense feeling throughout the Church. At the bottom of this feeling is the conviction that this ordination is one of the steps by which the Church is being corrupted, her formularies stripped of definite meaning, and her character transformed. Here, it is thought, we begin to see what is the meaning of that "ideal Church," or "Church of the future," to which some of our leaders wish to conduct us. It is significant that certain of these gentlemen have been prominent in the defence of this ordination.

EVERYONE knows something of the history of Dr. Briggs, and of his exclusion from the Presbyterian ministry. Of course it was evident that his break with the Presbyterian symbols did not of itself imply a break with those of the Church; nevertheless, persons familiar with the facts of his case, and with his published utterances, could not but view with serious misgivings his ordination to the diaconate. It did not appear that he would ever have thought of taking refuge in the Episcopal Church but for his deposition from the Presbyterian ministry. This in itself was calculated to inspire a reasonable doubt whether the acquisition was one to be proud of, or whether it was calculated to be for the best good of the Church. Many of the clergy have learned to their cost that a parish built up of the discontented from the denominations around, or of those who have fallen under the censure of the religious societies with which they have been connected, is by no means a desirable field of work. But in the face of such experiences, we are witnessing an attempt to provide by formal legislation for the building up of congregations composed of such elements, offering even to set aside the Prayer Book itself, as an inducement to dissatisfied people of other communions to put themselves nominally under the supervision of our bishops. This is called by the specious name of Christian Unity, though probably no scheme could be better calculated to repel the best element in such communions, and to awaken their hostility and contempt.

THOSE who were inclined to be most lenient in their judgments admitted that Dr. Briggs was given, in his published works, to rash and extravagant statements. To most people, his work appeared in not a few places to involve, implicitly if not explicitly, the rejection of some parts of the Catholic Creed. If these instances are capable of explanation, it remains true that a writer who so expresses himself as commonly to be misunderstood, is not a safe teacher. At present, the defenders of Dr. Briggs are loudly insisting that he is being attacked because of his devotion to the Higher Criticism. The Church, it is said, must not suppress "truth seeking," she must not endeavor to "stunt the powers of man's intellect," "hamper the progress of research," and "carry us off from the pathway of truth to the byways of obscurity and prejudice." This language, recently used in this controversy, is sufficiently familiar, though it has not been usual to hear it from the lips of defenders of the Faith. It is the language of "Free-thought" and of the so-called "Liberal Christians," especially in Unitarian circles.

IT is time to draw attention to the fact that the Church has no quarrel with those who make it their work to inquire into the literary characteristics of the sacred writers, or questions of history, date, and authorship. But she holds that the books which are designated as canonical are the work of "holy men of God who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." She will not accept conclusions which are inconsistent with this position. When men, whether they be critics or other scholars, become convinced that the Church is in error in this fundamental matter, they have no more place in her, and certainly it is hard to understand why any such should desire to occupy the position of authorized teachers in a body which stands for what they deny. Furthermore, the Church has a dogmatic Faith. It asserts certain things as true, such as the Incarnation, the Virgin Birth, the Death of Christ for our sins, His Resurrection, and also the general resurrection of the body or the "flesh." In a word, the Church exists for the very purpose of asserting a supernatural religion, specially revealed. She does not admit that in these matters she is "seeking the truth." Within her fold these things must be accepted. Her scholars are "hampered," if any one chooses to use that expression, to this extent. They must have accepted these things as true, and they must carry on their researches in view of them. They are as distinctly settled for the Church as the Copernican system is settled among astronomers.

IT is an exploded idea among men of thought that it is possible to pursue even purely scientific or philosophical investigations without assumptions. Most of all is this impossible where religion is concerned. Those who continue to make the claim that they are able to do this are either disingenuous or shallow. We need not lay ourselves open here to the charge of imputing injurious motives, from a narrow conservative standpoint. Long ago, David Strauss, author of the celebrated "Life of Jesus," used very frank language on this point. "One often meets," he says, "in the writings of free-thinking theologians, the assurance that their researches rest on a purely historical interest. For my part, with all respect to the word of these gentlemen, I regard what they say as a thing impossible; and even if it were true, I could not regard it as worthy of praise. He who writes on the monarchs of Nineveh, or on the Egyptian Pharaohs, may indeed obey the purely historical interest. But Christianity is so living a force, and the question, what have been its origins? contains in it such decisive consequences for the present, that one would have to regard as struck with stupidity the investigator who only brought to the study of this question an historical interest." He then calls upon these scholars to acknowledge with him that their mission is "to deliver the human mind from the spiritual yoke which has hitherto oppressed it." That yoke is unquestionably the belief in the supernatural.

IT is not then a question of absolutely free investigation, and investigation "hampered" by the bonds of antecedent presumptions, as the shallow declamation from which we have quoted some expressions, would lead the unwary to imagine. The real conflict is between two opposing sets of presumptions. The line of demarcation is the question of the supernatural, especially in the form of miracle and of revelation. On the one side are those who approach the subject not with open minds, but with the settled conviction that miracles are impossible. In other words, they deny the supernatural, or reduce it to the natural. On the other side are those who are convinced of the truth of the supernatural and of the necessity of a supernatural religion. It is manifest that these assumptions, or antecedent convictions, on the one hand or on the other, will affect in the most fundamental way both the method of investigation and the conclusions which are reached. Those, for instance, who reject the supernatural, are forced to reject as legendary or fictitious every narrative which contains a miraculous element, or at any rate, like the old or "common-sense" rationalists, explain it away. It may not always be easy to classify individual writers.

THERE are those who, while they pursue the anti-supernaturalist methods, would, through some curious inconsistency or vacillation, have us suppose that they are, nevertheless, believers in a supernatural religion. And, such is the peculiarity of the human mind, it would not be fair to say that they are not sincere. It is not given to everyone to see the plain logic of his position. This happy obliquity of mental vision may save his own soul, but others will see what he cannot. A startling significance is given to Dr. Briggs' ordination to the priesthood, when it is said by readers of abundant learning and familiarity with such subjects, that his position, if they could accept it, would lead them to give up the Christian religion. It means that one whose teachings are considered by men well qualified to judge, as having the tendency to make Christianity of no worth, is installed in the pulpits of the Church as an authorized teacher. So far as the act of the authorities of a single diocese can go, the sanction of the Church is given to his utterances, however rash and dangerous they may be, and however perilous to human souls. A grave responsibility has been incurred, and the end is not yet. This ordination is an ominous portent and the more so, if, as there is reason to fear, it is the first of a series including some who have given utterance to more extreme and destructive views than Dr. Briggs himself. The same pleas may be made for them. We may be again told that they are "truth seekers," that we must not "stunt the powers of man's intellect" or "hamper the progress of research." All this would apply to the men to whom we refer, as it would have applied in the past to Strauss, Baur, or Renan.

Father Austin and His Teachings--XIX.

ON Whitsunday, Father Austin was asked to explain the collect where it says: "Grant us by the same Spirit to have a right judgment in all things."

To which he replied that the word judgment may refer to the action of the mind in judging things, or to the result of such action. As an operation of the mind, it ascertains values, it goes to the heart of things, sees their nature and relations, and discriminates between the true and the false, the wise and the unwise. The resultant action is the expression of an opinion and conformity to the same. A right judgment is the best of gifts from the best of givers, because it discriminates in favor of that which is right.

It is evident that when the mind reaches a right judgment, it has ascertained the preference of God, and that when we do what He prefers, we do His will, which is the very substance of religion.

Therefore, in order to have the right judgment in all things, we must look within them to find what is God's preference or judgment or will, and then make that our own.

We are instructed to regard this right judgment as a gift of the Spirit, and by this we must understand that the Spirit gives us a certain readiness of mind to discern what is the will of God. It is, therefore, our duty to pray for the help of the Spirit, which is specially our need, lest trusting too fondly in our own power to discriminate, we fall into manifold errors, and become like ships without rudders, borne about by every wind and current of self-will.

To discern God's will is sometimes easy, but sometimes very difficult. Who has not felt himself driven almost to despair by not knowing in what direction the path of duty led? With reference to things uncertain in which it seems to be hard to determine what is the will of God, the very first resolve of wisdom should be to postpone for a time the formation of a definite judgment. Doubtful cases are not always pressing cases. A little time is the solvent of many perplexities, and the hidden path, if you only wait for a day or two, will reveal itself. But if postponement be impracticable, by reason of immediate necessity of decision, then must we importunately appeal to the Holy Spirit, implore His guidance, submit implicitly to His inspirations, and then do what seems to be best, what we think our Lord Jesus Christ would do in similar straits. One reason why difficult cases are permitted to tax our judgment is that we may lay our helpless ignorance at the feet of the Wise, and plead with strong crying and tears for guidance—a blessed form of oblation most pleasing to God. A humble and honest heart will thus rise above difficulties, if not absolutely above mistakes; for should there still be some variation of judgment from the way of the will of God, He will overrule the mistakes of such a heart and convert them into blessings.

When the lectures on Confirmation were given that year, Father Austin presented the subject of a right judgment in all things in another way.

He said such a judgment was at the very root of the Seven Gifts of the Holy Spirit given in the Sacrament, and he urged his young people to make constant prayers for the same, beseeching Him:

—That by the gift of counsel He would be to them the good Friend ever near at hand to whom they might apply for wise direction and holy prudence.

—That by the gift of wisdom He would supply all their deficiencies, and give them minds finely balanced and discriminating.

—That by the gift of understanding He would enable them to know that the Judge of the earth can never err in wisdom or goodness, and to rest with implicit faith in Him when His providence is veiled in clouds of mystery.

—That by the gift of ghostly strength He would supplement their weakness, inform their ignorance, prevent their deviations, and teach them to lean heavenward in their uncertainties.

—That by the gift of knowledge He would be their Teacher, leading them into all the truth of the Church's Faith, keeping them true to the letter and spirit of the same, enabling them to detect error, and hate it, and bestowing daily increase in the knowledge and love of God.

—That by the gift of true godliness He would inspire them with aspiration for His highest graces, with burning thirst for conformity to Christ's precepts and example, and with the habit of daily self-surrender into the keeping hands of His love.

—That by the gift of His holy fear He would establish, maintain, and increase in them somewhat of that spirit of praise and adoration which pervades the high courts of the heavenly temple.

When those dear young people were confirmed, the prayer which the bishop offered for them immediately preceding the laying on of hands, was not a meaningless mass of words to their minds. They knew what God heard, and what He was asked to give them.

Work and Support for the Clergy

FROM BISHOP THOMPSON'S CONVENTION ADDRESS

YOU will have seen discussions awakened by an experiment tried by one of our prominent rectors, upon the relations of clergymen to Church work, as such relations actually exist. This gentleman wrote a circular letter to many, perhaps to all the bishops, asking each if he had a place for a clergyman, a good reader, preacher, pastor, and the rest, with a family, giving at least $1,000 per year and a house.

I, among others, received the letter, and replied, I believe, in the negative, as to this case. Almost all the bishops replied in the negative, or virtually so, and the writer of the circular letter published his experiment and its result.

The matter attracted considerable attention, and a number of expressions of opinion were published. The conclusion drawn by the writer of the circular, that already there are more clergymen than are needed, and that every clergyman must make his own place, was denied, and sometimes with heat.

I am glad the matter has come up because I think it will clear the atmosphere, and bring out some realities to which we are apt to be blind. I am in receipt, frequently, of letters like the circular mentioned, and it is not possible to reply to them for several reasons.

The bishop has not the appointment to any parish. He has virtually not even the appointment to any mission. Patronage, in the American Church, is in the hands, at least, of those who hold the purse-strings. In such condition, even if it were offered him, a bishop would be very foolish to undertake appointments, for he has no power, in any case, to hold either minister or people to the appointment made.

I could say, truthfully, that there are now four fields (not parishes) in Mississippi, where I could assure a man $1,000 and a house, with certainty that the pledge would be redeemed. But how can I assure this to the Rev. John Smith? I could assure it to the Rev. James Jones, let us say; in other words, it all depends upon the man himself. No bishop can long exercise his office without discovering that. There are clergymen to whom he can assure nothing. There are those to whom he can safely assure much. I shall not discuss the matter, but assert the fact, that his officialism, in the American Church, counts for little to a clergyman, whether he be deacon, priest, or bishop. He stands upon his personality—mind, I do not say his "popularity," in the vulgar sense of that wretched word, but on his own force of character in leading and controlling. The Church is not an organization which assures a place and a living to a man as soon as he is ordained. His ordination gives him the right to work in the Church, with all her influences round him and behind him, if he is capable of doing work. The whole land is before him, where to choose, from Maine to Texas, from New York to Alaska; but if he cannot do his work, if he cannot find his place, there is no power can help him. Bishops and others may be tolerant, patient, for a while, hoping for the best, but the end is inevitable—all depends on the man himself.

So, while I do not accept one of the conclusions of the distinguished clergyman who sent the circular, namely, that there are too many clergymen for the needs of the Church, I do fully accept the other, and, indeed, discussed it in print many years ago myself; namely, that in a practically unorganized Church, like ours, every man must make his own place; that at his ordination the Church does not assure him either of work or a living, but simply turns him loose, with all the prestige and support his clerical character gives him, to work wherever he finds a field for work, with what gifts and graces God and his own efforts have endowed him, to make his own place and succeed or fail.

For ordination does not exempt a man from the common laws of life. It does not make an ignorant man learned, nor a foolish man wise, nor a lazy man industrious, nor a boor a gentleman. The laws of success in any calling in life are the laws which, in the main, are upon the clergyman, and certainly, no man can help him who will not help himself.

Upon the whole, it is an advantage to have these conditions brought plainly out. Wise men will not quarrel with them, and those applying for orders should understand them clearly.

There is room in every diocese and missionary jurisdiction in the land for many more clergymen. But they must be men who can do the work, and are not mainly anxious to secure $1,000 a year and a house.

The work in the Church in the United States, so far, has been done by those who had the enthusiasm of the ministerial calling, to say the least. Our most distinguished clergymen, most of our bishops, I think, worked for a while, at least, on far less than the provision named. Indeed, that provision is far beyond the average of what the future leaders of the Church, in its priests and bishops, are securing now. It is a misfortune for a man to begin his ministry handicapped by the necessity for a certain considerable income, as it would be for a beginning physician or a beginning lawyer. It is not where he begins, but where he ends, that tells the story of successful work done, and the man ten years in the ministry ought to have gotten out of the way, leaving standing ground on the lower branches for the young men coming on. To encourage us, it is well to consider that no wonderful gifts, no rare endowments, are at all necessary to a successful ministry. Those who have made disastrous or pitiful failures have been as highly endowed as those who have made success.

Eloquence is a good thing. But some men whose whole ministry has been strikingly blessed, were very dull preachers. Learning is a good thing, but wonderful work has been done, and is doing, by men who do not know a Hebrew letter, and cannot translate a verse of the Greek Testament.

Some men have worked parishes to a height of distinction by strength of brain, some by strength of heart, and I have known it done by strength of legs, though it is on record that the Lord delighteth not in them. Indeed, it is hard to tell why one succeeds and another fails, and no wise man judges rashly or makes rash criticisms. One can only tell by results. But, evidently, where there are no results, no matter what gifts may be possessed, there is something radically unfit. And here it occurs to me to say a serious word to the laity. It is not uncommon to send a committee to hear a clergyman, or invite him to come to a vacant parish and preach as a candidate (which no self-respecting clergyman will do) under the supposition that the man can be rightly judged by one interview, or by one or two sermons. There can be no graver mistake, and congregations which fall into it deserve what ills, often serious, befall them. Again, hasty likes and dislikes are evidence of a childish mind. When the minister comes, wait at least for time sufficient to form a judgment.

I remember a case where a clergyman, dead now, whose life was one of long mark and distinction, was called to a parish and completely disappointed the people his first Sunday. Conscious of it, he offered his resignation on Monday, and the vestry would have accepted it but for shame. He remained the distinguished, beloved, and cherished rector for a score of years.

Some one must furnish the motive power to drive forward a parish or mission and make the work grow. In our work here it is the plain state of the case that the minister is expected to do this. If he has not force or fire of some kind to do it he is usually a failure. It is to be expected. The clergyman who among us looks to find a nice arrangement for his comfort in which he is to sit quietly and be wheeled along by others, will be grievously disappointed, and when I am written to for such places, I suppose, like other bishops, I waste no time in correspondence.

It is just the fact that in dioceses like this, a man must make his own place. The opportunity can be given him, and that is all. But was not this just the condition in the apostolic days?

Clergy Relief Fund

BY THE REV. THEO. I. HOLCOMBE

THE annual conventions of nearly all the dioceses are at hand. The report of the last General Convention will show that the subject of General Clergy Relief was referred to the several dioceses for consideration. It is certainly time the clergy of the dioceses should bestir themselves in this matter, and ascertain just what relations exist between this fund and the diocese. Let some interested member of the convention, at the proper time, call upon the bishop for a statement as to how many beneficiaries of this General Clergy Relief Fund there are in the diocese; how many old clergy are assisted, how many widows and orphans in that diocese, and what the sum total for the last three years received.

Every delegate has a perfect right to ask such questions, and I think the bishop will gladly afford the information desired. Then it might be well to appoint a secretary or agent who should report at each annual convention all contributions to this fund from parishes and individuals, as well as the total amount received by beneficiaries. Will not the conventions take up this matter, in order that the clergy and laity may know how much they are, as a diocese, indebted to this fund?

We have heard from the report made to the last General Convention just how many dioceses and missionary districts were assisted in the three years from 1895 to 1898. In 64 dioceses and missionary districts there were 80 clergymen and 202 widows and orphans of clergymen helped, but not one of these got more than the pittance of $100. "So far as we know, this is the best record that this fund has ever made," vide report. Is there the "ghost of a reason" why the report of what a diocese has received, as a beneficiary of this fund, should not be "read out in the meeting"? Why some lover of his kind should not demand to know how large an obligation his diocese is under to this fund? Ought not indeed such information to go upon the records of the diocese? Why accept and not confess? why receive and not respond? Is it just or generous to ignore benefits? Suppose that all the dioceses should call for such report of indebtedness, and that every clergyman should himself contribute one dollar a year to this fund as a personal matter, what a long step forward, and in the right direction, it would be. What an example to the laity! If we of the clergy will permit ourselves to be interested a little in our own matters, perchance some one of our many multi-millionaires might open his eyes upon the scene of our desolation, and go down into his pockets below the nickels and dimes, to help the old and infirm of the clergy, the widows and orphans of the clergy; but can we expect such a wonder as this, while we decline to add our own mite, our single dollar? It is my belief that all are willing, but no one desires to be alone in this matter; but the only way to avoid the loneliness is to bestir ourselves for organization of the fund in the annual convention. I am not an official, neither secretary nor agent, of this fund. I am only a lover of a noble cause, and one who earnestly desires to help lift the sore burden of poverty which now crushes into the earth so many of our worthy priests and their often helpless widows and orphans.

From under the altar their souls cry out "How long, O Lord! how long!" May we not have with the dogs the crumbs which fall from the Master's table. Why will not Thy priests tithe the offering of the faithful, that we may share of the children's bread?"

The Church provides every year from this one source, viz., the altar alms, over $400,000. Is it an exaggeration to say that $30,000 of this sum at least, belong to the old and poor of the ministry, and should find its way through willing and generous hands into the Fund for General Clergy Relief?

Building of Character

I WOULD not deprive any of the lawful pleasures which men and women seek to enjoy in the hours of freedom from close and confining work. But the spirit which always places pleasure first cannot but be deprecated, for its only outcome is to narrow and dwarf spiritual and moral life. The spirit which allows nothing to interfere with amusements and permits anything to stand in the way of profitable lectures, Bible classes, and efforts toward moral improvement—no words of condemnation can be too strong for this.

Let us one and all be governed by the spirit of reason and judgment in this matter, striving to give everything its due weight and proper place, and above all else not forget the first great work of the Christian Church, the strengthening and upbuilding of character. "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil, and having done all to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast plate of righteousness," etc.

Let it be your resolution to-day that for the coming year you will be found among those who are working for the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom among men; that you will not be content to stand simply as an idle recipient of God's blessings, but an active agent in the great work of His Church. Build yourselves with all the means of grace that are so freely offered, and you will build the parish until it becomes, with others, one of the fair spots for the Master's presence, one of the havens of refuge for the flock of the Good Shepherd.—Rev. C. G. Bristol's Anniversary Sermon.

GROWTH OF THE CHURCH

To the Editor of The Living Church:

As supplementary to the article on the "Growth of the Church," which appeared in the issue of your paper, of May 13, 1899, page 38, I will add that in 1868, the Episcopal Church had in the United States, 2,472 parishes and missions, and that these had grown to be in 1898, 6,295, or more than two-and-a-half times as many. Again, the increase in that period was 3,823 parishes and missions, or a little more than one new organization for every three days during the thirty years. Besides this great growth in organizations, their average strength in communicants also rose considerably during that time, for in 1868 the 2,472 organizations had 194,692 which was an average of 78 to each, and in 1898, the 6,295 organizations had 679,604 communicants, an average of 108 to each. L.

THE ENVELOPE SYSTEM

To the Editor of The Living Church:

A writer seems to have found out a method by which the harm, as he thinks, caused by the envelope system, in keeping the people from making voluntary offerings, can be removed.

It is folly to hold there is any virtue in any system in itself. There can be no life in it. It is a business enterprise in the Church, and as far as my knowledge extends in the use of it, is a success. I do not find that it militates against making voluntary offerings.

The envelope system is a constant reminder every Lord's Day, of the pledge that has been made. It is not consistent with hap-hazard methods of making money for the Church, which are indeed of doubtful propriety. A little thought will show that it is scriptural. It will necessitate the giving a certain portion of one's possessions to the Lord. It undoubtedly will develop the spirit of giving as it addresses itself to the ability of all, however small.

It makes insignificant the giving of small amounts which are not commensurate with the ability of those contributing. I have never met with any opposition from those of moderate means, when wishing to introduce it; but almost invariably from those who have much of this world's goods, and who have on hand a good deal of that vice known as covetousness. It has increased the contributions of the parish that uses it. It is the stepping-stone to the highest and most devout way, which is the offertory; which is acting upon the belief that all things come of God, and that we are giving of His. But this condition cannot be hoped for, except when people are more filled with the Holy Spirit.

Obituary

IN MEMORIAM CHARLES M. HIGGINSON

WHEREAS, it has pleased Almighty God, the Giver of life and of every perfect gift, to give "the peace which passeth all understanding" to our friend and fellow-servant, Charles M. Higginson, whom He has called away from the cares, the labors, and the responsibilities of earth to that better land "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest;" therefore it is fitting that we, his friends, his neighbors and fellow members of St. Paul's parish, Riverside, give expression to our sense of loss in parting from one who for sixteen years has been a consistent member of this Church, and communicant at its chancel rail. Consistent in his daily life, he has gone in and out among us, an example of earnest, honest, Christian manhood. True to his convictions of duty and of obligation to life's highest standards, he was like Nathaniel of old, without guile and without hypocrisy. His eminent fitness and ability placed him in the fore-front of the world's workers, and he laid down life's burden at a time when the temporal rewards of faithful service were within his grasp.

While we feel our own loss in the sundered ties of friendship, and while sorrowing for ourselves because he is taken from us, we recognize with tender condolence that deeper sorrow which has come to the family which he has cherished and brought up, and as individuals and as a parish we offer them the truest sympathy of our hearts, and we commend them to the mercies of Him whose ear is ever open to the widow's cry, and whose promise is to be a father to the fatherless.

Resolved: That a copy of the sentiments of this meeting be transmitted to the family of our departed friend; that they be spread upon the records of the parish, and published in THE LIVING CHURCH.

Died

MORROW.—On Sunday after Ascension, early in the morning, Elizabeth, wife of William Bryce Morrow, rector of St. James', Bristol, Pa., and daughter of the late Captain Robert Wright, of the British Army.

Remember in Thy kingdom, O Christ, her work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope in Thee.

Appeals

(Legal title [for use in making wills]: THE DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.)

Domestic missions in seventeen missionary districts and forty-one home dioceses: missions among the colored people; missions among the Indians; foreign missions in China, Japan, Africa, Greece, and Haiti; support of the clergyman of this Church appointed to counsel and guide the presbyters and readers in Mexico.

Provision must be made for the salaries and traveling expenses of twenty-four bishops, and stipends of 1,700 missionary workers, besides the support of schools, orphanages, and hospitals. Contributions are, moreover, asked specifically for the salaries of workers and support of schools in Mexico. One thousand dollars per month is the estimate of such expenses.

Remittances should be made to MR. GEORGE C. THOMAS, treasurer, 281 Fourth ave., New York. At present, please address communications to the REV. JOSHUA KIMBER, associate secretary.

ONE of the problems which the news editor of a Church journal has to solve at this season, is how to make a pint measure hold a quart. During May and June forty-five diocesan conventions are held, and some space must be given to every one. For some of them, considerable space is required. The season is also one of great activity in all Church lines, preparatory to the quiet time of the summer when little aggressive work is done. In the space ordinarily devoted to Church news (and THE LIVING CHURCH gives more space to that than any other Church paper) it is quite impossible to print in full the reports which are sent in at this season. They must be cut down and condensed, even when they are interesting and well written. Only the points of general interest and helpful suggestion, as a rule, can be given. By this condensation the reader really gains in the saving of his time, though the one who sends the news may sometimes be displeased. The only reply we can make to complaints on this score is that we cannot help it. The editor must decide what is practicable, and what will best serve the interests of the paper and its readers.

THE Bishop of Maryland has had a rather unusual experience. A short time ago he received a letter from England, the writer of which said that he was a stockholder in a certain railroad which traverses a large part of the State of Maryland. He proceeds: "It has struck me that I have never done anything for the spiritual welfare of the district from which a portion of my income has been for some time derived. Property, I hold it, has its responsibilities corresponding to its advantages, and perhaps one of the evils of the present day which needs as much correcting as any other, is that these great financial corporations have no (so to speak) corporate conscience. The stockholders and bondholders simply want their dividends, and don't trouble themselves about the souls of the numerous servants, who, in different capacities, help to earn the above. To make some small amends in my own case, I am venturing to send you a postal order which I want you to apply in any way you judge best for the spiritual welfare of the diocese intrusted to your charge."

Pen-and-Ink-lings

NEW ZEALAND has adopted a system of old-age pensions. A pension of seven shillings a week is to be given to every person above the age of sixty-five years, provided he or she has lived in the colony for twenty-five years, and is able to pass a certain test in regard to sobriety and good conduct.

ONCE upon a time an American taunted an Englishman: "How can you endure to be taxed to support your idle nobility?" exclaimed the American, warmly. Then the American paid $10 a ton for his coal in order that the directors of the trust might procure dukes and things for sons-in-law. This fable teaches that there are almost as many ways of paying taxes as of dodging the same.—The Journal, Detroit.

THE International devotes a paragraph or two to the cleft infinitive, for which it has "no use." It says: "Cleft infinitive: a locution formed by the placing of an adverb between the words which form the infinitive mood, thus: 'He has no right to even read it'; 'It being impossible for me to personally call'; 'Ask him to kindly look up this matter,' etc. When, how, and why this corruption first made its appearance we do not know. But it has taken such a hold upon the newspaper space writers that scarcely a paragraph now appears in print without one or more examples of it. An uglier or more aimless innovation was never introduced into the language of cultivated people. And yet so insinuating is this faulty construction, that even the most particular and precise writers and speakers are continually finding themselves guilty of it."

AT a mass meeting of the students of Trinity College, hazing has been formally abolished by a practically unanimous vote. A resolution was passed to elect a committee, consisting of three seniors, two juniors, and one sophomore, before whom all unruly students shall be summoned and disciplined. This action has been under consideration at Trinity for some time past, and was brought to a head by a recent communication from the New York alumni, urging the student body to take such action.

THE intelligent reporter is at his work again. Giving data of the convention news of a certain prominent diocese, we are told that there were "Protestants admitted, 9; Protestants in the diocese, 18"—meaning "postulants." The same reporter states that the "old consecration system . . . might be modified," etc., meaning, of course, the "convocational system." And these blunders in a journal owned by Churchmen!

MR. RICHARD CADBURY, the English cocoa manufacturer, never had a strike or any other difficulty in his relations with his employees. Nearly all the work was done on the piece system, each person getting exactly what he earned. Thoughtful provision was made for the meals of the men and women of the works, and for their rest and recreation. The workrooms and the grounds were beautified. There were houses where aged employees, past the ability to work, were supported in comfort. Mr. Cadbury personally maintained some thirty home missionaries and secretaries of adult schools, philanthropic and other institutions, in Birmingham and the district.

THE key note of the experience of many is touched by a writer in Collier's Weekly: "There is loneliness for innumerable solitaires. As many days as there are in all the ages, so many solitudes are there for men. This is the open house of the earth; no one is refused. Nor is the space shortened or the silence marred because, one by one, men in multitudes have been alone there before. Solitude is separate experience. Nay, solitudes are to be numbered less by days, than by men themselves. Every man of the living and every man of the dead might have had his 'privacy of light.'"

AS living illustration of the above, we find in the London Daily News the following statement:

London life drives people in upon themselves. The first thing that strikes a newcomer from the provinces, particularly from the North, is the unneighborliness of London. Among the millions here you can live a more lonely life than in a remote country town. People don't know their next door neighbors, and don't want to know them. Not only that, people dwelling in the same house are frequently strangers to each other. Often you knock at the doors of houses, and find that the occupier of the first floor doesn't know the name of the family on the third, though both may have lived there for years. When the spirit of neighborliness is absent, the spirit of citizenship suffers. In the slums it is different. The slums of London represent about the only place where neighborliness prevails. In the back slum courts you will find a more genuine neighborly spirit than anywhere else in London. The little community knows itself thoroughly. They quarrel one day and help each other the next. They pull each other through hard times; they nurse each other, feed each other, clothe each other, shelter each other.

AN old colored preacher was asked how his church was getting on, and his answer was: "Mighty poor, mighty poor, brudder." "What is the trouble?" and he replied: "Dem 'cieties, 'cieties. Dey is jist drawin' all de fatness and marrow outen de body and bones ob de Blessed Lord's body. We can't do nuffin widout de 'ciety. Dar is de Lincum 'Ciety, wid Sister Jones and Brudder Brown to run it; Sister Williams mus' march in front ob de Daughters of Rebecca. Den dare is de Dorcases, de Marthas, de Daughters ob Ham, and Liberian Ladies." "Well, you have the brethren to help in the church," we suggested. "No, sah, dar am de Masons, de Odd Fellers, de Sons of Ham, and de Okalahoma Promised Land Pilgrims. Why, brudder, by de time de brudders an' sisters pays all de dues an' tends all de meetins, dere is nuffin left for Mount Pisgah church but jist de cob; de corn has been shelled off an' frowed to dese speckled chickens."

INTEMPERANCE is rife in Mexico. During the ten years closing last December, 2,000,000,000 gallons of liquors, exclusive of foreign good, were consumed. Last year, 5,000,000 gallons were imported into Mexico. The City of Mexico has 2,000 saloons and pulquerias—places where pulque, the national beverage, is dispensed. The Mexican insane asylums credit alcoholism with 53 per cent. of their patients. In England, the percentage is 21; in the United States, 22; in France, 27, and in Holland, 32.

Irish Repartee and Sarcasm

REPAREE, or readiness in smart, witty, sarcastic retort, is said to be the highest form of wit. These immediate and felicitous replies, these answering thrusts in mental fencing, these illuminating flashes of quick and lively imaginations, are common among all classes in Ireland. On old Carlisle bridge in Dublin there was a fruit-stall, the keeper of which, "Biddy," the apple-woman, was a better-known figure than even the Lord Mayor. She had a ready and glib tongue, and never allowed a verbal assailant to retire with all the honors. An American visitor, thinking to take a "rise" out of the old woman, took up one of the watermelons she was displaying for sale, and said: "These are small apples you grow over here. In America we have them twice the size." Biddy slowly removed her "dudheen," or clay pipe, from her lips, and coolly surveying the joker from head to heel, said, in a tone of pity, "Yerra, what a fool yez must be whin yez take our gooseberries for apples." The Irish people are perhaps unequalled for concentrating into a phrase an amount of bitter sarcasm. A Dublin jarvey, seeing a man of fashion who prided himself on his skill in handling the reins, driving down Grafton street, said: "That fellow looks like a coachman, but drives like a gentleman."

John Philpot Curran was noted for his powers of repartee and sarcasm. Many of his good things in that line have come down to us through the century. There could not be a better testimony to their worth; but as most of them are too well known to need repeating here, I will simply give a few that I have picked up in out-of-the-way places. At a dinner-table in London the conversation turned on public speaking. Curran stated that he could never address an audience for a quarter of an hour without moistening his lips. "I have the advantage of you there, Curran," said Sir Thomas Turton, a pompous and pretentious Member of Parliament. "I spoke the other night in the House of Commons for five hours, on the Nabob of Oude, and never felt in the least thirsty." "That is very remarkable, indeed," replied Curran, "for every one agrees that it was the driest speech of the session." One day Curran was walking past the Parliament House in College Green, before the Bank of Ireland got possession of it, with a nobleman who had promoted the legislative union by his votes. "I wonder what they intend to do with that useless building?" said the nobleman; "for my part, I hate the sight of it." "I do not wonder at that, my lord," returned Curran who was an anti-Unionist; "I never yet heard of a murderer who was not afraid of a ghost."

Curran, as will be seen from these anecdotes, could say mordant and cutting things; but, perhaps, no man was insulted with such dialectical neatness and ingeniousness as Curran was by the famous maker of "bulls," Sir Boyle Roche, in the Irish House of Commons. "The honorable gentleman says he is the guardian of his own honor," said Roche, in reply to a speech of Curran; "but on the other occasions I have heard him boast that he was an enemy of sinecures." Curran was defeated in a conversational contest with Lady Morgan, the Irish novelist, one evening in that lady's drawing-room, when, exaggerating the prevailing fashion in short sleeves, she wore merely straps over her shoulders. Curran was walking away from the little party who witnessed the conflict of the two wits, when Lady Morgan called out, "Ah, come back, Mr. Curran, and acknowledge that you are fairly beaten." "At any rate," said he, turning round, "I have this consolation, Lady Morgan, that you can't laugh at me in your sleeve."

Daniel O'Connell's sarcastic and graphic description of a lady of stiff, cold, and formal manners is very happy. "She has all the characteristics of a poker—except its occasional warmth." This recalls the story of the two Irish servants who, discussing the stiff and unbending manners of the young lady of the family, agreed that, "When she was a baby her mother must have fed her upon boiled pokers, underdone!" Another happy and humorous example of sarcasm—as apart from repartee—is afforded by the following anecdote. I quote it on the authority of a friend who, I am afraid, was the villain of the incident. A most imperturbable man was followed from Westmoreland street, Dublin, over the O'Connell Bridge, to the general postoffice, by two little street Arabs who importuned him for the end of his cigar. "Throw us the butt, sir! Ah, sir, throw us the butt," cried the youths; but as the man did not betray the slightest consciousness of their existence, they gave him up at last in despair and disgust. "Arrah, let him alone," said one, with the most scorching scorn, "shure it's a butt he's picked up himself."

I once heard a bumptious little man who, acting as steward at athletic sports in Dublin, was very assertive in keeping back the crowd, thus addressed by an angry spectator: "If the consate was taken out of yez, ye'd be no bigger than a green gooseberry, and ye're as sour as wan already."—London Telegraph.

An Anglican Study in Christian Symbolism.
By Elizabeth Clifford Neff. Cleveland, Ohio: The Helman-Taylor Co.

Miss Neff is "president of the class in ecclesiastical embroidery, of the diocese of Ohio," and the work before us is the result of a careful study of everything relating to that subject. Such a work, of course, does not attempt to cover the whole range of ecclesiastical symbolism, but only that division of the subject with which it is necessary that those who have to do with ecclesiastical embroidery and the festival decoration of churches, should be acquainted. In the first chapter, the author gives an explanation of the title and some general definitions. We are not sure that we agree with her with regard to the necessity of permanently disusing the symbols considered to have been "condemned at the Reformation," such as the ladder, the cock, the pillar, scourge, reed, sponge, nails, and crown of thorns. It is difficult to understand how the use of these symbols can be supposed to open the way to a return "to those errors that crept in with the dark ages." The author treats of her subject under a fivefold division; namely: Form, Color, Number, Language, and Action. Under the first head, are treated symbols referring to the three Persons of the Blessed Trinity, respectively. Next comes the symbolism of color; the use of colors in various parts of the church is described. We notice that much is here said of the "Sarum Use." We venture to doubt, notwithstanding the arguments of some enthusiastic advocates, whether there ever was such a thing as an established Sarum sequence of colors. It is probable that no very definite or uniform system in this matter can be made out as existing in the Church anywhere until after the Reformation. Chapter V contains a very useful treatment of symbolic numbers, a matter of great importance in almost every branch of ecclesiology. The symbolism of language is treated of, rather for the sake of completeness, than because of its having any definite relation to ecclesiastical embroidery. The same may be said of the symbolism of action. Under this last head we do not, in all respects, agree with the author who disparages the use of the crucifix and of "the Virgin Mother and Holy Infant," as having "ideas behind them that make their use most doubtful, if they do not condemn them." We are not to refuse to contemplate the suffering Christ because we live in hope of the resurrection, and it may be that the disuse of the crucifix is connected with the loss of sound doctrine on the subject of the Atonement and the blunting of the sense of sin among large classes of people in our own times. And, surely, it is not the Virgin Mother with the Holy Infant, but without Him, which tends to possible error. There is a very useful treatment of the symbolic significance of plants and flowers, both in church decoration and in embroidery. Of course a work of this kind must necessarily include the subjects of vestments and altar coverings. The ninth chapter, on the Needle Worker and Embroidery, is, properly enough, the longest in the book. It contains a variety of curious and interesting historical information, with many important suggestions for workers in this line. On the whole, this work is to be heartily commended as one of which it may be emphatically said that no one who aspires to work in this department can afford to dispense with it. Many of the clergy will find it most useful, not only as a guide in some respects to themselves, but as enabling them to direct their altar guilds or other Church workers upon right lines.

Here and There in the Greek New Testament.
By Prof. L. S. Potwin, Adelbert College, Western Reserve University. Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company.

Forty-eight pages of this volume are devoted to an introduction containing "Hints on New Testament Exegesis." Many of these hints are very useful; others are so obvious as hardly to be worth mention. It might be thought, on the whole, that the author has in view those who look forward to becoming instructors or professors in this department, rather than the ordinary theological student who merely hopes to become an efficient expounder of the New Testament to plain people. To a good knowledge of the Greek classics is added the post-classical writers, a good knowledge of the Septuagint, a knowledge of Hebrew, of Syriac, the Latin versions, the Greek Fathers, and familiarity with the Higher Criticism. It is true the author offsets this by acknowledging that it is not necessary to be a Meyer or a Lightfoot in order to explain the Bible for practical purposes. He admits that "great genius or deep spiritual insight, or the acuteness of common sense, may be a substitute for many scholarly qualifications." Among the various principles laid down to be employed in exegesis, we find no reference to the doctrinal system of the Church, nor, indeed, any reference to the fact which all candid men are now beginning to admit, that no one can approach the study of the Scriptures without doctrinal pre-suppositions, whether they be orthodox, heretical, or infidel. This being the case, there can be no doubt that such pre-suppositions have the strongest influence in determining the meaning of a large part of the New Testament writings. It would seem, therefore, to be a necessary part of the preparation for the study of the New Testament, that the student should be taught to criticise his preliminary assumptions and to determine the limits within which he is justified in submitting to their guidance. Some of the subjects which are treated, are the interpretation of the Gloria in Excelsis; the word translated "daily" in the Lord's Prayer, that crux of interpreters; the meaning of the word "evil" in the same prayer; Christ's descent into Hades; words borrowed from the Latin; words from the Hebrew and Aramaic, and words not found in classical writers. While many of the subjects relate to difficult points over which there has been much controversy, and in regard to which we may not always be convinced by Professor Potwin's arguments, the last three subjects cannot fail to commend themselves as alike useful to all students of the New Testament.

The Song of the Rappahannock. Sketches of the Civil War. By Ira Seymour Dodd. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. Price, $1.

The "Song" is the sound of war, from the weird, fantastic notes of the nightly march, to the "chorus of awful and discordant screams mingled with thunderous, reverberating war." This was the song which a young soldier of the Army of the Potomac heard for several years, some of the notes of which he has here recorded. His sketches are thrilling, and true to the life and the death of field and camp. The subject which is introduced by the "Song" is continued in several chapters, under the titles of "The Making of a Regiment," "The Household of the Hundred Thousand," "A Little Battle," "One Young Soldier," and "Sacrifice." This is one of the best of the many good books of the great conflict. It is fair and true, and holds the interest to the end.

History up to Date. By William A. Johnston. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. Price, $1.50.

The world's record scarcely affords another example of a war involving such great consequences as that of our recent war with Spain, beginning, continued, and ended, and the history of it all written and published, within a year. The publishers of the volume before us are to be commended for helping to complete the unique record; the work seems to be well done, and without appearance of undue haste. The author, in the preface, pronounces this war the greatest of a century "in its results, if not its events." There are many excellent photo illustrations, for which acknowledgment is made to the war correspondents of The New York Herald. Perhaps no other war has been so recorded by the camera, to be handed down in the detail of its scenes and actions, as this one of which we have here the interesting record. It contains the text of State papers, war messages, etc., and that of the Paris treaty is given in the appendix.

The Spirit Guest. The Story of a Dream. By Josephine Rand. New York and Chicago: Fleming H. Revell Company. Price, 30c.

A very suggestive dream to the worldling and the Christian whose soul is filled with thoughts of selfish ease and enjoyment. A useful book to put into the hands of a young lady just emerging into womanhood.

How to Plan the Home Grounds. By S. Parsons, Jr. With Illustrations drawn by W. E. Spader, etc. New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. Price, $1.

There is nothing pleasanter for men and women of culture than to plan homes and home grounds, except, perhaps, to execute the plans. Yet there are very few who are sufficiently informed, either in æsthetic or technical matters, to do this pleasant work successfully. One need only to look about the world as he passes along, either in city or country, to see how very crude and poor are the ideas of people generally as to domestic and landscape architecture and gardening. We have a book here by an experienced and expert and practical artist, ex-superintendent of parks, New York city, which gives the information and directions needed for the simple and unostentatious establishment, as well as for expensive and complicated grounds and park systems. It has a merit which many works of this kind lack; that is, simplicity and directness, little space being given to general discourse. The illustrations are numerous and suggestive. There is an appendix giving lists of plants and shrubs for general use, of deciduous and evergreen trees, vines, etc.; also aids in making contracts and specifications, directions for drainage, grading, planting, and sowing. Churchyards and seaside lawns, village squares, and railroad station grounds are all treated from a practical and decorative point of view.

In a recent review of "Guesses at the Riddle of Existence," by Professor Goldwin Smith, in THE LIVING CHURCH, the publishers named were Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co. This was an error. The book is published by the Macmillan Company, New York.

The Edinburgh Review for April opens with an excellent paper on Sir Robert Peel, based on his recently published biography. The next article, "The Origin of Diamonds," is exceedingly interesting as a study in geology illustrated by modern chemistry. The recent volumes of Letters of Robert and Elizabeth Browning are the inspiration of an article with the singular and suggestive title, "Discretion and Publicity." The doings of the French in their new colony of Madagascar are commented upon, from the English point of view, and rather caustically, in another article. An interesting phase of the eternal "Eastern Question" is discussed in a lengthy paper on "Asia Minor," which political and economic students will appreciate. Altogether, this is a very good number of The Edinburgh.

LAWLESSNESS—The South must pay heavy penalties for the savagery its public sentiment encourages. We expect to see an increase of crimes of violence, not only in the South, but throughout the country, following this public approval of, or apology for, lawlessness. Not till the people respect the majesty of law and unite to insist on its prompt and just enforcement on all of every race, will lives and homes in the South be safe, and thrifty immigrants seek settlements in that section. Prosperity will come through orderly and peaceful communities, never through lawlessness. Yet it is well to remember that our country is one, and must be united in bearing common burdens. The homes of Georgia must be as sacred to New Englanders as their own. The problems of the South are the problems of the whole country. The discussion of them, which is patriotic, Christian, and helpful, regards them as belonging to all the people, not alone to any one section. There is but one desirable solution, and that is to be gained through the patient application of Christian principles. The majority, North and South, believe in them and are learning how to apply them. Indiscriminate denunciation of the Southern people, white or black, from pulpit and press, will only delay the solution which all good men seek. But we believe that Christian principles will prevail.

The Christian Register (Unit.)

NO CHURCHES, NO MORALS.—The Governor of New Hampshire has written a proclamation which has been the subject of widespread comment. Whether it does full justice to the state of things in New Hampshire or not, it certainly calls attention to a process which is going on in every State of the Union. It is as marked in Wisconsin as it is in New Hampshire. It is as evident in the State of New York as it is in the State of Kentucky. Travelers, whether religious or secular, who have occasion to do business in the small towns, report many churchless communities, where the standard of morality is so low that some of the grossest offences are condoned, or at least winked at, by those who are among the most intelligent part of the community. A judge holding court in Boston has testified to us, with earnest solicitude, that within sight of the dome of the State House there are rustic communities where moral blindness seems to have followed the decay of the Church. In cases where he was obliged to pronounce sentence for gross offences there seemed to be no consciousness of wrong doing. We know that there are communities that have maintained a high standard of character without much aid from an organized Church; but they are exceptional, and are able to maintain discipline among themselves because they know the dangers to be avoided, and provide for them something which corresponds to the checks and balances of the Church.

The Church Standard.

DR. BRIGGS' ORDINATION.—The event of last week in American Church affairs was the action of Dr. Clendenin in requesting Bishop Potter to withdraw an appointment for the ordination of Dr. Briggs to the priesthood in St. Peter's church, West Chester, of which Dr. Clendenin is rector. Simultaneously, there have been rumors of a protest to be addressed to the Bishop against the ordination itself. We do not think we are inconsistent in saying that we trust no such protest will be made, and also that we think Dr. Clendenin was amply justified in declining to be put into a position implying some special approval of an ordination which he conscientiously deprecates. One of the secular papers remarks that the Episcopal Church is not giving Dr. Briggs a very warm welcome to its ministry. Why should it? Dr. Briggs comes into the Episcopal Church for his own convenience, not, so far as the public knows, because of any compulsion of conscience; and the Episcopal Church has had a rather large superabundance of acquisitions of that kind. Dr. Briggs is not, so far as anybody knows, to be engaged in the service of the Church he has entered, but is to continue rearing men for the ministry of other Churches; and there seems to be no special reason why Episcopalians should exult at a conversion of so equivocal a character. Besides, there are a good many Episcopalians—and we belong to the number—who believe Dr. Briggs to be an exceedingly injudicious and dangerous teacher; why should we rejoice at the quasi responsibility which the Church assumes in receiving him to Holy Orders? Holding, as we do, that the Church is, and ought to be, comprehensive enough to admit any man who professes a sincere belief in the Christian Faith as it is expressed in the Nicene Creed, we could not join in any protest against Dr. Briggs' ordination. But Dr. Briggs endorses nearly or quite every assault upon the Holy Scriptures that was made by Tom Paine in his "Age of Reason," and if we ourselves accepted Paine's premises, we should feel constrained to accept his conclusions; therefore we should not care to have any part or lot in the ordination of a man as an authorized teacher in the Episcopal Church who holds Tom Paine's premises. Dr. Clendenin is a very advanced Churchman; but there are many men of all schools and parties, High, Low, and Broad, who might not feel at liberty to protest against Dr. Briggs' ordination, but who would positively refuse to be connected with it in any way whatever.

CHAPTER XIII.

ON a late September evening, Alan Underhill was again with Margaret Delafield. This time, however, their meeting was not at the rural home in Greenwich village, where the vines clambering up the Doric pillars of the piazza were now robbing in their gorgeous autumn dyes, and the wind sweeping in from the river, brought with it the chill of the falling year, but in a snug little house in Nassau street. Thither the young man had found his way many times during that anxious summer, when the British were drawing their lines closer about New York, until at last they held its very heart.

On this occasion the young people were alone, save for the presence of Margaret's invalid mother, for between Underhill and the time-serving Quaker tradesman who had married Mrs. Delafield a few years since, there could be nothing in common.

"I am glad to hear such good news of Eugene," remarked Alan, "as that he has joined his troop, and likes well the service. Methinks 'twas on Independence night he conceived the plan to strike first a blow for liberty ere his voice shall sound beside the altars of peace. Walking homeward along the Bowerie road, he argued with me until the dawn."

"No doubt you are right," replied Margaret, "that you cannot now esteem your duty to be as his, and yet our cause can ill afford to lose one loyal arm."

"'Tis somewhat hard," said Alan, while his face flushed, and a tinge of bitterness made itself heard in his voice, "to bear on both sides the shame of suspected loyalty. Some of my father's royalist friends are even now making themselves busy over the affair at Trinity church a month ago."

"What! when the armed band did burst upon the services to menace Mr. Inglis? Ah, 'twas a misguided step for the patriots to take."

"There was but little of threatening in it—I myself was there, as my ill-fate would have it. 'Twas but idle bravado that a hundred armed men should push their way up the aisles and fill the front of the chancel. But as Mr. Inglis was even then reading the prayers, and had just reached the clause, 'Vouchsafe with favorable regard to behold our most gracious sovereign, King George the Third,' such trampling and such flash of weapons went much amiss. All scrambled from their knees and thrust their heads from out the walls of pews. Then shrieks and outcries in plenty arose, and women swooned, while men, unheeding, jumped across their prostrate bodies. 'Twas a disgraceful sight for the house of God."

"But you mixed with them?—though perhaps to quell the tumult?"

"I made my way forward as others, but the men had filed into pews of their own accord, and the service proceeded peaceably. None but an ill-wisher could have turned the tale to my disfavor, and as God is my witness, my heart is true to both Church and State."

He raised his hand in solemn assertion as he spoke, and Margaret, leaning forward impulsively, laid her own upon it. "I doubt it not," she said, "I believe in you to the uttermost." Then her delicacy taking alarm at what might be thought unmaidenly forwardness, she drew back almost haughtily.

Underhill in turn seized her hand. No doubt Griffiths, in the same place, would have borne it to his lips, but such unmeaning gallantries were not for Alan.

"You shall not repent your trust," he said fervently, "only I would, that in this desolation of our city, you and yours were out of it."

"I know not," said Margaret, "that I care to go," and added in explanation at his look of surprise. "One cannot foresee the path of danger. It may be that some far rural district, as your Mohawk Valley, shall suffer most. And I—I would not be far from the conflict."

Alan looked at her, as she spoke, with kindling eyes and an honest reverence in his heart. There seemed to him to be something of the spirit of the holy Maid of Orleans in her gaze. Had she indeed listened to the same voices? Had she the same dauntless and enduring courage?

The thought of her as she had then spoken, as she had looked when declaring her trust in him, the doubted one, Alan still carried with him as, later the same evening, he strolled rather aimlessly toward the river. Southward, past the Bowling Green, still marked out for this favorite sport, he wandered toward the Battery Park. Here he sat under a large sycamore, watching the lights of the gunboats in the harbor, but with one hand guarding as his most sacred treasure, a paper which lay against his breast. This was the latest letter received from Evelyn.

Then again his footsteps turned to the north, and almost without his own volition he found himself once more in Nassau street, before the house which had been the Delafield home, but of which the Quaker Barlow was now the master. It was a modest dwelling, overshadowed in the daytime by the fine Verplanck mansion with its gay projecting gable of red and yellow brick, imported from Holland. But to-night the medley of colonial architecture and almost Pompeian coloring which the street furnished, was quite obscured, and the little house loomed as brave as any of its fellows.

There was still a light in the second story chamber, from which he had seen Margaret lean to kiss her hand in farewell to Eugene Beaumont as he rode away with his troop. Would she ever bid him a similar Godspeed on a similar errand? Alan stifled a sigh and turned again. Somehow he had no desire for sleep. He felt as though he must patrol his post a little longer.

But now another light attracted his attention. It was not in a lady's window this time, but appeared as a dull red glare upon the sky. Were the British celebrating some new victory? Could it be that they were firing the city itself, preparatory to following General Washington? Alan's heart stood still at the thought.

Then a sudden sound of bells rang out—bells pealing tumultuously. Trinity bell was clanging, and was echoed from the old Dutch church in William street, now a riding barrack for his majesty's troopers. Underhill with flying feet followed the light to the southward, guided, moreover, by the muffled roar of human throats, which grew louder at each turn. Through Beaver street he rushed to the Green, and then he saw that the great cloud of smoke and flame was vomited forth from the Whitehall slip.

Even the gathered numbers were few compared with the need for help. Alan, thankful for his height and strength, worked among the busiest. Now he carried water, now household goods from some burning

" HERE is a vast difference between an unsupported assertion and a demonstrated fact."

Our assertion that Pure White Lead made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion is far superior to White Lead made by patent or quick processes, has been demonstrated by the experience of competent, practical painters everywhere. building, which only too often were licked up later by the greedy tongues of that great conflagration. There were many cases in which human beings stood in imminent need of succor, and half-suffocated women and children were borne forth by his and other strong arms. Almost he felt exultant that here was a fight which he could legitimately wage, a battle against the elements of fire and wind, where victory was not to be won easily or scathelessly.

From street to street the flames spread, until it looked as though nothing could save the finest section of the city from destruction. Trinity bells still gave forth their warning clangor, summoning distant townfolk to the rescue. There was little noise now, save for the crackling and hissing of the fire, and the appalling sound of crashing roofs and timbers, and most frightful of all, the howling of the southerly wind, which almost blew a gale. Alan, even while he worked to desperation, thought with an inward prayer of that house in Nassau street, where there was now no need of any light in the window. But what is one man, fifty, or a hundred men, with their unaided arms, in the midst of a tempest of fire? Yet He who neither slumbers nor sleeps, and walketh upon the wings of the wind, forsook not His people, but caused his breath to blow upon the gale, turning it toward the northwest, thus carrying the sheets of flame to the river.

Up both sides of King street to Rector, the worn out and panic-stricken citizens followed the fire. Great pieces of burning drift-wood sailed out upon the night, and announced the coming of the terrible hosts of destruction. A glowing hail fell upon the steep roof of Trinity church, and was fanned by the hot blast to an amazing blaze. The struggle to save the noble edifice was from the first a hopeless one, but there were those who were determined to make an effort for its rescue.

"Quick, my men," shouted Underhill, "bring rope and ladders and we may yet save the great church! What! ye care less for this than for the houses man builds for himself? Shame on you all!"

Spurred on by his words and example, a little knot of volunteers came forward. Ladders were set up against the burning building, but fell far short of the needed length to reach the high-eaved roof. One of the bolder spirits in the crowd saw, with Alan, the only thing to be done. It was a race between the two to reach the top branches of one of the tall old trees about the church. Up and up, through the foliage, dyed redder than any tint of autumn, and fast dropping under the scorching heat, they climbed. Closer and closer to the licking flames they drew. At the level of the eaves they slipped the cable which they carried over one of the stoutest of the high, overhanging limbs. The crowd below, almost blistered by the advancing fire, yet cheered lustily.

Then he who wore the fatigue uniform, shoved Alan back, and swung himself foremost to the yet unscathed corner of the burning building. Alan, shielding his eyes from the piercing light above, followed the lead so vaingloriously taken, and fastened the rope, now freed from the tree by other volunteers, to the low parapet. By this medium water was supplied to those above, who dashed it on the burning roof.

In spite of their brave deeds, the fire was gaining, and realizing the futility of the effort, those below called upon the workers to desist. Again, in retreat as in advance, was the young officer foremost. But Alan, who with the instinct of self-preservation was also making his way toward the rope, moved more slowly, beating the fire as he went. The scorching breath singed his very hair, the smoke curling back in his face blinded and suffocated him. He reached the saving cable, and half unconsciously swung himself over the parapet. Then there was a sudden rising of the wind, the tongues of fire united in one vast, bewildering sheet of flame, which seemed to Alan to enwrap the whole universe, and to bring with it the last moment of his life, and he knew nothing more.

When Underhill came to himself, it was to open his eyes upon a strangely still and cool apartment, which yet by the early dawn had a familiar look. While he was still straining his scorched eyes about the room, a woman glided in. It was Margaret. "Thank God!" she exclaimed, as he made some movement. "You see then with your poor, scorched eyes? I feared lest your burns and bruises had wrought you lasting harm." She came forward as she spoke, and tenderly loosened the cooling bandages from his forehead.

"Aye," he said, "'tis all right with me, but how came I here—to occupy a couch in your withdrawing room?"

"You were helping with the fire; you fell and were brought here, as others. We have opened our house to the needy and suffering."

"And you are ministering to them? Margaret, you are indeed an angel of mercy," cried Alan, rising to his feet, unconscious that he had thrilled her with the sound of her Christian name.

"My part is nothing," she replied. "Do I fight the fire? Can I refuse the shelter of our roof, which is mercifully preserved to us?"

"Ah, the fire. What know you? Is it checked?"

"I fear not. It rages fiercely on the West Side, but God in His mercy is sending it toward the river."

Alan, even while she spoke, was moving toward the door. "Nay, do not fear for me," he said, in response to her detaining gesture. "I will but reconnoitre. Mayhap it be I now my work to guide the wounded to this refuge."

"Oh, I so long that you may bring good tidings!"

"And I to be the bearer of them. Farewell."

Alan learned that the fire was still doing its deadly work on the western side, where homeless men and women watched sullenly the advance of the fatal element. As far north as Mortkile street stretched the winged tents of flame. There, however, their course was checked by open ground trending toward the river. St. Paul's church had been saved, as its flat roof gave easy footing, and the burning embers were extinguished as they fell.

But with the conviction that the great conflagration had reached its limits, a change came over the mood of the almost apathetic watchers. Fierce accusations and recriminations as to the origin of the calamity began to be heard. Patriot and Tory exchanged harsh epithets, menaces, and finally blows. Louder and louder grew the outcry, while the excited crowd converged to one point at the corner of Cherry and Roosevelt streets, where stood an old tavern.

"What is it?" cried Alan, as he forced his way with his broad shoulders to the midst of the throng. "The king's men have caught a Tartar," responded a bystander. "White is the fellow's name. He says the wonder is that heaven itself does not rain fire on this Tory city!" Fiercer raged the tumult. "'Tis the work of the rebels!" "Death to the traitor!" "A gallows for White and such as he!" were the cries raised. Then came a closer grappling and scuffling, a yell of triumph and derision from the mob, and Alan saw a man led forth with a rope halter about his neck.

"For God's sake," cried Underhill, "have done with this! Give the man a trial! I doubt not he is as innocent of firing the city as I am. Let not his blood be upon your heads! Have we not all suffered together in the fearful night now past?"

But the temper of the crowd was at white heat. With the ferocity of wolves they hurried the man on to his doom. Nothing but the death of their victim could slake their fury now. The creaking tavern sign above their heads hung from an horizontal bar set in the wall. To this they strung up their helpless prey, and in a few moments he had paid the penalty for his overfree speech. His limbs had scarcely ceased their quivering, when two or three men in British uniform came clattering up on horseback. What means this riot?" cried their leader, as he reigned in. Naught answered him for an instant but the ghastly object which dangled from the signpost, then came the cry at once from fifty throats, "'Tis the traitor who fired the city!"

A moment later, and Alan who had already turned his back on the horrid sight, and was walking somewhat painfully toward Nassau street, was astounded to find himself surrounded by the provost's men. He was only told that he was under arrest for complicity in a plot to fire the city, and that with others, he would be carried before the Royal Commissioners for examination.

THE first maker of covered buttons was Mrs. Samuel Williston, of East Hampton, Massachusetts. In early life her husband prepared for the ministry, but, his eyesight failing, he was compelled to give up all study and support himself. He opened a general country store, and his wife gave a great deal of attention to a notion counter. One winter day, in 1826, she was sorting her stock, when it suddenly occurred to her to cover some of the wooden buttons, then in general use, with cloth. They attracted much attention among the customers of the little shop, and were finally known to all the neighboring towns, and became very popular. Williston and his wife contrived machinery to do the work, the first ever employed in America. An immense manufactory sprang up, and made half the covered buttons of the world, and Williston died worth several millions. And the source of all this wealth originated with a bright New England woman.—Harper's Bazar.

CHAPTER VI.

THE FIRST ALARM.

"I'll call early Monday morning for you," were Virginia's last words when she parted from Mollie on Saturday. "Early, mind, about 9 o'clock, and we'll go around to everyone in town with those tickets."

"All right! I'll be ready," Mollie said and she kept her word. When the little china clock on the mantel rang out 9 in its sharp, shrill chime, she put the last touches to her toilet—for Mollie was growing more particular these days about the latter, as befitted a maid of honor—and ran up-stairs to the little side room which she and the boys used as a general receptacle for anything and everything.

She was whistling softly to herself as she tossed about the papers on top of the desk, and peeped into the pigeon holes.

"Why, the idea," she began in surprise, stopping short in her search. "I know, I just know, I left them here, right here on the top, all banded together."

She pulled open the drawers of the desk, one by one, and glanced through their contents with a rapid, anxious eye.

"Oh, Mollie!" came a clear call from the driveway, and she ran to the window to wave her hand to Virginia as the latter drew up under the shade of the poplars.

"Just a minute," she called back, and then running to the top of the stairs, she shouted in her loudest and most imperative tones: "Dave, Art., are you boys down there?"

"Deed, and they've both gone to town this hour and more, Miss Mollie, dear," answered Annie's rich brogue from the dining-room.

"On their wheels, Annie?"

"Yis'm, and that Edsall b'y with 'em, too."

"Whew," whistled Mollie, shutting one eye shrewdly. "Smell a mouse."

"Minute's up, young lady," called Virginia, so slamming the desk cover down, Mollie retraced her steps, and joined her ladyship, as the boys had named Miss Hardy.

"Can't find them?" the latter repeated curiously, knitting her eyebrows together. "How queer. Whoa there, Lassie," as the ponies grew restive after their Sunday vacation. "Well, we can't wait, now. I have fifty with me, and we can sell those, anyway. Jump in."

Mollie obeyed, but while Virginia chatted on in her easy way of the masquerade, she sat silent, secretly worried in spite of herself. Eleanor had ordered two hundred tickets printed, and that number had seemed amply sufficient, even to the most sanguine of the girls. The party was to be Friday night. Virginia had retained fifty of the tickets, while Mollie had firmly intended distributing her one hundred and fifty among the other members of the S. D. S. on Saturday afternoon.

Now, as matters stood, this whole plan was completely knocked in the head, and, as Mollie said, she smelled a mouse. The tickets could not have run away, that was sure, and as she recalled the suspiciously genial and solicitous manner of Dave and Art. on Sunday, she could not help thinking that they knew more of the tickets than she did.

"But I don't care," she said aloud, breaking with startling suddenness in on Virginia's description of how to construct the lemonade well most artistically, "I don't care. Art. and Dave wouldn't do anything mean, and I know it. If they have taken them, it is only to tease me."

Virginia laughed.

"I wouldn't be one of you girls with brothers for a farm," she said merrily. "You've always got a sword dangling over your heads for fear they've upset some of your pet schemes."

Mollie flushed up in an instant, like a hen ruffling in defence of her brood.

"Oh, no, no," she answered warmly, "brothers are splendid! You don't know, Virgine, how fine Art. and Dave are, only they do like to tease sometimes; and, besides, there is Jerry Edsall, and if he's put them up to anything—" she paused abruptly, and shut her lips in a firm close line that gave her a resolute double chin, and her blue eyes snapped ominously. It would have gone ill with the special secret-service spy had he fallen into her hands just at that moment; but Virginia only laughed at her serious view of the situation, and before long, Lad and Lassie stood outside the city bank while their mistress went inside to interview the president and any other victims she could find. When she came out there was a puzzled look in her face.

"Sell any?" queried Mollie, anxiously. Virginia shook her head.

"I made uncle Rex take ten, anyway," she said, slowly, "but he had just bought some other kind of tickets for that night, and so had all the rest."

"How queer," Mollie said, but she did not dare to speak her thoughts.

It was the same story everywhere. The ground had already been gone over thoroughly, and the harvest gathered in. Some few bought tickets under persistent protest, but nearly every one had a special engagement for that night, for which they had already purchased tickets, and the nature of which they laughingly declined to tell.

"It's those Excelsior boys," said Mollie, almost on the verge of tears over the fate that threatened the first S. D. S. entertainment. "They've found out, somehow, and mean to smash the whole thing for us out of pure spite. Oh, just wait until I get hold of Dave and Art!"

"And Jerry," added Virginia, softly.

"All of them," retorted Mollie, with a tragic wave of her hand. "I think that it's the meanest, smallest piece of revenge I ever heard of! Fifteen boys against us six girls, trying so hard to get a successful start. I hope they're real proud of themselves, that's all!"

"How do you suppose they ever found it out, I mean that we had the tickets all ready printed, and so on?" Virginia said, musingly, after a pause.

"Why, I suppose that Jerry Edsall was around when we had a meeting at Nell's," began Mollie, when all at once the truth flashed upon her, and she caught her breath sharply.

"What is it?" Virgine exclaimed, quickly.

"Why—why—I'm afraid," Mollie faltered, completely conscience-stricken and humbled, "I'm afraid I told."

"You told!"

Virgine's eyes opened wide in amazement.

"You told the boys, Mollie Gray?"

Mollie nodded sorrowfully, and told the story of the window, and what had been said from it, while Virginia listened in stony silence.

"That's all," Mollie said, with a sigh, at the end of her tale.

"Yes, that's all," returned her ladyship, giving Lad and Lassie the first touch of the whip that they had had in many a day. "And we might as well find some out-of-the-way little hole, and crawl into it, and pull the hole in after us, because you may be very sure that it's all up with the moonlight masquerade!"

A couple of big tears tumbled from Mollie's blue eyes, and met an untimely fate on the lap robe, but their owner never said a word all the way home.

(To be continued.)

IN Buffalo is a horse who is extremely fond of music. At the fire engine house the other day the firemen had a concert with a national gramophone. One of Sousa's lively marches was put on the machine and played. Mr. Tom, the horse described, at once commenced to prance in his stall and paw at the door. One of the men brought the horse out, and he stood close up to the horn, with head bent down, and both ears drooping forward to catch every strain of the music, so loud and distinct on the gramophone. The horse was delighted with several choice selections, and then reluctantly taken back into his stall.

American Bicycle Trade

THE opening of the wheeling season gives especial interest to some figures just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. These tables, which present the statistics of bicycle exports during the past few years, show that American wheels are now being ridden in all parts of the world. In the wilds of Mexico and Central America, under the blazing skies of Cuba, Porto Rico, and other West Indian islands; across the pampas of Argentine, Brazil, and other South American States; amid the densely populated areas of China, British East Indies, and Japan, and in the jungles of Africa, the American wheel is making its way. Even in the great manufacturing countries of Europe, where workshops and skilled workmen abound, millions of dollars' worth of American bicycles are sold each year. During the four fiscal years, 1896, 1897, 1898, and 1899, the exportations of American bicycles amounted in round numbers to twenty million dollars.

That such large numbers of a machine requiring such high grades of workmanship in its production should be continuously and successfully exported in competition with the workshops of the most successful manufacturing countries of the world is a fact of which American workmen, and Americans generally, may justly feel proud. Four million dollars' worth of American bicycles will, during the fiscal year about to end, go to European countries—countries in which the manufacturing industries antedate by generations those of the United States. To France, with all her skilled workmen and ingenuity, exportations of American bicycles in the fiscal year 1899 will be more than double in value those of 1897, while the fact there has been a general lowering of prices, indicates that in numbers the increase has been very much greater. To Germany, the exportations of bicycles in 1899 will be 60 per cent. in excess of those of 1897, though something less than those of 1898. To other countries on the continent of Europe, the bicycle exports of 1899 are 50 per cent. in excess of those of last year, or the year before. To the United Kingdom, the bicycle exports of the year are materially less than those of 1898, as measured by values, though the fall in prices probably accounts for much of the apparent reduction, as shown by the figures which give values exclusively, and do not indicate the number of machines exported.

One curious and interesting fact in regard to the exports of bicycles illustrates the general tendency of our export trade in manufactures. This is the fact that a very large proportion of our exports of manufactures go to manufacturing countries. Two-thirds of our bicycles go to countries which make a specialty of manufacturing, and this export to manufacturing countries increases rather than otherwise. It will be remembered that predictions were made a year or two ago that the exports of bicycles to Japan would decrease as soon as the Japanese had obtained sufficient numbers as models for their own factories, and established themselves in the manufacture of wheels. This prediction, however, has not proven true. The exports of bicycles to Japan, which in the fiscal year 1897 amounted to $52,179, were in 1898, $88,905, and in the fiscal year which ends next month will reach fully $130,000.

Increasing Exports

AMERICAN manufacturers continue to extend their "spheres of influence" throughout the civilized world. The reports of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics show that during the eight months ending with Feb. 28, 1899, the exports of manufactures were not only $37,000,000 in excess of the imports of manufactures, but more than $26,000,000 in excess of those exported in the corresponding months of the fiscal year 1898. In the 204 business days covered by this report, the American manufacturers have exported $207,000,000 worth of manufactures, or more than $1,000,000 worth per day. In the corresponding days of the preceding fiscal year their exportations of manufactures were only $181,000,000. In the fiscal year 1898 the United States for the first time exported more manufactures than she imported, and the fiscal year, 1899, will make another and even better record in this particular. While it is apparent that the imports of manufactures in the year 1899 will be somewhat in excess of those of last year, which were abnormally light by reason of the heavy importations just prior to the enactment of the recent tariff law, the gain in exports is greater than the increase in imports. In the eight months ending with February, 1898, the imports of manufactures were $152,091,157, and in the corresponding months of the fiscal year, 1899, they were $169,843,729, an increase of 11 per cent. In the first eight months of the fiscal year, 1898, the exports of manufactures were $180,606,072, while in the corresponding months of the fiscal year 1899, they were $206,822,334, an increase of 14 per cent.

Per Capita Circulation

THE money in circulation in the United States has more than doubled in the last twenty years, it has increased 50 per cent. since 1886, and more than 25 per cent. since July 1, 1896. A table just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows that on July 1, 1879, the amount in circulation was $818,631,793; on July 1, 1889, $1,379,964,770, and on April 1, 1899, $1,927,846,942. No period in our history has shown a more rapid growth in the money in circulation than the last three years. On July 1, 1896, the beginning of the new fiscal year, the amount in circulation was $1,509,725,200. By July 1, 1897, it had reached $1,646,028,246, an increase of $136,303,046. On July 1, 1898, it was $1,843,435,749, an increase for that year of $197,407,503, and at the beginning of the present month, it was $1,927,846,942; an increase in the nine months of the present fiscal year of $84,411,193. The increase since July 1, 1896, has been at the rate of nearly half a million dollars for each business day, and during the past year, has averaged considerably more than a half million dollars. The per capita circulation on April 1, 1899, was the largest ever shown at that period of the year in the history of our country.

Hints for Flower Lovers

THE calla has had its need of summer rest so frequently urged that it is probably a case of neglect when its crock does not retire to some corner out of doors to lie upon its side till the tip of a starting leaf shows, toward autumn, that growth is ready to recommence. The calla certainly needs fresh soil each season, and the complete rest that reduces it to four or five inches of thickened rootstock is a decided convenience, in that it is much more easily handled when without top or rootlets. All small bulbs are then conveniently removed and the dried portion at the bottom. While a rich compost suits the calla well, it is possible to encourage a too rapid leaf growth, resulting in the breaking over of the stalks. All bulbs are safest when a handful of sand separates them from the richer soil their roots like to feed upon. A calla well rested and potted and, after a fortnight or so, placed in a warm kitchen chamber, will often show buds before its first leaves are fairly grown. If one have not a sunny window some where for it, the calla is of little use, apart from its stately foliage. If grown for its tropical leaves, four or five, or almost any number, of bulbs in a large crock do well; but if kept in a sunny back window and only placed in the jardiniere in the parlor when in flower, growing a single large bulb in a seven-inch crock seems the better plan, since ease in carrying about, and more frequent blooms, are thus secured. Some time ago we tried to turn several bulbs not needed for winter use into summer bloomers. But they either died from the imposed winter rest, or else refused to flower under sunny skies and liberal watering.

The little gem calla has not yet fully proclaimed its needs to the ordinary flower culturist. To the many who voice complaints and queries, consideration of this item in the offer of a reliable firm is of interest: "Price, 15 cents each. Blooming plants, 40 cents each." An annoying determination to reproduce itself by offsets seems one of its marked characteristics. Bulbs are therefore inexpensive, but those grown to blooming size command a much higher figure. During our first season with it, a sour, water-soaked condition of soil seemed unavoidable, but at last we learned to see that it was in need of water before giving even a scanty supply, remembering that so little leaf and root surface could make use of but a small amount of moisture. When repotting it last fall, desperation with what seemed its malcontent ways, made us bold. Every least bulblet was picked off, and the rich potting soil made porous with plenty of sand. The bulb thus treated doubled the size of its leaf growth during the winter. Having now attained its proper height of twelve inches, we shall look for blossoms next year.—Good Housekeeping.

Notes of the World's Progress

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF LORD Cromer presents some interesting facts regarding the development of Egypt and the Soudan. While the Soudan must be for a long time a burden to the Egyptian treasury, gratification is found in the fact that the revenue, although small in comparison with expenditures, is fully three times larger than the estimated figure. He strongly advises free and unrestricted trade, and urges that means of communication be provided, although caution must be used in the case of the latter, as railroads must be constructed at government expense. Egypt shows great strides in advancement. The study of English has wonderfully increased, and the adoption of the language augurs most favorable feeling toward British occupation. The policy of England is rather to direct an intelligent administration, than attempt to fill all positions by Englishmen. The public service of the country is carried on by 11,870 officials, of whose number 1,270 are Europeans, 455 being British, and the remaining 10,600 Egyptians. The most important work in progress is that of storing the waters of the Nile, which will greatly enhance the productiveness of the country.

AN UNFOUNDED REPORT THAT NEGOTIATIONS aiming at a new treaty between the United States and Canada had been broken off, and that there would be no further sessions of the Joint High Commission, caused a deep feeling of disappointment, particularly on the part of those having interests affected. News comes from London in effect that negotiations have not been broken off, nor at any time have they been endangered; on the contrary, prospects are bright for a favorable settlement of questions which have been sources of constant friction. At the time the Joint High Commission adjourned its sittings in Washington, it was stated they would be resumed in August. Certain phases of matters of great importance could not be decided by the Canadian commissioners without consultation with the home government. These points have become the subject of negotiations directly between representatives of Great Britain and the United States in Washington and London, and it is likely, when the Commission convenes, a new treaty can be formulated without serious difficulty.

A STUDY OF FRENCH CUSTOM HOUSE statistics reveals the fact that the United States and England buy the greater part of French artistic productions, in fact, numerous French industries could not exist were it not for the patronage extended by these two countries. The total of French exports in 1895 was 3,373 million francs, of which England and the United States together took more than one-third. The manufactured exports were 1,909 million francs, of which England took 577½ millions, and the United States, 216¼ millions, the two aggregating nearly one-half the total. When these manufactures are examined in detail, it is seen that the most delicate, the most intrinsically precious, the most artistic fabrications of the French artisan, are consumed in English-speaking communities. The whole of Europe outside of France does not buy as much as the United States of those articles on which France chiefly prides itself. France has made luxurious dress industries its special field. Decorative dress in this age belongs to the women, and only the women of America and England have the money and taste to become steady patrons of French fashions. The number of such women on the European continent is surprisingly small. English and American patronage is an absolute necessity for the prosperity of French commerce. Worth declared before a parliamentary commission that the three weeks of court mourning in England, at the death of the Duke of Albany, caused a loss to Paris of fifteen million francs.

NEGOTIATIONS LOOKING TOWARD THE surrender of Philippine insurgents are still pending, but no proposition which carries recognition of the latter's government will be considered. Professor Schurman, head of the United States Philippine Commission, has submitted the following written propositions: "While the final decision as to the form of government is in the hands of the Congress, the President, under his military powers, pending the action of Congress, stands ready to offer the following form of government: A governor general to be appointed by the President; a cabinet to be appointed by the governor general; all the judges to be appointed by the President; the heads of departments, and judges, to be either Americans or Filipinos, or both; and also a general advisory council, its members to be chosen by the people by a form of suffrage to be hereafter carefully determined upon. The President earnestly desires that bloodshed cease, and that the people of the Philippines at an early date enjoy the largest measure of self-government compatible with peace and order." The United States Commission prepared the scheme, and the President cabled his approval of the form of the document.

MISSOURI IS LIKELY TO TRY A NEW system calculated to secure more nearly equal rights for both plaintiff and defendant in the trial of civil cases. The Legislature has approved a proposed constitutional amendment, permitting nine members of a jury of twelve to return a verdict in civil cases, and eight members in other than courts of record. The approval of the proposed amendment by the Legislature, in which legal influence predominates, points to a likelihood of its approval by voters when it is submitted to them. The injustice of the system where unanimity was necessary to a verdict, is frequently demonstrated. By its workings, one or two obstinate jurors are able to hold out and cause a disagreement, entailing, perhaps, another expensive trial; or are able to influence a verdict contrary to the judgment of the majority. The proposed change would not be applied to criminal cases, but in civil actions, where the interests of plaintiff and defendant are equal and opposite, and where property involved must go to one or the other, three fourths of the jury should be able to rightly determine the merits of the case, without injustice to the losing litigant.

A COMMISSION APPOINTED AT THE instance of the Czar of Russia, is considering a substitute for the penalty of transportation to the Siberian mines, on the ground that the latter is prejudicial to the interests of the country. Russia has used Siberia as a place of exile for more than four centuries. In 1591 the first exiles were sent over the Ural Mountains and across the steppes to the barren regions of Siberia, and every one of the 408 years that have intervened between that date and this has witnessed a mournful procession of prisoners from Russia to "the frozen land." The exiles have belonged to every grade of society. Thousands have been transported because of their dissenting religious belief. Other thousands have been guilty of political crimes. Polish patriots who refused to acknowledge the rule of Russia were sent by tens of thousands. The Nihilists have gone in untold numbers. Then there are the convicts, sentenced to exile for crimes ranging from murder down to trivial theft. During the last century it is estimated the number of exiles passing into Siberia has varied from 17,000 to 20,000 annually. Few have returned, many have died.

PROFESSOR LEWIS M. HAUPT, OF PHILADELPHIA, one of the three commissioners who made a study of the Nicaraguan canal route, with a view to determining the advisability of government construction, believes the work can be done for $125,000,000. "If the canal were finished now," he said, "the total tonnage that would pass through it would aggregate in twelve months over 3,000,000 tons, of which the United States would contribute 1,900,000, England, 1,100,000, France, 170,000, and other countries, 50,000. The value of the tonnage and trade affected would be nearly $500,000,000. The greatest benefit would accrue to the United States, and the saving effected in three years would probably equal the cost of the canal. The annual saving to the trade of the world which would result from using the canal has been carefully computed, and is as follows: United States, $35,995,930; England, $9,950,348; France, $2,133,930; other countries, $1,400,000. None of the Australian or Asiatic trade is included in these statistics."

FERDINAND W. PECK, COMMISSIONER General of the United States to the Paris Exposition of 1900, has returned from a trip to Paris. Regarding the proposed government buildings, Mr. Peck says: "The plans of all the United States buildings have been approved by the French authorities, though many changes were made in them to conform to the requirements of the French government, and to meet the limitations of our appropriation. Work upon these buildings will begin immediately. There will be five buildings in the main grounds, and two in the Bois de Vincennes, the annex to the exposition, which will be made a most important part of the whole. Our national pavilion will be the only expensive building we will construct. This will be on the bank of the Seine, alongside the structures of about thirty other nations, with Austria on one side, and Turkey on the other. Our other buildings will be annexed to the main structures built by the French administration, and will be for exhibit purposes only. These will include annexes to the main agricultural building adjoining the American section, an annex to the manufacturers' building in the Quincennes, an addition to the forestry building, also to the merchant marine building, in which water transportation models will be exhibited, with our weather bureau, etc." Work on the Exposition is proceeding according to schedule, and, unlike the Columbian Exposition, it is believed everything will be in readiness on the day appointed for opening.

Tri-Diocesan Convention of St. Andrew's Brotherhood

The convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew of the three Virginia dioceses commenced its sessions May 13th, in Charlottesville. The address of welcome, which was responded to by representatives from each of the three Virginias, was made by the Rev. H. B. Lee. At 9:30 A. M., Sunday, there was a corporate celebration of the Holy Communion, Bishop Gibson, celebrant. At 11 A. M. the convention sermon was preached by Dr. R. J. McBryde, after which 11 persons were confirmed. In the afternoon addresses were made by Major Stiles, of Richmond, and the Rev. Dr. Clappett, of Baltimore, on "The influence of the Gospel over mind and soul." A public conference was held at 8 P. M., subject, "The American citizen, his early training, his daily life." On the last day there was a devotional service, with business session followed by a conference on "Our successes and failures." Reports were heard from the various chapters, which were not as full as had been expected, only 16 out of the 23 chapters in the diocese of Virginia being heard from, 12 from Southern Virginia's 31 chapters, and four out of 21 in West Virginia. Of the ten junior chapters, three made reports. In the afternoon conferences were held. Among the speakers, Bishops Gibson and Peterkin and the Rev. A. S. Lloyd were prominent.

The opinion seemed to be unanimous that the convention was in every respect a pronounced success, and every one was heartily in favor of its being made annual.

Chicago

Wm. Edward McLaren, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop

The pledges received at Epiphany on Whitsunday for diocesan missions, after the address by the Rev. Dr. Rushton in the morning, amounted to the very large sum of $840, with more coming in.

On Sunday last Mr. Gideon Mowry, as the rector feelingly reminded the congregation of Trinity, rounded out 23 years of faithful service as clerk, care-taker, and collector. Of all the vestrymen serving 23 years ago in this parish only three survive, Messrs. J. W. Doane, S. L. Raymond, and F. A. Seeberger.

Men's Reception to Rev. J. H. Hopkins

May 18th, a men's reception was tendered to the Rev. J. H. Hopkins, in the guild room of the church of the Epiphany, as a welcome in the name of the Brotherhood in Chicago, and of the men of his parish. Many of the Chicago chapters were represented, the number of men present being large. Mr. G. W. Macauley, director of the Epiphany chapter, presided, and addresses of welcome were made by Mr. Huested Young, chairman of the Chicago Local Council, and Mr. C. Barber, vice-chairman of the same body. The speakers, while alluding to Mr. Hopkins' well-known sympathy with the Brotherhood and its work, paid a tribute of gratitude in behalf of the many Chicago men who had received help and guidance from him during his former labors in this city, the memory of which made him doubly welcome. Mr. Hopkins, while acknowledging the good wishes and hearty welcome so warmly expressed, took advantage of the occasion, with his usual directness and earnestness, to impress upon all baptized men in general, and all Brotherhood men in particular, their bounden duty of missionary work; the importance of its conscientious fulfillment, and the invaluable aid, towards this end, which they would derive from earnest prayer, the keynote of his remarks being that "the strong man is always the prayerful man." A brief programme of music and recitation was rendered, followed by an informal exchange of greetings and thoughts, for which a stimulus in the form of light refreshments was provided by the local circle of King's Daughters.

The Bishop's Appointments

On Wednesday, the 17th, the Bishop preached at St. Alban's, before the local assembly of the Daughters of the King. On Saturday he presided at a meeting of the diocesan board of missions, and next day attended the commemoration services in the afternoon at St. James', concluding the same with special prayers and the benediction. His ensuing appointments are:

MAY

24. At closing exercises of Western Theological Seminary, in the Cathedral.
28. Trinity Sunday ordination and supplementary Confirmation.
- 30-31. Annual Convention.

JUNE

1. Annual meeting of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary in St. Peter's, Belmont avenue.
5. At meeting of trustees of Waterman Hall, Sycamore.
6. At commencement of Waterman Hall.

Rector of Christ Church Chosen Bishop

It was, in a sense, a great shock to the parish of Christ church, Woodlawn, when the morning papers announced that the diocese of Nebraska had unanimously chosen its rector, the Rev. A. L. Williams, as coadjutor to the Rt. Rev. G. Worthington, D. D. He has been with it since 1892, and the growth under his administration has been remarkable. Inaugurated in 1886 by the Rev. Dr. Rushton as a small mission with 16 communicants, it had built a little chapel seating 100. There is now a congregation numbering 500 communicants who worship in a well-appointed church, costing, with the parish rooms and adjacent commodious rectory, over $20,000, the whole property having an estimated value of $35,000. The church was opened on the first Sunday in Advent, 1894. These facts are striking evidence of Mr. Williams' business tact, no less than of faithful ministration in a parish devoted to him. In this case, as in similar ones recently, the gain of other dioceses is Chicago's loss. We believe that never before in the history of the American Church has there been an instance of the call to the episcopate of three priests from one diocese within the space of seven months. It is also notable that this is the second election to the episcopate from the alumni of the Western Theological Seminary.

Anniversary of the English Prayer Book

The Rev. Dr. Stone preached a special sermon at the 4 P. M. service in St. James' on Whitsunday, the occasion being the completion of full three and a half centuries since the issue of the Anglican Prayer Book in the reign of Edward VI. of England. The church was quite filled, and the large congregation listened attentively to the rector's comprehensive and compact story of the genesis and progress of this venerable handmaid of the Bible, which is used by nearly 30,000,000 of the nine-tenths of the Christian world which have a liturgy. He pointed out the fitness of promulgating on the day on which the Church commemorates the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, the book on the making of which, in its present form, the aid of the Holy Ghost had been so earnestly invoked. In the fine rendering of the music of the service, which included the Hallelujah Chorus, the choir of St. James', under Mr. Smedley, was assisted by that of the Epiphany, under Mr. Lawton; the procession at the beginning and close of the service numbering over 110 in vestments. Messrs. Lutkin and Hemmington alternated as organists. Several of the clergy were present. At the conclusion of the service, the choristers and others were served with refreshments in the parish house. The offerings at the afternoon service were devoted to the Church's city mission work.

Daughters of the King

At the local assembly meeting on the 17th, in St. Alban's church, Morning Prayer was said by the rector, the Rev. G. W. Knapp, and a sermon preached by the Bishop. After lunch, served for nearly 100, by the members of St. Alban's chapter, and at which about ten of the clergy were present, Mrs. McGregor, diocesan president, took the chair at this most successful of all meetings yet held. Miss Starr, the secretary, called the roll, when it was found that nine chapters were represented, with a total of nearly 100 delegates, of whom St. Peter's chapter sent 19, St. Mark's, 18, and the Redeemer, 11. From the chapters represented, interesting reports of work done were read. The treasurer's report showed the receipt of over $8. In this connection it was resolved to ask from the chapters, for the extension of the work, a capitation subscription of ten cents. The president's report gave proof of the society's wisdom in their choice of a head, for Mrs. McGregor, after alluding to the principles and character of the Order, gave detailed accounts of her visits, often accompanied by the secretary, and others, to St. Margaret's, Windsor Park, on Feb. 24th; St. John's, Clybourn av., Feb. 25th; Grace church, (which is about to organize a chapter), on March 3d; the Redeemer, Elgin, March 8th, where, in addition to other work, the chapter is taking a systematic course of Bible instruction; and to Holy Trinity on March 19th. In concluding, the president thanked the secretary, rectors, and associates for their active co-operation; and then called for addresses on set subjects, as follows: Rev. H. C. Kinney answered the question: "What can the Daughters do to broaden the work?" Rev. W. White Wilson showed "How to make the meetings of the Daughters more interesting and serviceable," laying down the emphatic principle that business was not a necessity of the meetings. Rev. C. E. Bowles' subject was, "What should be the relationship of the Daughters to the second service?" and he said briefly that the answer was Prayer, if by second service, the Holy Communion was meant; Service, if Evensong was intended. The regular annual meeting was arranged to be held in St. Peter's next October.

New York

Henry Codman Potter, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

Bishop Potter confirmed a class at St. Paul's church, Morrisania, on the evening of Sunday, May 14th.

The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, of Westchester county, held a conference in St. Thomas' church, Mamaroneck, on Whitsunday.

The Girls' Friendly Society of the diocese were favored, May 16th, with a lecture by Dr. Watson (Ian MacLaren), at Chickering Hall.

Anniversary at Trinity Church

Bishop Potter was preacher, and the Rev. Dr. James Nevett Steele, vicar of the parish church, was the celebrant at the Holy Eucharist. There was special music of an elaborate character.

Funeral of Ex-Governor Flower

The burial service over the remains of the late Roswell P. Flower, ex-Governor of New York, took place at St. Thomas' church, the Rev. John W. Brown, D. D., rector, May 15th. The rector conducted the service, assisted by the Rev. Messrs. John Huske and Nathan A. Seagle. Governor Flower was noted for generous gifts to the Church.

Church of St. Mary the Virgin

The Rev. Geo. M. Christian has appointed as his staff of curates, the Rev. Messrs. Guy L. Wallis, John A. Linn, and Samuel McPherson. Mr. Linn is at present rector of St. Paul's church, Rantoul, Ill., and Mr. McPherson has been an instructor in the faculty of Nashotah House. Mr. Wallis was connected with the parish under the late rector.

Church Temperance Society

The annual competition of the various commands of the Knights of Temperance, was held May 20th, at the armory of the 71st regiment. Prizes, in the shape of banners, were awarded for excellence in military tactics, athletic work, and discipline. On the evening of Whitsunday, the Knights held their anniversary service in the church of the Ascension.

Church Club Reception

An informal reception was given by the Church Club, May 13th, at which the guests of honor were Bishop and Mrs. Potter, the Rev. Dr. Reese F. Alsop, the Rev. Dr. Chas. T. Olmstead, the new vicar of St. Agnes' chapel, Trinity parish, and the Rev. Dr. George M. Christian, the new rector of the church of St. Mary the Virgin. About 500 clergymen and laymen were present.

Bequest to Christ Church, Rye

This church has just received a bequest of $10,000, by the will of James Wood Quintard. This is the second large gift received from Mr. Quintard. Three years ago, with his father, Mr. Geo. W. Quintard, he gave a set of memorial windows, an altar, and a reredos, valued at $40,000. A sister of Mrs. Quintard, Mrs. N. F. Palmer, has given about $20,000 to St. Peter's church, Port Chester.

Memorial Altar for Dr. Beach

At St. Peter's church, the Rev. Mr. Roche, rector, a memorial altar has been put in the chancel in memory of the Rev. Alfred B. Beach, D. D., rector emeritus of the parish. The altar, which is the gift of friends of the faithful priest, is large and heavy in construction, and is built of Italian marble and Mexican onyx, giving the effect of alabaster. The chancel walls will receive new decorative treatment during the summer months.

Confirmations at All Saints', Harrison

May 10th, Bishop Potter administered Confirmation to two classes, one from this church, and the other from the mother parish, Christ church, Rye, which had come over for the occasion. The Ven. Archdeacon Kirkby, D. D., and the Rev. Frank Gorman, officiated. The service was choral, the choir of Christ church, Rye, being present. Bishop Potter made an address, strongly commending the successful work so far accomplished, and laid his hand upon about 30 candidates.

Brothers of Nazareth

At the recent drawing room meeting held by Mrs. Geo. Crocker at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, in the interest of the Brotherhood, commendatory letters were read from Bishop Potter and the Rev. David H. Greer, D. D. Earnest addresses were made by the Rev. Drs. Morgan Dix and Geo. M. Christian, Messrs. Vernon M. Davis, Alexander M. Hadden, and Brother Gilbert. The plea was for larger financial support, and especially for aid in completing the new buildings at Priory Farm, where boys and men from New York are cared for in many forms of need.

Ex-Governor Flower's Legacies

The will of the late ex-Governor Roswell P. Flower, offered for probate May 18th, leaves legacies of $10,000 to St. Thomas' church, New York, for the benefit of the parish house erected in memory of his son; and $10,000 to Trinity church, Watertown, for the benefit of the poor. Governor Flower had been in the habit for many years of giving away at least one-tenth of his income. His gifts have, as a rule, far exceeded even this tithe. It is known that last year they were over $1,000,000. He sought to set an example of giving during a life time, rather than by bequests.

Pennsylvania

Ozi William Whitaker, D.D., LL.D., Bishop

The rector of the French church of St. Sauveur, Philadelphia, the Rev. Chas. F. B. Miel, D. D., has been suffering from illness.

The University of Pennsylvania will this year hold its baccalaureate services in the church of the Holy Trinity, the preacher for the occasion being the rector, the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins.

At the church of the Nativity, Philadelphia, the Rev. L. Caley, rector, the Ministering Children's League has completed the endowment of a bed at the Seashore House for Children, at Atlantic city, N. J.

The vacancy in the cure of the mission at Pelham has been filled by the appointment by Bishop Whitaker of the Rev. James Alan Montgomery, now one of the curates of St. Peter's church, Philadelphia.

The rector's warden of All Saints' church, Norristown, Mr. Henry C. Wentz, was killed in a railroad accident May 13th. A commemorative sermon was preached Sunday, May 14th, by the rector, the Rev. Herbert Burk.

Gift to Trinity Church, Southwark

A fine solid silver alms bason has just been presented, in memory of Jonathan May, a former member of the vestry. It is handsomely designed. The givers are the widow and son of Mr. May.

Gift to the Rev. Chas. M. Armstrong

At St. Andrew's church, the rector who is about to take a vacation in Europe, has been presented by his parishioners with a special purse of money to defray his expenses.

North-east Convocation

The annual meeting was held at St. Stephen's church, Philadelphia. Officers for the year were elected, and annual appropriations made for missionary work, after which refreshments were served.

St. Paul's, Overbrook

The new parish organized by the Ven. Archdeacon Brady, and of which he is to take charge in the fall, has completed the plans and awarded the building contracts for its church edifice. Work of construction will be pushed forward.

Church of the Holy Spirit, Philadelphia

Bishop Whitaker, on the morning of Whitsunday, preached, celebrated the Holy Eucharist, and confirmed a class presented by the rector, the Rev. Samuel H. Boyer. This is the first class confirmed in the new church edifice.

The Board of Missions of the Diocese

The annual meeting has just been held at the Church House. The Rev. T. William Davidson and Mr. Rowland Evans were elected secretary and treasurer, respectively. Action was taken looking to a better return of the income needed for missionary work.

The Clerical Brotherhood

At the meeting, May 15th, the Rev. Mr. Keller discussed the subject, "Shall the laity have a veto or vote in the election of a bishop?" referring to a proposed amendment of the law of the diocese proposed at the recent diocesan convention, and now awaiting final action at the next convention.

Whitsun Service at St. Mark's Church

At High Celebration on the morning of Whitsunday, the music of Mozart's "Seventh Mass" was used by the vested choir, under the superintendence of Mr. Pyne, organist and choir-master. The rector, the Rev. Alfred G. Mortimer, D. D., preached a special sermon on "The crisis in the Church."

Ill-health of the Rev. Edward Riggs

At a meeting of the vestry of Christ church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. C. Ellis Stevens, rector, the resignation of the Rev. Edward Riggs, assistant minister-in-charge of Christ church chapel, was accepted, on account of ill-health. At the same time resolutions were unanimously adopted, highly expressive of appreciation of his character and successful work.

Bequests to the Episcopal Hospital

The hospital has just received a bequest of half of the residuary estate of the late Anna Dorgan, the Children's Homeopathic Hospital receiving the other half. It is estimated that each institution will get about $600. The Episcopal Hospital has also received, by the will of the late Mrs. Augusta C. Davis, a legacy of $5,000 or more, for the endowment of a bed to be named for her husband, Mr. Thomas S. Davis.

Bequests of Edward L. Bender

A conditional bequest of $5,000 has been provided by the will of the late Edward L. Bender, of Philadelphia, to endow a Sarah A. Bender memorial bed in Harrison Women's Ward at the Episcopal Hospital; and a further sum of $5,000 for the Seaside Home for Women at Atlantic City, N. J., the income to be applied toward paying expenses of worthy patients, with special preference to members of the Bishop Stevens' Bible class for women at the Episcopal Hospital mission.

Daughters of the King

The spring meeting of the Pennsylvania council took place May 23d, at St. Matthew's church, Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. Anstice, rector. At the business session in the afternoon, papers were presented by Miss Falkner, of Christ church, Germantown; Miss Young, of St. Andrew's church, and Mrs. Moncure, of the church of St. John the Evangelist, Philadelphia. At night a public meeting was held, at which Dr. Anstice presided. Addresses were delivered by Bishop Coleman, of Delaware, and the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, D. D.

Church of the Ascension, Parkesburg

The corner-stone has just been laid of the new edifice, Dean Geo. A. Keller, of Chester convocation, officiating, assisted by the Rev. James F. Bullitt, minister-in-charge. The Rev. Arthur Wilde and the Rev. S. K. Boyer delivered addresses, and a number of the clergy were present. The church is a mission off-shoot of the parish at Coatesville. The building, which in the present portion will cost about $4,000, and give a seating capacity of 300, has been designed by Messrs. Wattress & Son. The immediate intention is to construct only the nave, choir, and vestry rooms, leaving for future effort the erection of the chancel and tower—the latter to be a memorial. The material is stone quarried in the neighborhood, and temporary windows will be made to serve until hoped-for memorial glass can be secured. The style is Gothic.

Kentucky

Thomas U. Dudley, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Bishop

The semi-centennial anniversary service of the organization of St. John's parish, Louisville, will be held at St. John's church, on Sunday, May 28th, at 3 p. m. This is the church destroyed by the cyclone of '92, when its rector, the Rev. Stephen Barnwell, was killed.

Consecration of St. Andrew's Louisville

This beautiful new church has cost $63,000. Its corner-stone was laid May 9, 1889. The chapel was built in '67, the rectory some years later, and the church under Bishop Penick's rectorate. He, Bishop Burton of Lexington, also a former rector, and about 20 of the clergy of the diocese, with the Rev. Dr. Adams of Southern Indiana, met for the consecration on May 16th. Bishop Dudley was celebrant of the Holy Communion, Bishop Penick and Bishop Burton assisting. The sermon was by Bishop Penick. Touching memorial was made to the life and work of Mr. R. A. Robinson, one of the founders and chief workers in the parish, whose tablet adorns the south side of the church. The parish is now fully equipped with a handsome church, rectory, Sunday school rooms, and guild rooms. The Rev. John K. Mason, D. D., is the rector. Mr. James E. Hardy, senior warden, read the request for consecration, and Wm. A. Robinson, junior warden, read the Sentence of Consecration.

The 71st Annual Council

Met on the 17th inst. in St. Andrew's church, Louisville. The Bishop was celebrant, and the Rev. L. W. Rose preached the sermon.

The Rev. George Grant Smith was re-elected secretary. The Bishop's report showed a good condition of things in the diocese generally. He asked for a second archdeacon to work outside of the city of Louisville, as Mr. Benton could profitably confine his labors to these cities. The council acceded to his wishes by subscribing $500 for this special object and by making the assessment for missions equal to that of the episcopate and contingent fund. He reported the consecration of one church, 21 celebrations of the Holy Communion, 2 marriages, 3 burials, and 262 Confirmations; also four postulants for Holy Orders in the diocese.

The meetings at night were: Tuesday, May 16th, on work for Brotherhood of St. Andrew, addressed by the Rev. John N. Lewis, dean of Christ church cathedral, Lexington, and Mr. W. S. Marshall, of St. Andrew's chapter; May 17th, in the interest of diocesan missions, speakers, the Rev. Robt. S. Carter, and Wm. A. Robinson, treasurer of the board of diocesan missions; May 18th, subject, foreign missions, addressed by the Rev. W. Dudley Powers, general secretary of the Church Missionary Society, and the Bishop of Lexington; and May 19th, Sunday school work, by the Rev. J. J. Cornish, and Mr. John L. Andrew, of Versailles. Devotional services at 7:30 A. M., took the place of the customary early Celebrations. They were addressed by the Rev. Messrs. Archer Boogher, R. L. McCready, and Benj. E. Reed.

The Bishop's Letter, the official organ of Bishop Dudley, has not been published for a year. The council resolved this year to republish it, and made pledges of $350 towards its support; $350 were reported as added to the endowment fund for the episcopate in the last year. Resolutions of respect and affection were sent to the Rev. Wm. McGee, now laboring at Havana, in the island of Cuba.

Elections by the council: Treasurer, George T. Allison. Standing Committee: The Rev. Drs. Perkins, Minnigerode, and Craik; Messrs. Wm. A. Robinson, Chas. H. Pettet, and Alvah L. Terry.

Board of Diocesan Missions: The Rev. Drs. Mason, Estell, and Minnigerode; Messrs. Charles F. Johnson, Chas. H. Pettet, and Wm. C. Robinson. The Rev. B. E. Reed was nominated as dean of Paducah, and the Rev. M. M. Benton as dean of Louisville. The Rev. Renj. E. Reed and Mr. Hunter Wood, of Hopkinsville, were elected delegates to the Missionary Council.

The 71st meeting was certainly an enthusiastic one.

The Woman's Auxiliary

Held its meeting on Friday at 4 P. M. The Bishop presided and offered prayer. Reports from the secretary and treasurer showed that much good had been accomplished by the four branches in Louisville, and those of Henderson, Paducah, and Hopkinsville; 48 members, representative of six branches, were present, and the rectors of churches spoke for others. Boxes and money were reported to the amount of $2,488.11. Officers elected for next year are Mrs. T. U. Dudley, president; vice-president, Mrs. Wm. A. Robinson; recording secretary, Miss Sallie Booth; corresponding secretary, Miss Susette Stewart; treasurer, Miss Anderson; executive committee, Mesdames Hamilton, Morton, Richard, Frabne, and Miss Lizzie Robinson.

Southern Florida

Wm. Crane Gray, D.D., Bishop

On Ascension Day Bishop Gray celebrated the Holy Communion in St. Luke's church, Orlando. It was the 39th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood.

The Rev. S. A. Warren has been put in charge of the work among the colored people in Miami.

New Church at St. Petersburg

The Messrs. Tomlinson, father and son, of Connecticut, have given the money to build a very nice rectory, and it is now almost ready for occupancy. Mr. Tomlinson, Jr., has also given the money to build a brick church, as a memorial of his mother. It will be the first brick church in the missionary district of Southern Florida. The cost of these buildings will be about $8,000. St. Petersburg is one of the most desirable places of residence in Southern Florida.

The Church in Orlando

On Easter Day the Bishop addressed the Knights Templar in St. Luke's church, Orlando.

At night he preached, and confirmed 7. The Rogation services were well attended, both at St. Luke's and St. John Baptist's. On the night of May 8th a concert was given in the opera house, for the benefit of the Church Home and Hospital; $60 was cleared. All expenses were borne by one generous layman who is ever forward in doing good deeds for Christ and His Church.

Rectory for St. Barnabas, Deland

May 3d the Bishop visited this parish, and made arrangements to buy a rectory. The ladies had for some time been raising money to build one, but it was learned that a very suitable residence could be bought at reasonable rates, so the purchase was made, and the rector, the Rev. Mr. Little, will move in immediately.

Connecticut

Chauncey B. Brewster, D.D., Bishop

On May 5th, the Bishop consecrated St. Philip's church, Putnam.

The Rev. Dr. Samuel Hart, professor of Latin in Trinity College, and secretary of the House of Bishops, has been elected sub-dean of the Berkeley Divinity School, and has accepted the position.

A noteworthy service was that held by the Bishop in Westport, where the two parishes united in welcoming at a united service their Diocesan; the rectors each presenting eight candidates to receive the laying on of hands.

On May 10th, at a meeting of the Junior Auxiliary Publishing Company at Christ church, Hartford, the following officers were elected, Bishop Clark being president ex-officio: vice-president, the Rev. Samuel Hart; treasurer, Dr. W. C. Sturgis, of New Haven; secretary and assistant treasurer, Miss Mary E. Beach, of Hartford; recording secretary, R. A. Saunders, of Middletown.

St. John's, Bridgeport

One of the finest ecclesiastical edifices in the city was damaged by fire to the extent of about $10,000, on May 19th. The chancel, pulpit, altar, and choir stalls, were destroyed.

Confirmations by Bishop Brewster

St. Mark's church, New Britain, 9; Christ church, Middletown, 8; Holy Trinity, Middletown, 35; Grace chapel, Hadlyme, 7; St. Paul's, Wallingford, 16; St. James', New London, 20; Christ church, Guilford, 6; St. John's, Stamford, 57; St. Andrew's, Stamford, 9; St. Thomas', Bethel, 8; St. Paul's, Norwalk, 11; St. Paul's, Willimantic, 9; St. Paul's, Brookfield, 20; All Saints', New Milford, 11; St. Mark's, Bridge-water, 9; St. John's, New Milford, 20. The large number confirmed at Brookfield is specially noteworthy, and many of the small rural parishes show goodly gains, though all told, the Confirmation classes have not been as large as last year. This is in part owing to the heavy rains of the winter and early spring, which made the roads impassable in country districts, and often flooded the cellars of churches, drowning out the fires.

The Litchfield Archdeaconry

The spring meeting was held in Trinity parish, Torrington, May 9th and 10th. The clergy assembled in the afternoon of the former day at the rectory for a short business meeting. In the evening, addresses were made in the church by Archdeacon George who congratulated the rector and people of Trinity on their new church; by Archdeacon Wildman, on the missionary character of our daily duties. The Rev. W. D. Humphrey gave a picturesque description of missionary work in a country parish, with special regard to week, night services in school houses. Dr. Seymour made a warm appeal for the interest of the larger and stronger parishes in the smaller ones. On the following morning, at the literary session, the Rev. Dr. Seymour read an essay on "The life and work of Bishop Williams." The Rev. Walter D. Humphrey read a review of John Fiske's work, "The Beginnings of New England." At the Celebration at 10:30, Archdeacon Wildman delivered an ad clerum sermon on the text, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" At the earlier session, the Rev. L. R. Sheffield gave an able and exhaustive dissertation on "The Kensit controversy." Mr. H. H. Hemingway, one of the four laymen present, urged the importance of the Litchfield County Sunday School Association. Fifteen of the 20 clergy of Litchfield county were present, and the meeting was highly helpful to all.

Ohio

Wm. Andrew Leonard, D.D., Bishop

The 82d Annual Convention

Convened in Trinity cathedral, Cleveland, May 16th. The Holy Communion was celebrated, Bishop Leonard, celebrant. The offering was for the Society for the Relief of Widows and Orphans. At the close of the service the convention was called to order. The Bishop's annual address was brief, but full of vigorous thought. He made a strong protest against the laxity of the laws concerning divorce, and the marriage of divorced persons, and urged the adoption of uniform divorce laws in the United States. He would like to see the law of the Church made so strict, that a divorced person cannot be remarried at all by a clergyman of the Church. Bishop Leonard spoke of his work abroad the past year, when he made visitations in all the principal cities of France, Italy, Germany, and Switzerland. At the close of the address the convention passed the following:

Resolved: That this convention has heard with gratitude the much-needed words of our Diocesan on marriage and divorce, and we most respectfully commend them to the attention of the Senators and Representatives of Ohio.

The Rev. A. B. Putnam, chairman of the committee on canons, made his report, and after considerable discussion it was decided to change the annual election of wardens and vestrymen to the first Monday in May, instead of Easter Monday, as heretofore.

The evening session was opened with a devotional service conducted by Archdeacon Abbott, President Peirce, of Kenyon College, and the Rev. Alsop Leffingwell. The Rev. A. A. Abbott, secretary of the missionary committee, and Mr. W. G. Mather, treasurer, made reports. The total receipts for the past year amounted to $9,628.89, the expenditures to $8,959.67, leaving a balance of $673.22. Reports of the Joint Educational Committee show this year's receipts to have been $3,460.05; expenditures, $2,877.80; balance on hand, $582.25.

The second day of the convention began with the celebration of the Holy Communion, at 7:30 A. M. President Peirce, of Kenyon College, represented every department as doing good work, and more students in attendance than at any time since 1867.

The results of the elections were as follows:

Standing Committee: The Rev. Messrs. E. W. Worthington, F. B. Avery, and Charles D. Williams; Messrs. T. M. Sloane, W. G. Mather, and R. H. Wright.

Delegates to Missionary Council: Rev. George H. McGrew, D. D., Mr. Walter A. Hodge.
